Weston, Aug. 11.—I have just closed a 13 days' meeting at Sugar Creek Church in Buchanan county, with 41 additions; 37 by obedience and the rest from other churches or restored. We have also had nine additions at our regular services here in the last three months. We have also completed our elegant new parsonage, which is pronounced by those who have seen it as a model and a beauty. The house and lots cost about $1,700. Weston is one of our good churches.—R. H. FIFE.

The meeting in Vinton closed Aug. 3rd, after continuing almost seven weeks. The preaching was done by D. D. Boyle, of Topeka, Kansas, assisted by Bro. Garner, of Des Moines, singing evangelist. The Northeast district made no mistake when D.D. Boyle was employed as evangelist, for he attracts the people (the meeting was well attended throughout), not by thrilling, exciting deathbed stories, but by preaching the simple old story of the cross of Christ. The results of the meeting are a congregation organized with about 130 members, a Sunday-school with an enrollment of about 90, a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor with 25 charter members and last but not least, a strong Ladies' Aid Society. The congregation now owns three lots and more than $1,000 was pledged for a buiding the evening the meeting closed. For the present the services will be held in the courthouse. The writer received a call to take up the work, and by the help of God and the prayers and dollars of the people we expect to meet in our own church building before the winter months come.—JAS. T. NICHOLS.

[No state is mentioned in this report.—ED.]

IOWA.

Fort Dodge, Aug. 10.—Twenty-four additions to the church here since I took up the work last spring. Wickizer will be here tomorrow night to help in a meeting. We expect to build this fall.—W. J. DODGE.

Our meeting closed las night, Aug. 6—almost seven weeks; 64 added; 48 baptisms. New location for our house in sight. Salary increased. Indefinite call extended and accepted. Wickizer and Olinger open the battle in Fort Dodge, Ia., this week. They are true yokefellows add untiring workers.

[There is not a word in the above report to indicate where the meeting was held nor by whom it was written.—EDITOR.]

ILLINOIS.

Paris.—Pleasant Hill Church meeting one week old with 13 additions. I can hold two meetings this fall outside of those already listed.—H. M. BROOKS.

Antioch, Aug. 7.—Yesterday was Decision Day in our Sunday-school, and it was a day of joy. Six of the pupils confessed Christ and in the afternoon three of them were baptized into him.—W. S. GOODE, pastor.

Sullivan, Aug. 7.—I was disabled yesterday and could not leave my room, and wife preached here and at Smyser for me; one confession at the latter place—a fine young man.—E. W. BRICKERT, pastor.

Galesburg, Aug. 7.—Three additions to the church here July 30; two at prayer-meeting Aug. 2, and two at regular service yesterday—seven since last report; 61 since April 1.—C. H. WHITE.

Carlinville, Aug. 10.—Just closed a meeting of two weeks at Hopewell Church, where Will A. Green, county evangelist of Macoupin county, preached, with one baptism. The people received the Word of God with increasing interest. Next Lord's day Bro. J. W. Knight, of Carlinville, will commence a meeting at Atwater. I will have charge of the music in that meeting.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON.

Longview, Aug. 11.—Two added to the Prairie Chapel congregation since last report. On Aug. 2, when I went to immerse one who had made the confession on the Lord's day before, another made the confession, and on the 5th a brother came for me to go and immerse his wife, who was a Methodist.—B. N. ANDERSON.

God Knows.

LAURENE HIGHFIELD.

God knows! His wisdom, infinite,
Is far beyond our ken.
God knows! Our lives are in his hands;
He knows the how and when.
God knows! It brings sweet comfort
Unto the trusting heart;
This precious thought of watchcare
Will hope and strength impart.
A watchcare, changeless, steadfast
As God, who reigns above,
And like a father, pitieth
The children of his love.
Beneath his eye, all-seeing,
To be, yet not afraid;
Our refuge in the shadow
Of his wing secure is made.
God knows our imperfections,
Our cares, and doubts, and fears,
The heartaches and the sorrows
Of all the weary years.
He knows the earnest strivings,
The good we would have done,
The ideals high and noble,
Sought—though, alas!—unwon.
God knows our sore temptations,
He knows the victories gained,
The depths so narrowly escaped,
The heights so hard attained.
Our lives are in his keeping;
But we like children stray
Beside life's ocean, and would count
The sands along the way.
Like grains of sand his mercies,
Countless, each day are given;
Wearied we fall asleep, but wake
To blessings fresh from Heaven.
And when beside death's waters
We fall asleep at length,
Still trusting in God's promises,
Still leaning on his strength,
Sometime, in his blessed likeness,
If right paths we have trod,
Our lives still hid with Jesus,
We'll wake to be with God.

What Luther and Brandy Did.

KATE W. SEARCY.

It was the day before Christmas. On a bare, storm-swept prairie in Nebraska stood a little weather-beaten house. It was the only object to be seen for miles and miles on that vast prairie. Such a house there is called a "shack." Perhaps that name came into use becanse those prairie dwellings are usually very "shackly."

A little boy stood at the "shack" window watching the tangled snowflakes falling. His face was sad and thoughtful. The face of such a little fellow ought never to be so serious, especially at Christmas time. Hardships sometimes make grave heads grow upon baby shoulders. This little son of a pioneer had seen nine years of life's hard realities, and now a weightier blow than all had come. It was bad; and so near Christmas, too!

The one inside door opened softly. "Is papa any better, mamma?" he asked, without turning around. Baby though he was, he dreaded to see the despair on her face.

"No better, Luther," she replied, coming to look over his shoulder out at the blustering weather.

Luther's eyes fastened on a large flake and watched it work its way down to the ground. His mother had gone back to the inner room.

His little lips wese drawn and his brow was wrinkled. He pondered, "Why do such things happen? Why should papa cut the art'ry in his leg an' take the fever right now in the storm an' Mr. Webber gone with our team? An' us away out here an' no neighbors? Why does God let 'em all happen together, I wonder?"

A sudden change came to his train of thought. It made him catch his breath, and then his heart began to pump so fast that the rushing blood fairly burned his cheeks.

It was a daring, desperate thing for a child, but I must tell you truly what he did. It will make you almost cry, from pity, for the trouble that drove him to it.

He tore a blank leaf from his First Reader and wrote on it with a little stump of a pencil his papa had given him:

"Mamma Ime goen for the docter—I an Brandy. Papa may di if I doent. I no the wa. Ime writen this sose you woent be scared if I doent cum back quick an if I doent at all papa will be expectin it an not get scared to deth an blame you.

Yore dear Luther."

It was not a very well written letter for a boy of his age to write. Most of you children who are reading this can write a better. But you have had a better chance to learn than poor little Luther Linton ever had.

Poor as it was, it chilled the very life within his mother when she chanced to find it, stuck against the windowpane with a crooked pin. At first too weak for action, she sank into a chair with an agonized gasp. Then wildly she ran to the stable where Brandy stayed. Too late. There were no traces of the boy or the beast. Faint with this added terror the poor mother dragged back to her suffering, half conscious husband.

Brandy was a two-year-old calf. Luther had spent much time training him to play in harness, and lately had coaxed him to trot tractably with himself as a rider.

When Brandy felt the icy rope bridle and was led outside his shelter, he shook his head in decided disapproval. After the start, he galloped madly through the thickening snow. The cold drops stung him in the eyes and the rising wind made him keen to go. Soon he sobered down to a steady trot and seemed to appreciate the warm clinging pressure of his small owner's fat legs against his own round sides.

All the while, how Mrs. Linton's heart was aching! She could not tell how long her boy had been gone when she found his pitiful little message on the window. How she strained her eyes along the trail, now entirely wiped out by fallen snow! How she prayed as she watched and waited. Four o'clock pased by, five, six and seven came and went. At five it was fully dark and she placed a lantern in the window that looked toward the distant town.

In his pain and delirium the sick man took no notice of his boy's absence. This was a relief to Mrs. Linton. But oh her her suspense was distressing! Even if Luther had but just started when she found his letter, and no mischance had befallen him, help could have reached the "shack" by eight o'clock. Yet the echoes of eight had long since ceased to sound within its walls. She could only wait, weeping and praying. Weeping, praying and waiting—waiting. How much of life is made up of these three? Watching, praying, waiting—nine o'clock—ten—there came a thump at the door!

Dr. White and a great bank of snow tumbled in together.

"Here at last!" The voice was so thick with cold you would never have known the doctor by it.

The sick man saw the snow-covered figure through the open inner door. He exclaimed in delirious glee, "Heigh-ho! Old Santa's come! I've been dreaming I was ill and old, and there was no Chrismas! And here you are, right down the chimney! Bring me the skates!"

"O yes! They're here in my pack!" said the doctor cheerily through the rattling icicles on his mustache. Strange, how those men who give such bitter doses and see the saddest scenes in life can be merry and impart cheer to downcast hearts. But they do, and God and men love them for it.

"Where's Luther?" whispered Mrs. Linton, with eager anxiety.

"I left my wife toasting him by the kitchen fire," said the doctor, leaving her abruptly to attend to his patient.

When proper bandages had been adjusted and medicines administered, he rereturned to the subject. He knew he must say more, sooner or later, for the worry had never gone from the mother's eyes.

"He was only a little frosted, ma'am—more than a little may be; but he'll come out of it all right."

If being a "little frosted," meant having ears, toes, hands and nose badly frozen, why, the doctor told the truth, and if "coming out of it all right," meant weeks of suffering for the brave little fellow, with life barely triumphant at last, why, he spoke the truth again. But don't you think he was like most good old doctors, and brightened his story to allay the mother's fears?

By the time Luther was able to be brought home his father was able to sit up and hold him in his arms.

"You are the brave boy who saved your father's life," he said.

"Only part of it, papa. Brandy did the most!" said the unselfish lad. The really brave are always unselfish, you know.

And Brandy? All the rest had forgotten him until the faithful child's reminder. You want to know what became of him? Well, he is still alive and about ten years old now.

"He shall live till he dies—just naturally dies!" declares Luther, now a youth of nineteen. "I could not bear to see him butchered like common cattle."

And when he dies, I have no doubt, Luther will shed tears over his grave and with his own hand write a suitable epitaph. Wouldn't you if you were in Luther's place?

Act Now.

JOHN G. MILLER.

Is there some noble deed that you may do?
Some point to gain on high?
Act now, and thus unto thyself be true;
To-morrow you may die.

Is there some cheering word that you may speak
While day is passing by?
Go, let that precious word the silence break;
To-morrow you may die.

Is there some grievous wrong that you may right,
Or hush some deep-drawn sigh?
Remember, while so softly comes the night,
To-morrow you may die.

Go, pour sweet balm into some wounded heart;
Go, wipe some tearful eye;
Let not the act with day depart;
To-morrow you may die.

Yes, go and make your peace with God and man
Ere on your couch you lie;
Secure a crown of life, 'tis wisdom's plan;
To-morrow you may die.

What Makes a Christian Home?

As a matter of theory a Christian home commands universal admiration. The conception is delightful and captivating. But, sadly enough, how seldom is the conception realized. How seldom is any very serious and persistent attempt made to realize it, even when all the members, or most of them, are professing Christians, living orderly lives. That fact does not make a Christian home, save in a very formal and superficial way. Even religious devotions may be daily maintained in the family—though this token of household religion seems fast disappearing in the homes of most church members of all denominations. And yet all this, with much more that may be called religious, added to becoming moral proprieties of life, cannot make a Christian home, in the true sense of that term, since all of that may exist, while the real spirit of Christ may be largely absent and very little conformity to the life of Christ may be practiced.

The first essential to a Christian home is the exercise of a true Christian spirit in it, on the part of those who profess to be Christ's disciples. A spirit of love, and affectionate consideration for each, and all. A spirit of patience and forbearance, of kindly regard for each one's rights and comfort, especially on the part of parents, toward children, and equally for servants, if there be servants, and others in the family. If there be harsh severity in spirit and manner, scolding, bickering and strife, blaming and reproving, irritations and recriminations, Christ cannot be truly represented there, and his Spirit cannot abide there. That home in any true sense cannot be called Christian, as distinguished from homes not Christian. Indeed, it must be confessed that in many a home with no professing Christian in it, there is more of harmony, mutual affection and kindly caring for each other's comforts, than in many nominally Christian homes. Of course all the members of the family, father, mother, children and servants, each in his or her place, have trials, much to test the temper, and try the soul. Absolute mastery of self, and real social perfection, is not to be expected. But in the home above all others, is the place to test and prove the kind and value of one's religion. No wonder so many children grow up unconverted and carnal, in so-called Christian homes.

Not only does the absence of a genuine Christian spirit vitiate the claim of many a home, where the parents are church members, to be called Christian, but the pervading drift of conversation, the subjects discussed, the tone and tenor of social intercourse, the books and periodicals read and talked about—all these have a powerful and a constantly operating influence to mold and fashion the character of the household, as either secular and carnal on the one hand, or religious and spiritual on the other. Now, this is said with the full understanding, that much of home conversation will naturally arise out of, and concern the incidents of daily life. The father and the mother, and each of the children, will have something each day to to talk about, in connection with his or her own observation and experience. But if all, or most of the talk, and also the reading be about earthly things, gains, pleasures, fashions, amusements, and never about things divine and eternal, how can that be a Christian home? How will the thoughts of the unconverted be led to Christ? How will young Christians grow up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord? Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. Let your conversation be as becometh godliness, seasoned with grace.

And yet another factor strongly marks a truly Christian home; what is manifestly the main purpose of life. Particularly on the part of the father and mother. For what the parents show to be their chief thing lived for, naturally will to a great extent impress itself on the children, and mold and fashion them. A great many people do not appear to have any special object to live for, or any main purpose in living. They just drift, take life as it comes, and get out of it what they can, making a chance hap-hazard destiny of it. But it often happens that the father and mother have very different views of the chief intent and purpose of living, and so the children are divided by cross currents, fashioned by the one, or the other, as may chance to be. But if the home is dominated to a good degree by Christ's injunction, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," the whole family will more or less be borne on that current; if on the other hand the main drift shall be what they shall eat and drink, and wherewithal they shall be clothed, pleasure, wealth, fashion, the things of sense and sight, things of the earth earthy, no matter what their profession, no matter how many may be church members, such a home cannot in any true sense be a Christian home. Christ is not the model after which it is fashioned. Christ is not the indwelling, inspiring, guiding spirit. It is not Christ they are living for. It is not Christ they are governed by. He is not the Lord of their conscience, nor the man of their counsel, nor the light of their life. The salvation of their household may be desired, but is not consistently sought, and will never be attained by their means. And as for the salvation of the world, that is a question which hardly enters their calculation.—E. T. Hiscox, in the Herald and Presbyter.

Our Blessedness.

MRS. A. B. WADE.

I'd been thinking of Mary and Martha,
In their Bethany home, far away;
And I said, with a sigh, half of envy,
"How wondrously blessed were they!"
For in fancy I saw the picture
Of their humble but happy home;
And I heard the sweet voice of Mary
Saying: "Martha, the Master has come!"
And I thought of the holy rapture
Their welcome for him would contain,
And how sweet it would be to the Master,
Weighed down with earth's sorrow and pain,
And while the housewife, Martha,
Hastened to bring him meat,
Mary would come with water
And bathe the weary feet;
And as long as he might linger
Neath the shelter of their roof,
In constant, cheerful service
Their love would find its proof.
And I said: "O Lord, were the privilege mine
Thus to minister unto thee,
No weariness my feet should know,
Such joy would the service be.
But now thou art reigning a King,
At the Father's right hand, on high,
And needest not the ministries
Of one so unworthy as I.
And, while I rejoice that for thee is passed
This earth with its dark Calvary,
I often feel sad that I've no way to prove
My heart's gratitude unto thee."

Then came to my mind thos beautiful words,
Enfolded in sweet mystery:
"As you minister unto the least of mine,
You will minister unto me."
And then I exclaimed: "Ah, blessed indeed
Were those sisters of fair Bethany."
But now I see, in the light of these words,
How much more blessed are we.
For, while the dear Lord in his busy earth-life
But seldom could pass their way,
Unto us he has given the privilege
Of serving him every day.

For Loss of Appetite
Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. W. H. HOLCOMBE, New Orleans, La., says: "It is particularly serviceable in treatment of women and children, for debility and loss of appetite."

A Woman's Question.

Do you know that you have asked for the costliest thing
Ever made by the Hand above—
A woman's heart, and a woman's life,
And a woman's wonderful love?

Do you know that you have asked for this priceless thing
As a child might ask for a toy?
Demanding, what others have died to win,
With the reckless dash of a boy.

You have written my lesson of duty out,
Man like you have questioned me;
Now stand at the bar of my woman's soul
Until I shall question thee.

You require your mutton shall always be hot,
Your socks and your shirt shall be whole;
I require your heart to be true as God's stars,
And pure as heaven your soul.

You require a cook for your mutton and beef;
I require a far better thing;
A steamstress you're wanting for stockings and shirts;
I look for a man and a king.

A king for a beautiful realm called home,
And a man that the Maker, God,
Shall look upon as He did the first
And say, "It is very good."

I require all things that are grand and true,
All things that a man should be;
If you give this all, I would stake my life
To all that you demand of me.

If you can not do this—a laundress and cook
You can hire, with little to pay;
But a woman's heart and a woman's life
Are not to be won in that way.

—Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

Prof. Atwater's Experiemnts and the Teaching in Regard to the Alcohol Question in the Schools.

H. F. HEWES, M. D.

The recent experiments of Prof. Atwater are of great interest to physiologists and chemists since they throw much light upon one of the doubtful questions of physiological chemistry or pharmacology, that of the metabolism of alcohol in the body.

It is a mistake, however, to think as some people do, that the result of these experiments should change the teaching in the schools in regard to the use of alcohol from a hygienic point of view. The schools teach that the use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage is not justifiable under the laws of hygiene. The results of Prof. Atwater's experiments do not contradict this teaching.

These experiments merely show that the body can derive some energy from alcohol. This does not in itself entitle alcohol to be placed among the food substances in the hygienic sense of the term, which is the sense in which the schools and people in general use the term food. If it did, such a violent poison as muscarine, the active principle of the poisonous plants of the mushroom family, would have to be classed with the foods, since it also is oxidized in the body with liberation of its contained energy.

To class a substance among the foods we must know that the sum-total effects of its use are beneffcial to the body. Muscarine is not a food because its poisonous effects offset the benefit of the energy which it liberates. Alcohol has poisonous effects, as Prof. Atwater himself admits. The question as to whether it can be considered as food depends entirely upon whether its beneficial effects are greater than its poisonous effects. Prof. Atwater's experiments do not prove this. Until this is proven the burden of the proof is against those who would include alcohol in the list of food substances. For scientific experiment so far, experiments upon large bodies of men in the ordinary conditions and vicissitudes of life, in the armies and in exploring expeditions, where labor and exposure have to be endured, indicate that when the regular "moderation" quantity of alcohol is taken, the harmful effects offset the beneficial ones and that the drinker is made less fit rather than more fit to work.

And stronger still is the reason against speaking as Prof. Atwater does, of alcohol as food in the same sense as sugar. For people generally, will interpret this to mean that it is a food equally to be recommended with sugar and ordinary hygienic foods. And this as Prof. Atwater will agree is an entirely false idea and one calculated to do much harm. For while we get our energy from sugar without risk of poisoning, to get energy from alcohol we run great risk of poisoning, and to get any amount such as would be necessary to support life in ordinary conditions, we must take enough alcohol to poison ourselves seriously. (By poisoning is meant some harmful effect upon the fuuctions of the body.)

The above dangers in the use of alcohol, also the possibility of the formation of the alcohol habit, make its use as a beverage unjustifiable even if there were no other arguments against it.

It is unfortunate that the alcoholic question has been brought upon this technical ground. The question of the hygienic status of the use of alcohol does not depend upou the technical question of the definitions of a food and of a poison. The controversy upon this point has produced statements upon both sides which have given rise in the public mind to great misconception of the truth.

Both sides in this technical controversy will agree in regard to the main question, that children should be taught to look upon alcoholic liquors as dangerous substances, to be avoided from considerations of health and general welfare.

And in the present light of our experience and of scientific investigation, the schoolbooks must continue to exclude alcohol from the list of substances desirable as foods, and to teach the avoidance of this substance as a good hygienic rule.

Boston, Mass., July 5, 1899.

Renovate The Tenements.

Among the urgent reforms that clamor for attention the scheme of reforming our whole tenement house system stands in the forefront. These places where human beings are crowded together like brutes, where filth, desperate poverty, pestilence and vice walk hand in hand, where little children are doomed and damned from birth, are the breeding places of crime and the danger spots of our cities. A scheme of municipal inspection ought to be put in vogue at once whereby habitations unfit to be used should be condemned and torn down, the worst plague spots renovated, a healthful limit in the number of occupants to each house of a certain size established, the sweat shops and other dens abolished, and houses fit for human beings to live in shall be built.—Central Christian Advocate.

Cheerfulness.

Give us, O give us the man who sings at his work! Be his occupation what it may, he is equal to any of those who follow the same pursuit in silent sullenness. He will do more in the same time—he will do better—he will persevere longer. One is scarcely sensible to fatigue while he marches to music. The very stars are said to make harmony as they revolve in their spheres. Wondrous is the strength of cheerfulness, altogether past calculation its power of endurance. Efforts, to be permanently useful, must be uniformly joyful—a spirit all sunshine—graceful from very gladness—beautiful because bright.—Carlyle.

Value of Kindness.

There is nothing easier than to get into the habit of fault-finding, and nothing that is much more unprofitable. As one looks back over the experiences of a lifetime he may have occasion to regret many an impatient and fretful word, but he will have little sadness on account of the kind and patient treatment accorded to those with whom he has had dealing.—Herald and Presbyter.

The Son of Gideon.

CHAPTER III.

Jotham opened his eyes. "Make no sound," Caleb whispered. "Already they seek you. Already a reward is offered for your head. But the grass grows high in the plain. If we can crawl through it undiscovered, we may yet escape to Thebez."

"For your sake I will try," said Jotham. "But is it all a horrible dream? Did Abimelech indeed murder his brother? for they were his as well as mine."

"Only two sons of Gideon live," whispered Caleb, as they dragged themselves along the ground; "you and Abimelech!"

They had not gone very far when Caleb fell flat upon his stomach. Jotham imitated his example. Their heads were close together. "A rider comes," whispered Caleb; "I think he saw us."

The tramp of hoofs, deadened by the long grass, drew near. "What snakes be these wriggling in the grass?" demanded a harsh voice.

The boys held their breath. The mule was guided nearer. "Speak!" said the man, "or I will ride you down."

Caleb rose to his feet, causing the mule to rear backward at his sudden appearance. "Hold! hold!" said the rider to his beast. "If you scare at this gnat, what would you do at a fly?"

"It is true, I am small and of no importance," said Caleb. "Why, then, do you trouble me?"

"Because you are small does not prove you are of no importance," said the rider, gruffly. "When a man hides, he is afraid. If he is afraid, he is in danger. If he is in danger he is important, else why should he be threatened. Who are you?"

"My name is Caleb."

"A good name and a good spy! Are you any kin to that Caleb sent by Moses to spy out this land? And who has sent you to do a like service?"

"I am no spy. My home is far from here. But I came to see my friends. When the whole city is in confusion, when blood is shed in every street, is it a fit place for me to linger? I am not a strong man and I carry no weapon. What can I do but hide and seek to run away?"

"Well spoken! But what dusky form is that stretched behind you? If it can speak let it hasted before I ride over it!"

"Why should you make war upon helpless boys?" cried Caleb. "Return to Abimelech and fight with men as becomes a brave soldier!"

"If it can speak, let it speak," said the man doggedly. "If it can move, let it move quickly!"

"I pray you, trouble us no further. There is no harm in us. He is sick—he is a boy such as I."

"If it can speak, let it speak! Stand aside. Aside, I say, or I will trample you under foot!"

"I shall not move!" cried Caleb. "Come on if you must. My hands are empty. But the God of Israel will fight for his children."

"Stay!" cried the son of Gideon, rising upon his feet. "Why seek longer to preserve ourselves? Caleb, you are right. God will shield us with his love, which is more powerful than man's hate. Sir, I am Jotham, the son of Gideon, the boy upon whose head a price has been set."

"A son of Gideon!" cried the rider. "How comes it that you escaped the sword?"

"I was defended by the same power that shall preserve me to the end!" cried Jotham.

The man sprang from his steed. "Quick, O son of Gideon!" he cried. "Leap upon my mule. Take your friend behind you and ride for your life!"

The boys stared at him in amazement.

"Quick, I say!" whispered the man hoarsely. "Would you stay here to die like dogs? For 'Caleb' means a dog! Away, away!"

"Heaven bless you!" exclaimed Jotham, mounting. "But will you not tell us your name?"

"On condition that you tell no one who helped you. We shall meet again. Yes, again, on the day that Abimelech's power is broken. Who is he to seek to be king? Ride with haste. My name? It is Gaal." As he spoke he struck the mule with the wooden end of his spear. The beast plunged forward, and the two boys vanished like racing shadows from the scene of the massacre.

It was nearing the break of day when they rode in sight of the walled city of Thebez. As they drew near the walls they saw a man suddenly appear among the huge rocks that lay along the way.

"It is Tola!" exclaimed Jotham, drawing rein.

"Father!" cried Caleb, leaping to the ground and embracing Tola. "Yes, I am safe. And here is Jotham also uninjured."

"The others!" exclaimed Tola, uneasily. The boys did not answer. "Come," said Tola, briefly. "Leave the mule to go his his way. We have no use for him." They followed him in silence among the rocks till they came to the ascent of a hill, where the ground was hidden by great bowlders and almost impenetrable clumps of bushes and briers. There was seemingly no path, but the man advanced with the ease of one who well knew the place. At last he said, "Here we are." The boys saw only the dense thickets, the stony ground, and overhead a sky that was beginning to swing with the gray particles of advancing light. But suddenly Tola disappeared. "This way!" came his voice, as if from under the earth. In fact, he had entered the mouth of the cave. They followed, and the air suddenly became cool and earthy in its smell. "Wait," said Tola, after they had entered, and they heard him stopping up the opening. Soon after a light was struck, and Tola stood before them with a lighted torch. They looked about them hastily, and found that they were in a large chamber cut out of the living rock.

Along the sides were placed boxes and bales, buckets and utensils of various kinds, swords, bows and quivers filled with arrows. The farther end of the apartment was curtained off by long draperies. "There sleeps Esther," said Tola, motioning toward the curtained alcove with his torch. "It is her bed-chamber. But we men need only mats spread upon the ground for our beds. We are in the time of war and rebellion, when death lurks in every bush, and boldly shows his cruel face on the housetops."

"But, father," said Caleb, "how could you prepare this place, and fill it with so many things. And make a bedchamber for my sister so soon? For you did not know of Abimelech's intentions till this very evening."

"I will tell you briefly, my boy, for you are worn out with your journey, and poor Jotham has much need of sleep. When you left me I waited for the soldiers to come out of Shechem; then I slipped in the gate, ran to my house and placed upon my camel all of these things. When I was ready to set out again I might have had some trouble had not one of Abimelech's own soldiers aided me. It was the same who had betrayed to me Abimelech's plans. But I have promised not to name his name."

"We can guess it," cried Caleb, quickly, "if it begins with a 'G' and has two 'as' strung along together."

Tola looked at Caleb in surprise. "You must have met this man!" he exclaimed.

"If we have we promised not to tell," said his son. "But where is our camel?"

"I was obliged to turn him loose. There are many caves in these parts, but none large enough to accommodate a camel. And now, my boys, yonder are our mats—fit beds for soldiers, such are as we!"

He extinguished the torch, and they were soon fast asleep; for it is one of the blessings of nature that sleep visits the mourner as well as the weary.

Several days passed in the cave without any event to break the routine into which they had fallen. Jotham had recovered from the first shock of the terrible night, but he felt a fierce desire to confrot Abimelech and accost him as a traitor and a murderer. These days were delightful to Caleb, who saw in the cave life a never-ending series of adventures. When Esther prepared the meals he thought everything had a different taste from that he had known in the city. The very smoke from the fire, as it rose to the roof and rolled toward the opening in billowy masses, filled him with delight as well as coughing. But fires were only made at night.

It was an adventure, also, to look from the opening in daylight, or better yet to crawl out of the cave, twist among the bushes and peep across the plain toward the busy city of Thebez. From the thickets the boys would watch the merchants as they would pass through the city gates. They would see the maidens carrying jars upon their shoulders as they went down to the well for water. High above the city walls rose the great stone Tower of Thebez, from whose tiny windows faces sometimes looked out. Once they saw Abimelech riding out of Thebez, attended by many soldiers. At his side rode Zebul, and in the rear rode Gaal. The boys held their breath, as if they thought the murderer might hear them breathing.

When they returned from these short expeditions Caleb loved the smell of the cave, so earthy and romantic, and drew in his breath with great content. Sometimes a great black beetle would go skurrying across the floor, and then Caleb and Jotham would join in a hunt. For sorrow is not like one long black night, but rather as a cloudy day, which lets slip through many a gleam of sunshine. They got their water from the well down in the valley. This was the perilous event of the day, or rather of the night.

If the moon shone they must go thirsty. Tola usually went himself upon this dangerous duty. One night as Jotham lay upon his mat, staring at the darkness because he could not sleep, he started up as a light shone suddenly in the cave. It was the light from a torch. Esther had come from her curtained room and her dress showed that she had not been in bed. Her cheeks were flushed with fever. Jotham hurried to her.

"I hoped father would be awake," she whispered, "yet he has had a hard day. But I am not well. O Jotham, if I had but a cool drink of water!"

"You shall have it," whispered Jotham, as he took up an empty leathern bottle. "But you are right. Do not wake your father. I will bring you this water."

"No, no, Jotham! If anything should happen to you—"

"Nothing will happen. Blow out the torch. I am going to open the mouth of the cave."

The conquest of Babylon by Cyrus, with the change of front in the whole empire which it occasioned, occurred in the year 538 B. C. The king had been slowly pushing his conquests southward and westward, and it had long been the hope of the prophets of Israel, as they studied the situation in the light of their providential experience, that he would be the cause of their deliverance. The references to Cyrus in the second part of the Book of Isaiah are numerous and he is there spoken of as the servant of Jehovah, who unconsciously is carrying out the divine plan. When Babylon actually fell into his hands, offering scarcely any resistance, the relation of captive nations to the government was at once changed. The story of the fall of Babylon as the result of diverting the waters of the Euphrates seems to be one of those legends preserved by such writers as Herodotus, and lacking entirely historic confirmation. If historical it must refer to the second capture of Babylon some twenty years later by Darius. The conquest of the city was but a small task, and Nabonidus, the king of Babylon, seems to have been among the prisoners taken at the time.

The policy of Cyrus was radically different from that of his predecessors, the Babylonian kings. They had ruled with unscrupulous severity, carrying off idols from subdued territories and dismantling the temples of their subjects whose religion differed from their own. Cyrus, however, understood the policy of conciliation, and being somewhat cosmopolitan in his own religious tastes, though a professed adherent of the Persian faith, he expressly declared in his public edicts that the gods of the nations over which he ruled were his friends. He professed loyalty to the gods of Babylon and conciliated the other elements of his empire by restoring the ruined temples and the captive gods and thus ingratiated himself so far as a monarch could. With the Jews he soon came to good terms, probably as a still further step in the policy of providing himself loyal allies in the struggle which he foresaw as impending between himself and his great rival in the southwest, Egypt. Jerusalem was a fortress in itself. It was the most admirably located stronghold in the western coast lands, and no policy of strategem could overlook the advantage of having in it a friendly and loyal people to act as an opposing barrier against the encroachments of Egypt from the south. Israel had no gods to restore to its ancestral shrine in Judah, but the sacred vessels at least were in the possession of the court at Babylon, and these had all the sanctity of venerated relics in the thought of the Jews.

Accordingly, soon after the city changed hands Cyrus issued his decree permitting such Jews in his empire as chose to return to Judæa to undertake the journey. This was in express fulfillment of the prophecies already uttered by Jeremiah (25:12; 29:10), that after seventy years the Jews should return to their own land. Seventy years was, of course, a round number. As a matter of fact, the formal exile covered a period of scarcely more than a half century, but from the earliest deportation to a period somewhat following the issuing of the edict when the caravans began to move westward it may be taken to have been seventy years.

The books in which this narrative is contained—Ezra and Nehemiah—are a continuation of the records found in the two Books of Chronicles and were probably originally all one. A comparison of the closing verses of 2 Chronicles with the opening words of Ezra will show that the record was broken off in the middle of a verse and a portion of it has been recopied to form the beginning of Ezra. The spirit of the whole document is the same. It emphasizes the priestly side of the religion essential to the well-being of the nation and points out the presence of the liturgical elements in the national life from its beginning. Though the document itself is as late as the age of Alexander, as shown by references to contemporary events, it incorporates materials of personal and national character preserved from the age of the restoration, among which are certain royal decrees, which have, however, been freely worked over in the spirit of later Judaism. An example is given in the decree of Cyrus preserved in this lesson, which is not that of a king of his time, as it would have appeared, but is rather the free Jewish expansion of such a decree, emphasizing the king's strong leaning towards the faith of the Jewish people. The historical inscriptions of Cyrus leave no doubt that his attitude toward the different religions of his time was the same. He was tolerant, friendly and hospitable, but it is scarcely to be presumed that he paid special attention to a comparatively obscure people and their religion, save as he saw in them the means of furthering his own political designs.

The edict, however, gave the people the right to return and the especial point emphasized was the necessity of rebuilding the temple at Jerusalem. This gave definiteness to the project. Moreover, it was taken for granted that very many of the people would not care to leave their homes in Babylon and go back to Judah, but would be willing to assist the prospective emigrants in their preparations for departure. They were exhorted to help these, their countrymen, with money, with provisions, and with beasts for transportation, besides any offering which they might send for a new temple in Jerusalem. The results of this decree was but meagrely set forth in the records which are preserved to us. It was certainly the expectation of the prophets that a very large proportion of the nation would avail itself of the opportunity to go back to the ancestral home in Judæa, and it seems to have been the thought in later days that such was actually the case and that the return was accomplished within a short time. However, the testimony of Haggai and Zechariah, who preached in Jerusalem a few years later, demonstrates quite clearly the fact that those who had up to that time come back from Babylon were very few in number and not very important in character, and that the condition of affairs in Judah was most discouraging. It is certain, however, that a considerable number did actually start soon after the decree was issued, and this company, under the leadership of Sheshbazzar, who is called the prince of Judah and who was probably the descendant of Jehoiachin, was the first of several companies of pilgrims who made their way from time to time back to the sacred land. The leaders of the colonies in Babylon bestirred themselves to some extent to provide help for those that were departing, and we thus get a glimpse of that simple organization of the exiles in the far country. Money and provisions, as well as beasts of burden, were placed at the disposal of the emigrants and the king himself gave into the charge of the leader the sacred vessels, which were the center of reverence for the whole community. These are catalogued by the writer with the enthusiasm of one who feels that they were the most important item in the list of persons or objects that went back to Jerusalem. Thus equipped the caravan started on the long journey of more than a thousand miles up the Euphrates and down the Syrian highway to Jerusalem. The promise of a century were coming true. The purpose of God were coming to realization. With those returning exiles went the hope of a Messiah and the promise of the Church of Christ.

ADAMS.

Mrs. Mary Adams, widow of the late S. T. Adams, and daughter of Richard Harrison, was born in Miami County, Ohio, October 5th, A. D. 1814, and died in Springfield, St. Croix County, Wisconsin, July 17th, 1899, aged 84 9 months and 12 days. Of her 11 children seven are now living; four sons and three daughters. Two months ago it was found she had living of children, grandchildren and greatgradchildren a total of 84. Early in life Mrs. Adams became an active member of the Christian Church, and has ever since maifested in her general deportment a truly Christian spirit. Her sympathy was strong and she enjoyed helping others. Her life as a Christian was an instance to a remarkable degree of that rare but beautiful grace of patience Her end was cheerful while she waited for the coming of the Son of Man. Mrs. Adams has left behind many friends who mourn her loss, some of whom love to reflect on the upright character of the one gone before. The funeral service was conducted in the G. A. R. Hall, Hersey, on Wednesday, July 19th, by the Rev. F. S. Drake, of Woodville. Many came to show their last respects to the deceased.

The above obituary from the Baldwin Bulletin, in a few words tells the story of a beautiful life. Mrs. Adams, the mother of Mrs. Hopkins, the writer's wife, was a model of patience, of kindness and of many of the Christly virtues. Sickness at home prevented Mrs. Hopkins from being present at her mother's and sister's funeral, but we shall one day greet them and others on the other shore.

W. W. HOPKINS.

BAXTER.

Joseph H. Baxter died at Riverdale, Wyo., June 8, 1899, aged 73 years. He was born in Leeds, England, and came to America with his parents when two years old. He was baptized by his brother William in 1856, and soon afterwards was married to Susan E. Massie, Fayetteville, Ark., where they lived until 1882, when they moved to Wyoming. He was the last member of that family made illustrious by the two brothers, Kirk and William, able and successful preachers of the Christian Church. They are all now reunited to be parted no more forever. The subject of this sketch was a most lovable man of quiet and modest demeanor, keenly alive to everything that concerned the well-being of humanity. During all the years of his connection with the church he was faithful, never faltering in his loyalty, nor remitting his labors and activities. He loved the communion of the saints, and lost no opportunity to meet with them in the house of God. Year by year he was giving constant heed to our Lord's exhortation, "Therefore be ye always ready," and well for him that he was prepared, for very strikingly and impressively were those other words verified with him, "For in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh." He had arranged for a visit to the children of his brother Kirk in Springfield, Mo., and they were gladly waiting the message announcing the date of his arrival; instead came the word of his death. My heart aches when I remember how these children have been bereft by the hand of death. Within a few years their beloved father, mother and uncle have all been called over the river. Oh, how truly orphaned! And yet not so, for the God whom all these departed ones loved and served in Jesus Christ the Son is the Father of those who linger here and weep as they—

"Sigh for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still."

The wife and five children of the deceased will be supported and comforted in their bereavement by the thought of the noble life and character of husband and father, that he is now at peace in the home of our God, and that all the faithful will join the glorified in heaven by-and-by. They have the sympathy and prayers of our Father's children. May he bless and keep them.

BLAKE.

J. H. Blake passed away at Arkansas City, Kan., July 31, 1899, after a brief illness. He was born in Nicholas county, Ky., July 10, 1853, educated at Kentucky University, Lexington, and afterward completed special courses at Chicago University. He held pastoral charges at Colusa City, Modesta, San Bernardino, Cal.; Eldorado, Ia.; Troy and Drexel, Mo. In 1885 he was united in marriage to Lizzie Detwiler who, with a son and daughter, survives him. The writer conducted the funeral services at Linneus, Mo. COGGINS.

John Wesley Coggins was born May 27, 1832, in Yadkin County, N. C. When a small boy his parents, who were of Scotch and Irish descent, moved to Buncombe County, the same state, after which at the age of 16 he agprenticed himself to learn the brick mason's trade. He was married in 1862 to Mary J. Melton, of Buncombe County, after which he he spent most of his time on the farm on Bee Tree Creek, 10 miles east of the city of Asheville. He was hospitable to strangers and accommodating to his neighbors and friends. He led a quiet, unostentatious life, never asking popular favor nor accepting any public office save that of county magistrate. His brother, Caswell, was an eminent doctor in Texas, and Allen is at present county commissioner and judge of Llano County, of that state, and his youngest brother was a Methodist preacher and teacher in North Carolina. His parents, as his name indicates, were members of the M. E. Church. His mother was the aunt of six Methodist preachers. When about 40 years old he joined the Christian Church under the ministry of Rev. W. D. Starr, of Ohio, from which time he was an earnest and efficient member. In about 1875 he proved his devotion to the cause he so much loved by giving a small mountain farm of 25 acres with an exceptionally fine building site, a very fine horse with other stock, and access to a good orchard to a man whom he believed to be a true minister. Again in 1894 with but little aid from any other source he purchased the Davidson Methodist Chapel and four acres of ground three miles from his home to be used as a Christian Church. He was proud that he raised three sons, James Caswell, of Independence, Kan., John Wesley, of Benton City, Mo., and Lucius Bede, of Marysville, Cal., to preach the gospel of Christ. He was patient in suffering. During the last three months his suffering at times was very intense in which he was as tender and affectionate in his disposition as a little child. Among his last words were, "Thy will be done." "Hope," "Mary—wife," "Oh! heaven!" And at ten minutes past six o'clock, at sunrise Monday morning, July 31st, 1899, at the residence of his son James, where he was visiting, he fell asleep as softly and peacefully as an infant in its mother's arms, leaving behind a wife, five sons and two daughters to mourn his departure to the other shore. The funeral was preached at the Christian church, Aug. 1st at 10 o'clock by Rev. A. L. Hanbey, pastor of the Methodist Church of this city. The body will propably be removed to his home next spring.

GRIFFITH.

Mrs. Kate Pinkerton Griffith, the only daughter of Wm. and Mary J. Pinkerton, was born in Stamping Ground, Ky., Aug. 2nd, 1859, and obeyed the gospel under the preaching of John H. Duncan when 13 years of age. She married Willard Griffith, March 31st, 1880, and three children were born to this union, Clure, Ola and Mary, all members of the church. Her brothers are T. W. Pinkerton, of Kenton, O., W. H., of Paducah, Ky., and a half-brother, J. L. Pinkerton, of Arkansas. She died Sunday, July 23rd, '99, at her home in Harriman, Tenn. She was worthy to belong to the noted and honored Pinkerton family, many of whom have been distinguished preachers in the Christian Church. She inherited the best talent and Christian zeal of the family. She was a woman of large mental ability and a zeal for the church that knew no ebbing and flowing, but flowed on like an unceasing river. The undersigned was her pastor for some years, hence speaks with authority. No pastor ever had a better friend nor a more efficient helper. She was the daughter of a preacher, as also the sister of preachers, and was proud of the fact. Why should she not be? She knew a preacher's trials well. The grasp of her hand, the expression of her face, would make any preacher ashamed to be anytning but hopeful, happy and determined to do his best for the Lord. I often told her so. She was timid and shrinking and frail, but never ceased working nor denied one obligation that she owed to creature or Creator. She has gone from us for awhile. We would have detained her. We mingle our tears on her new-made grave. She rests in the presence of Jesus. The family and the church have a rich heritage in her memory. "She hath done what she could."

HARVEY.

Sister Jennie Harvey, nee Miller, died at her home near Savannah, Mo., July 22, 1899, in her 34th year. For several years she was a student at Drake University and for 10 years she taught successfully in the public school of this state. She died in the triumphs of the Christian faith. C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, her schoolmate at Drake, conducted the funeral service, assited by the writer, from the Christian Church Monday, July 24. May God bless and keep the bereaved husband and the little motherless babe.

J. GRESHAM.

ROSS.

Mary E., wife of Thos. J. Ross, died at her home near Hersey, Wis., July 8th, 1899, aged 57 years and 11 days. Mary E. Ross was the daughter of S. T. and Mary Adams and was born in Miama County, Ohio, June 27, 1842. She became a Christian early in life and has ever been noted for her meek and quiet spirit, and pure, sweet life. She was married to Thos. J. Ross Nov. 8, 1861, and besides him she leaves one son to mourn her departure. Soon after the civil war, in which her husband was a soldier, her father and all his children and their families settled in St. Croix County, Wis. The funeral services of Sister Ross were conducted in the G. A. R. Hall, Hersey, Wis., by Rev. F. A. Drake and attended by a large concourse of people. At the time of her death her aged mother, Mary Adams, was at death's door, and the spirit of the two are now together, with others of the family who preceded them to the "better land." The deceased was a sister to the writer's wife.

WHITE.

Joseph White was born in Bridport, Dorsetshire, England, April 6th, 1829. Mary Farcey Rice was born near Bridport, England, Aug. 20th, 1826. They were united in marriage in Bridport, May 20th, 1849. About one year after their marriage they came to America and settled in Edwards County. He was a very useful man in county work, having served as justice of the peace for several years, as deputy sheriff and as county judge. He became a member of the Christian Church about 1869. She made a profession of religion when about 17 years of age. She was one of the charter members of the Albion C. W. B. M. He departed this life June 19th, 1899. She was severely stricken with grief at this time. Later, malarial fever and dysentery set in and on the morning of July 24th she departed this life. His funeral services were conducted by Caleb Edwards and James C. T. Hall, June 21st. Hers, by J. S. Rose, July 26th. Their bodies were laid to rest in Graceland Cemetry.

TOPIC FOR AUGUST 27.

GREEN PASTURES: THE CHRISTIAN'S PLEASURES.

(Ps. 23:1-6.)

There is no reason why a Christian may not have all the legitimate pleasures of life. Christianity is not asceticism. In the Christian life, then, all pleasures that are right are taken up into a refined atmosphere and made all the nobler. And just in proportion as the Christian life is intense are the pleasures in it strong and enduring. Whenever one departs from the true path in pursuit of pleasure, the very pleasure loses its sweetness, the flower when grasped is all thistle, the sweet is turned to bitter in the mouth.

Pleasures are only secondary matters. Happiness is not the thing to seek. It is like the will o' the wisp, that eludes all pursuit; like the mirage, which fades when one approaches; like the bag of gold at the end of the rainbow, which recedes more rapid as one strenuously pursues. "All the happiness a brave man asks in this world is happiness enough to get his work done," says Carlyle. And this much happiness will come, too, to the Christian who works. Happiness is not to be sought. It comes. Pleasures are not the main aim, they are subsidiary. They are not the song, they are but the accompaniment.

To the Christian, then, there is the pleasure of a purpose. To have an aim and to pursue it steadily; to be absorbed with an ambition, and that ambition Christian, is a pleasure. The eye that is single fills the whole body with light.

There is also "the joy of the working." Idleness is not peace. Indolence is not rest. That is the peaceful soul which is given up to its work. There is no real rest but is born of toil. The highest joy that mind and muscles know is the joy of the working.

There is, too, the pleasure of companionship. The true Christian is never alone. No matter how sequestered, no matter how reserved and diffident, nomatter how unfortunate in making of friends, the Christian is never alone.

"In heavenly love abiding,
No change my heart shall fear,
And safe in such confiding,
For nothing changes here.
The storm may roar without me,
My heart may low be laid,
But God is round about me,
And can I be dismayed?"

Perhaps this is the greatest of all our wants, this need of companionship; and perhaps this is the greatest of joys, true and satisfying fellowship. "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want."

The Christian's pleasures, then, are not those of many others; his kingdom is not of this world. His pleasures are of the subdued sort, of softer hues. The delicate blue of heaven and the pastoral beauty of green pastures and still waters, these are the fit emblems of that quiet happiness, that peace that passeth all understanding of the life that is hid with Christ in God.

MADISON INSTITUTE,

A Home School for Girls

Oldest School for Girls in the Christian Brotherhood in Kentucky. A School to which parents may safely entrust their daughters' education, and social, physical and religious training. ESTABLISHED 1856.

1st.—Every comfort within the home, and attractive opportunity for lawn tennis, basket-ball and other outdoor sports on our well-kept campus. An efficient health matron with hospital training.

2nd.—Jesus Christ is presented as the source of all true and abundant life.

3rd.—Our courses of study lead up to those offered in the colleges and universities of the North and East. Our students are received on certificate at Cornell University and the leading colleges for women. This fact speaks for itself as to the grade of our work.

4th.—Our students meet in the class-room a body of enthusiastic, skilled instructors, graduates of such institutions as Cornell University, Bryn Mawr College, Vassar College, etc. The Faculty is abreast of the times in standards and methods, and qualified to arouse and direct the intellectual ambition of students.

5th.—Well-equipped Chemical and Physical Laboratories, good Library, and abundantly supplied Reading-room.

6th.—Music and Art Department well equipped.

7th.—Madison Institute is designed for and wants studious girls of mental ability and ambition. The school will not be popular with those who are "going away to school" for the name of the thing. Students are happy here; triflers, unless speedily converted, are not in congenial surrounings.

CHRISTIAN UNIVER

CLINTON LOCKHART, A. M., Ph. D., Pres., Cant

Why Attendance Doubled in Four Years

1. Because the Faculty is doubly strong, and now has 22 most competent teachers.

2. Because the Courses of Instruction have been lengthened and strengthened till degrees are held on equal grade with Eastern universities.

3. Because the Ministerial Department has been found second to no other in the Christian brotherhood as regards extensiveness and thoroughness of studies.

4. Because the Classical and Scientific work is the very best, and most scholarly teachers use the latest methods of instruction. The University is strictly out of the ruts.

5. Because the departments of Music, Art and Business are kept under the most able and enterprising direction that can be secured.

6. Because the Normal work has proved superior to that in regular normal colleges. University students get better certificates, become better teachers and command higher salaries.

7. Because special attention is given to the education of Young Ladies, who here have as thorough instruction as their brothers, under as able and trustworthy teachers, with numerous special adaptations to their various needs.

8. Because the University has one of in America, looking down on miles and miles scenery, city, river, islands, orchards, fields, almost boundless landscape. It is healthful, b ing. It awakens the soul, broadens the mind, k est and holiest thoughts, and mingles sublimit duty and aspiration.

9. Because the University has behind it 4 rious achievement, has stored up on high 40 years toils and sacrifices, and has among men 40 classes hundreds of graduates and thousands of others, who look bac to it with ardent affection and look forward to it with confident expectation.

10. Because the University has an earnest, resolute and faithful Management determined to make it succeed only by merit and the most honorable means. They offer learning and care and constant devotion to the educational needs of the age. They are making every possible improvement, and keeping the most worthy representation in the field, so that if appreciative patronage and intelligent generosity will respond to persistent and manly appeal—which cannot be doubted—then

CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY will GAIN more than double her attendance and usefulness in the next four years.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

"In faith, Unity; in opinion and methods, Liberty; in all things, Charity."

Vol. xxxvi. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, August 24, 1899. No. 34

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Dreyfus trial is proceeding, and the French nation, quite as much as Captain Dreyfus, is on trial as respects its mode of administering justice. It would be unfair to hold the French people responsible for the brutal assault on M. Labori, counsel for Dreyfus. Unfortunately, however, the event is too characteristic of the methods which have been pursued by the anti-Dreyfus party from the beginning of the conspiracy against him. At this writing it appears that the wounded counselor will recover from his attack, but not in time, perhaps, to participate in the trial. Americans have read with astonishment the so-called testimony of the general staff officers who have been put upon the witness stand. Instead of testifying to facts which they knew, they were allowed to harrangue the court for hours, condemning the accused as if they were prosecutors of the case, instead of witnesses. It must be that the laws of evidence in French jurisprudence are very different from what they are in this country. Inasmuch as the testimony of the witnesses referred to, which has been relied on very much by the prosecution, particularly that of General Mercier, failed to develop any new facts, but consisted, in the main, of a rehash of matters which have been proven to be false, the expectation now is that Dreyfus will be cleared in spite of the remarkable method of procedure. The civilized world has reached that verdict long ago, with the exception of France, and the indications are that the majority of the French people have now reached the same conclusion.

At this writing matters in the Transvaal still remain in an unsettled condition, with preparation for war in progress. Everything now seems to depend on the response which President Kruger and the Raad shall make to the proposition of the British Colonial Secretary for a joint inquiry. For the benefit of some of our readers it may be well to state again the cause of the present trouble between the Transvaal Republic and Great Britain. In 1881 the Transvaal state was virtually created by the British Liberal Government. The Boers pledged themselves to give equal rights to all white citizens. Prior to 1882 it was an easy matter to obtain citizenship in this new state. After that a five-year residence qualification was adopted by the new state. This might have been endured, but a law was subsequently passed which created two classes of citizens—the old burghers and their descendants, and the new burghers. The latter are uitlanders, or foreigners, who constitute about two-thirds of the entire population. These uitlanders, it is claimed, have created the prosperity of the republic, and pay almost the entire expense of administration. In spite of this fact they have no adequate voice in political affairs. "A Boer's son, at the age of sixteen, is a citizen by right. At forty years of age an uitlander may have a vote." This is the condition of things which brought about the Jameson raid, which the British Government was compelled to repudiate, because it was illegal. Efforts have been made since then, by a conference, to bring about a modification of these laws, but so far no satisfactory agreement has been reached. The last proposition of the government is the reference of the trouble to a joint court of inquiry. This is the matter now under consideration by the President of the Transvaal and his lawmakers, and on their decision probably rests the question of peace or war.

The International Zionist Congress was opened at Basle, Switzerland, on August 16. Two hundred and fifty delegates were present, representing Europe, the United States, Asia and the Transvaal. The president of the Congress is Dr. Theodor Herzl, who opened the proceedings with an address on the aims and work of the Zionists. As our readers know, this movement among the Jews has for its object the reuniting of the scattered Jewish people, preferably in Palestine, and to secure for them a common national existence. The movement has some opposition among the Jews as among others, but in spite of this fact it is making a remarkable growth. The inspiration for this new movement in religious history came from the persecution of the Jews in Russia and Roumania, several years ago, but it did not take definite form until 1896. According to Prof. Richard Gottheil, of Columbia University, who is the leader of the movement in this country, the goal of the Zionists is "a certain home and renewed life in common for the Jews." The indications of the growth of this movement are the establishment of two Zionist papers, one in Paris, the other in Turkey, and a colonization bank. Organizations, too, are being multiplied in various parts of the world. The next step in the Zionist movement, according to President Herzl, is to secure their "Palestine charter." "Until we get that charter," says President Herzl, "we shall undertake no active operations." "Fortunately," he adds, "the Sultan is favorable to our projects, since they make for Ottoman as well as for Hebrew interests, so that the obtaining of the charter cannot be long delayed." Those who have had most experience in dealing with the Sultan are least likely to share in this optimistic view of the president of the Zionists.

Admiral Dewey is pursuing leisurely his homeward way. Since leaving Naples his health has not been good, and at Leghorn he was unable to receive the Italian official visitors who called to pay their respects. Captain Lamberton acted in his behalf in receiving the visitors. The Admiral is expected to be all right in a few days and will probably visit Florence. Preparations for his reception on a large scale continue. The city of New York has appropriated $150,000 for that purpose. President McKinley, it is reported, has signified his intention not to be present at the reception of Admiral Dewey, as he desires the Admiral to receive the undivided honors of the occasion, and to know that the demonstration is meant for him alone. This is very thoughtful on the part of the President, but, as some of the papers have suggested, there is no likelihood that even the President of the United States would prove much of a counter attraction on the day when the prow of the Olympia enters East River. The people of the United States are not wanting in respect for their President, and, on any ordinary occasion, delight to do him honor; but they have been waiting a long time for the opportunity of extending a welcome to the hero of Manila, and they are not likely to be turned aside from their purpose by the presence at New York of any or all the dignitaries of this or other nations. That will be Admiral Dewey's day exclusively. It would be entirely appropriate, therefore, if the President should so elect, for him to be present, in propria persona, to officially extend the welcome of the nation to the conquering hero.

General Pando, of the Spanish army, has made a speech before the Cortes defending his action in Cuba during the war with the United States, which throws light upon many features of that conflict. He says that as a commanding officer in the Spanish army he had made a profound study of the military power of the United States for twenty years, and that in order to do so he had maintained a system of espionage and inquiry through spies, among them being naval engineer officers. As a result of this investigation of our military condition he was convinced "that the United States did not have an army, and never would have an army without a radical change in their organic life." This will account for the defiant attitude of Spain toward this government for many years preceding the war. Evidently, this Spanish general did not understand that the United States can make a "radical changed in its organic life" on very short notice, as occasion may demand, and from having no army of any size, it can have, in a few months, a vast army in the field. General Pando throws the responsibility for the tactics of Spain on General Blanco, after the war with the United States had been declared. There was a difference in view between Generals Pando and Blanco growing out of the fact that the latter had a greater fear of the Yankee army and resources than the former. General Pando claims that at the time hostilities ceased the Spanish had in the island "two hundred thousand men provided with ammunition, provisions and other necessities."

Those who have predicted riots if not a revolution in France over the Dreyfus affair have not been disappointed. Last Sunday was a day of danger in Paris. About three o'clock in the afternoon anarchists and socialists began to assemble in the Place de Republique and from that on until midnight the city was in the hands of a mob. In the round-up of results it is stated that 380 persons were injured, 360 taken to the hospitals and 150 persons arrested. Of the injured 59 were police agents. The spite of the anarchists seems to have been mostly directed toward cafes and religious edifices. The church of St. Ambrose in particular was shamefully desecrated, windows and images were broken after the most sacrilegious fashion, not even stopping at the image of the Savior. For a time the police and guards were powerless to restrain the mob, but order was gradually restored. It is thought that this shameful outbreak will be regarded as a pro-Dreyfus demonstration and greatly injure his chances for acquittal. That a court could have so little regard for evidence and so much respect for an opinion in a case involving the honor of the nation without breeding civil storms, such as were witnessed in Paris on Sunday, if not a revolutionary war before it ends, is more than outraged justice can stand, and when the storm breaks it may be expected to involve the worst elements of the city and to be equally irrespective of the ordinary methods of justice. France is on the verge of a mighty upheaval over the Dreyfus affair and the world is awaiting each day's developments with bated breath.

While the newspapers have had a good deal to say concerning the annexation of Cuba, there is no evidence that the administration or Congress has any thought of changing the original program concerning the independence of Cuba. Some of the Cubans themselves manifest a little impatience with the delay in setting up a government of their own, but they have not duly appreciated the work that is necessary to be done before the withdrawal of American forces. The restoration of order, the feeding and clothing of the destitute population and the thorough cleansing of the cities and towns of the island, in order to guard against the pestilence of yellow fever, are matters that claim precedence, and very much has been accomplished in these respects. It is not probable that the Cubans themselves appreciate fully the benefit which has been conferred on their island by the heroic and energetic effort of a hygienic nature to protect the Cubans from the ravages of pestilence. The government is taking the preliminary steps to have a census of the island taken, which is a necessary step before any honest election can be held. This census will show the degree of literacy and illiteracy in the island, as well as the number of people of voting age, and will also contain valuable information concerning the island's industries. The troops in Cuba could be used to very good purpose in the Philippine Islands, and the Cubans may rest assured that as soon as the government feels authorized by the condition of things in Cuba to remove the troops it now has in the island, it will be glad to do so. Meanwhile, there is room for patience, both on the part of the Cubans themselves, and the ardent friends of Cuba, who are anxious to see them exercising the duties of self-government.

Governor Candler, of Georgia, has issued a very strong appeal to the good citizens of Georgia, whether white or black, to join hands in order to put an end to mob violence in that state. The Governor rightly holds that the only way to prevent lynching and other forms of mob violence is for the people to sustain the courts and to assist in bringing to speedy justice all violators of the law. There can be no question but that the law's delay and the resort to technicalities, so often made to defeat justice, is very largely responsible for the lawless practice of lynching. The Governor says, among other things:

> The lives and liberties of all law abiding negroes in Georgia must and shall be protected. Arson and burglary and assassination and robbery must stop, and at the same time lynch law must stop. The good of both races and the fair name of the state demand this. I would invoke the active, earnest co-operation of all good men, white and black, with the officers of the law in their efforts to prevent crime, suppress mob violence and bring criminals to justice and to restore peace and order and tranquility.

The people of the whole country ought to thank Governor Candler for these manly words and the people of that state especially should stand by the Governor in his heroic effort to abolish lawlessness and enforce justice in the established courts of the state.

BUSINESS AND THE KINGDOM.

One of the most manifest needs of Christianity to-day is that men should put into it the same business sagacity, enterprise and zeal which they manifest in their own earthly fortunes. We seem to have been merely playing at Christianity. We have only been touching it with the tips of our fingers. We have been experimenting with it on a small scale. More and more, however, Christian men are coming to see that the kingdom of God will never triumph on this earth until Christians put, not only their hearts, but their business sense, their business itself and all they have, into the kingdom, to be used for its extension over the earth. We cannot expect the kingdom of God to triumph over the powers of darkness except the children of light use the same business capacity, exercise the same common sense, manifest the same enterprise in its furtherance which the children of this world use in the prosecution of their worldly enterprises.

It has always seemed to us that the business method of advancing Christianity known as Church Extension is a recognition of the principle for which we are contending. In its wise adaptation of means to ends it looks as if a number of consecrated business men had put their heads together, saying: "Let us apply the same business principles to Christianity that we have been applying to our own business. Let us use some of the same enterprise in pushing forward the kingdom of God that we have been using to push forward our own private business." True, this sort of plan requires money, but not less does it require business ability and enterprise. For lack of the latter the church of God has suffered as much as for the lack of resources.

Two things are essential to the speedy triumph of the kingdom of God in the world: the Spirit and life of Jesus Christ in the hearts of men, renewing character and conduct, and the outward organization, with its business methods, molded by consecrated business ability and experience so as to adapt them to the high ends in view. The first of these is essential to the very existence of the church, the latter to its success in making conquest of the earth. We must have the internal life and the external embodiment; the soul and the body; the spiritual power and the means of so harnessing that power as to bring it to bear on the evangelization of the world. Niagara is a great power, but it had to be harnessed by means of human wisdom and vast resources in order to utilize it for illuminating distant cities and making it the motive power in manufacture and transportation. In like manner the spiritual life in the church—its truth, its principles of righteousness, its zeal for God, its love for humanity, its willingness for sacrifice—must all be utilized much more effectively than has hitherto been done in order to realize Christ's aim in the church.

There is a principle that rules in this domain which has been too often overlooked or ignored by the church and by those engaged in Christian enterprises. Men of large means and of large business ability cannot be enlisted heartily in any religious enterprise that is not conducted on business principles, and that does not have large aims in view and wise plans for accomplishing these aims. No doubt this is one reason why the resources of the church have been so meager in the past. The church has not planned for large things and has not attracted the attention of men who are in the habit of dealing with large enterprises. It has too often been content to undertake small things in a small way and by very unbusinesslike methods. This repels rather than invites financial resources.

In Church Extension we have a plan for utilizing large resources in a most economical manner in advancing the kingdom of God. It has been tried through many years by various religious bodies and has been found to be productive of most beneficial results, achieved in the most businesslike way. Here is an approved channel of Christian beneficence and liberality, through which our gifts can flow safely and unwastingly to the benefit of coming generations. It is certainly reasonable to expect that those who recognize their stewardship to God, and who feel that they must give an account for the right use of whatever means have been committed to their care, will avail themselves of the opportunity offered in Church Extension for consecrating a part of their means to permanent religious uses. One of the highest incentives to Christian liberality is the assurance that the gift we make is to to be a permanent and perpetual force working to the advancement of the kingdom of God. In offering this incentive, Church Extension makes a strong appeal for liberal gifts. If it be true that—it is not less true that he trembles for the safety of his empire when he sees the children of the kingdom adopting business methods in Christianity, putting their capital to religious uses in large sums under wise business management for the erection of church buildings and for the permanency of Christian organizations, and sees the same zeal and enterprise being manifested in behalf of Christianity which have hitherto been shown only in secular affairs. If he possess the sagacity which is usually attributed to him he cannot fail to see in these phenomena a prophecy of the downfall of his own kingdom and the triumph of God. But whatever may be true of Satan in this respect, men of faith and of spiritual vision see in this a new and better interpretation of what it means to "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," the dawning of that brighter day when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"Satan trembles when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees,"

THE PURITY OF THE CHURCH.

More important in the life of the church than members, than wealth, than learning even, is moral purity and spiritual tone. It is easily possible for a church to have culture, of a worldly kind, eloquence in its pulpit, an ornate service, fine music, large congregations, great popularity, increasing numbers and an abundance of worldly goods, while before God it is wretched, and poor, and blind, and naked.

The meaning of the work in which the Disciples of Christ are engaged, as the fathers saw it, is the moral elevation and spiritual health of the church. For this they prayed and labored. Alexander Campbell said, in his debate with N. L. Rice (p. 678): "Our reformation began in the conviction of the inadequacy of the corrupted forms of religion in popular use to effect that thorough change of heart and life which the gospel contemplates as so essential to admission into heaven. You may have heard me say here (and the whole country may have read it and heard it many a time) that a sevenfold immersion in the River Jordan, or any other water, will avail nothing without a previous change of heart. * * * Nor would the most strict conformity to all the forms and usages of the most perfect church order; the most exact observance of all the ordinances without personal faith, piety and moral righteousness—without a new heart, hallowed lips, and a holy life—profit any man in reference to eternal salvation."

These are supremely important words as showing the real inspiration of "our movement" and work. They are worthy of being committed to memory by every Disciple of the Christ.

The purity of the church will be promoted by a pure ministry. The first and most important qualification for the preacher of the Word is personal righteousnesss. Without this all other qualifications are valueless. "Keep thyself pure," and "take heed to thyself," were admonitions of Paul to Timothy. "Flee youthful lusts, and follow after righteousuess, faith, love, peace, with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart," is another exhortation of Paul the aged to the young man whom he loved as a son. In another place he says to the same person: "Follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness." Timothy was to give himself "wholly" to the work of an evangelist, and this was to be his character. If Paul were living to day he would no doubt speak to preachers in the same way. As are the preachers, pastors, teachers, bishops, evangelists, so will be the people. Actions speak louder than words. The most impressive preaching of a true minister of Jesus Christ is his godly life. The evil deeds of a bad man in the ministry will more than neutralize the good words that he may gracefully and eloquently speak. So Paul said to Timothy: "Be thou an example to them that believe, in word, in manner of life, in love, in faith, in purity."

Ought a minister to live on a higher moral plane than the people to whom he ministers? In what other way can he be "an example to them that believe?" How can he lead the people if he does not go before them?

The purpose of the New Testament epistles is the elevation of the moral tone of those to whom they are addressed. In the first of the Pastoral Epistles the purpose of the writer is expressed in the following language: "These things write I unto thee * * that thou mayest know how men ought to behave themselves in the house of God, which is the church of the living God."

It is a serious error to suppose that the purity of the church is alone or chiefly promoted by the administration of what is called "discipline," i. e., by the withdrawal of fellowship. This must sometimes be resorted to. To the Corinthians Paul said, speaking of the incestuous man: "Put away the wicked man from among you." In the same connection he said: "I wrote unto you in my epistle to have no company with fornicators." To "the church of the Thessalonians" Paul said: "If any man obeyeth not our word by this epistle, note that man, that ye have no company with him, to the end that he may be ashamed." The purpose of "discipline" in this sense and in this case is evident. Pursue this course in regard to those who walk "disorderly," says Paul, "to the end that" they "may be ashamed." Thus will the purity of the church be promoted.

But not in this way alone, nor chiefly. By the faithful and fearless preaching of the Word, by the conduct of public worship, by the proper administration of the ordinances will the purity of the church be maintained and increased.

The pure church is the church that has influence for good. The same is true of the individual. The person whose heart and life are pure is the one who possesses moral and spiritual power. A passage from "The First General Epistle of Peter" ought to be read at this place. It is as follows:

"In like manner, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that even if any obey not the Word, they may without the Word be gained by the behavior of their wives; beholding your chaste behavior, coupled with fear. Whose adorning, let it not be the outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing jewels of gold, or of putting on apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in the incorruptible apparel of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. For after this manner aforetime the holy women also, who hoped in God, adorned themselves."

In these words the apostle places before the minds of his readers the value and gracious influence of a single pure life. "Without the Word" the husband may be turned to the Christ. Let this one life, the life of the one wife, be multiplied indefinitely, as in the church; who can estimate the power for good?

A WORD OF CAUTION.

The publication, within recent years, of the results of psychical researches has done much to stimulate interest in mental science, and especially in that phase of it which relates to healing diseases. The number of persons entering into this field of psychological practice, and the short and easy method by which they are prepared for this kind of healing, suggests the necessity of caution. That there is truth in what is called "suggestive therapeutics" has been known to intelligent physicians, and acted upon by them, for many years. "Christian Science" has emphasized the truth that the mind exerts a controlling influence over many forms of disease. "Faith-cures," "mind-cures," "magnetic healing," "divine healing," etc., are all illustrations of one great law which is as yet only imperfectly understood. Hypnotism, in its recent developments, has opened up a wide field, and is a recognized force among scientific men. It is a force, however, that may be used either for good or for evil purposes. The danger is that a great many charlatans and adventurers will enter this field along with a number of honest, well-meaning men who imperfectly understand the force with which they are dealing, and a few scientific practitioners. It is easy to see that there is opportunity here for preachers of the gospel to turn aside from their legitimate work and be led into injurious extremes. "Suggetive therapeutics" is a branch of hypnotism, and hypnotism is a name for a force or law which, as we have said, is yet very imperfectly understood. It no doubt plays an important part in the phenomena of modern Spiritualism and in the various forms of "divine," "magnetic" or "faith" healing. We suggest to our readers the importance of exercising great caution in adopting these new methods of healing as a profession. We do not doubt that there is a force here that can be used advantageously in many forms of disease by men who are scientifically trained and whose character is a guarantee that the influence or force will be used in a judicious way. But what we fear is that good men will wreck their reputations by turning aside from honorable and useful callings to engage in a profession for which they lack adequate preparation, based on principles inadequately understood.

The trial of Dreyfus is a religious trial and is about to result in a religious war. What should have been an effort to discover political criminals high in office in one of the proudest nations of the world is turned into a persecution of the Jews. The methods of the court in which Dreyfus is now being tried are as far from justice as some of the inquisitorial trials of the darkest age of the world. They are a travesty upon the very name of justice. Opinions and bitter incriminations have unbridled liberties while justice, mercy and truth are ruthlessly forced into the background by a court upon which the future of France now depends.

Hour of Prayer.

ASSOCIATING WITH JESUS.

(Acts 4:13; John 14:18-25.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Aug. 30.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Association with Jesus Christ works such change in character and conduct as to attract the attention of the world and show forth the transforming power of His life.

There is perhaps no more important principle of spiritual development than the law of association—the tendency to become like those with whom we are in sympathetic companionship. Associating with good people is not only a means of spiritual growth, but it is in itself an index to our own character. There is no truer test of one's character than the kind of persons he selects as his bosom friends and associates.

It was a great event in the lives of Peter and John when they were introduced to Jesus of Nazareth and became his personal friends and followers. The process of transformation in their characters began with their friendship for Christ, went on during his earthly ministry and culminated after his resurrection and ascension in a spiritual union with Him through the Holy Spirit, which made them the spiritual teachers for all succeeding ages.

The healing of the lame man at the Beautiful Gate of the temple by these two disciples had been followed by a discourse marked by such boldness of utterance and such lofty spiritual enthusiasm as to give evidence to all the people that these men had been with Jesus. If not, whence this unwonted boldness that declared the faith of Jesus in the very face of the Jewish leaders who had crucified Him? Whence this noble self-abandonment to the interests of the kingdom of God and this wonderful power manifested in the healing of the lame man? Whence their patience, their meekness, their purity of life, their sublime optimism? The men who had known them in the years gone by, and who had seen and known something of the life and character of Jesus, found but one explanation of this marvelous change: they had been with Jesus; they had received His Spirit and had caught the vision which made Him endure the agonies of the cross for the glories that was set before Him. Even men of the world have enough spiritual perception or common sense to know that a spiritual transformation like that must have an adequate cause, and adequate cause there is none save Jesus Christ.

But that was nearly nineteen centuries ago, and Jesus is no longer here is the flesh. How, then, it may be asked, can we be spiritually transformed by association with Jesus? The passage cited from John furnishes the answer to the question: "I will not leave you desolate: I come unto you. . . . . He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself unto him." This statement raised a very natural question: "Lord, what is come to pass that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?" The answer of Jesus explains how this is: "If a man love me, he will keep my Word: and my Father will love him and we will come unto him and make our abode with him."

From this passage and others we learn that Christ's promise in the great commission, to be with his disciples always, even to the end of the world, was to be fulfilled in a very real and practical sense. The believing, trusting, obedient disciple may have spiritual fellowship and daily companionship with Jesus Christ. It was expedient for us that He go away in order that He might be spiritually present with the millions of his followers through all the coming ages. We know Christ no longer now after the flesh, as Paul tells us, but after the Spirit.

Nor is this a vague, shadowy, mystical association with Christ that is here meant, but a very real and a very precious fellowship, as thousands of His followers to-day will testify. We can associate with Christ in as real a manner and secure from such association as great a transforming power as was possible to His personal followers in the days of His flesh. Indeed, it was not until after Christ's ascension and after His disciples came to know Him in a spiritual sense that they experienced the richest results of association with Him. While He was present with them they had their hearts set too much on a material or earthly kingdom. Now that He had gone from them visibly, and the Holy Spirit had come to carry on the unfinished work of Christ within them, they came to know for the first time the lofty meaning of Christ's teaching and the spiritual nature of his reign.

Have we learned to know Jesus as a personal friend, as a daily companion? Do we know by experience what it is to have Him with us in our sorrows, to sooth and sustain us in our temptations, to make a way for our escape or to give us the victory, and in our perplexities to guide us in the path of duty? Has our association with Him been so intimate, so vital, that the impress of His character is upon us? Does the world take knowledge of us, from our boldness in defense of the truth, from our identification with every true and righteous cause, from the graces which adorn our daily lives, that we have been with Jesus? These are questions to be answered in our own hearts.

PRAYER.

O God, our Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast brought us into fellowship with Thyself and with Thy Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. We thank Thee that Thou hast manifested Thyself in the flesh, in the person of our adorable Savior. We bless Thy name for the privilege of being the friends and followers of Him who came to show us the Father. We thank Thee for the transforming power of the gospel of Christ, the heart and power of which is Jesus Christ Himself. May we have grace to commit ourselves so completely to His guidance, and to associate with Him in such closeness of personal fellowship, that we may be transformed from one degree of glory to another, until we shall come into His glorious image. And this we ask for His name's sake. Amen!

France has been sowing to the wind and is now about to reap the whirlwind. A nation that ignores righteousness in her chief offices and courts cannot hope to retain her integrity. There remains no longer any apology for existence. And what is happening to France must happen sooner or later to every nation that forgets God and tramples his laws under the feet of unbelieving, lustful men. No nation can feed upon impure literature and run society upon loose morals without undermining its own foundation.

MACATAWA MUSINGS.

There seem to be cycles in the weather as in the financial world, and, as some think, in the moral world also. What great law there may be governing these changes, atmospheric, commercial and moral, is not well understood. Of the changes themselves, however, we are quite certain. After an unusually warm day for this place, on Friday of last week, clouds sprang up from the southwest and soon overspread the heavens, save an arc of about 30° in the west-northwest, where the sun was sinking in unclouded grandeur. As darkness came on, the clouds thickened and the air seemed full of electricity. The wind blew a stiff gale. Sheet lightning illuminated the southwest and seemed to be carried by the wind, like the wild flames of a prairie fire. The scene over the lake to the southwest was sublime in its awful grandeur. Meanwhile, the blue streak in the west-northwest held its own, and as the sun passed down beneath the horizon there was an arch of blue, bordered by a golden band above, with the dark purple of the waters beneath. These two scenes were in marked contrast—one of storm and fury, the other a calm evening sunset, undisturbed by the dark cohorts of clouds that rolled up from the southwest. Looking now upon that picture, and then upon this, we thought of the two kinds of lives which they represented—the one the life of tempest and conflict, of eternal discord and outward antagonism, full of unrest and of strife; the other the calm, peaceful life, that has adjusted its relations with God and with fellowman, and in spite of outward conflicts maintains its peace and serenity, unbroken to the close.

Saturday following the Friday's storm was one of those ideal days which make one believe in the value of storms. The sky was peculiarly blue, the air was full of tonic and a brisk breeze from the southwest soon flecked the blue lake with white caps. It was the last day of the Assembly. It has been the custom for a number of years for our preachers who are in attendance at the Assembly, with their families, to go up Black Lake on a little steamer to Point Superior, not only for social purposes, but to talk over matters of interest connected with the cause in which we are all interested. There, under the shady trees, on a point of land jutting out into the lake, with the town of Holland lying in full view on the east and Macatawa Park on the west, while the women busy themselves in preparing the evening meal, the preachers discuss the practical problems which have to do with our future growth and well-being. Everything is informal and nothing is settled by vote or resolution. Saturday was the day set for our annual excursion. We had the same quiet evening hour as heretofore, the same placid lake, dyed with the colors of the setting sun, the singing of the sweet old songs as we gathered on the beach waiting for the coming steamer, and as we glided down the beautiful bay toward the channel that connects us with the great lake. A number were with us on this occasion for the first time, and they pronounced it an event that will live in their memories as one of the bright spots of the past. There is always a sort of religious fervor about these little excursions that lends its hallowing influence to the occasion and makes us all feel that somehow we have been brought nearer to God and nearer to each other.

Last week we wrote in the midst of the Assembly and pronounced it one of the best thus far. It continued to the close to increase in interest. The last epistles studied were those of John and the epistle to the Hebrews. The lecturers brought us into the holy of holies in the study of these epistles, and we seemed to get a clearer grasp of their historical settings, their literary features and their lofty spiritual teaching. Bros. Campbell and Willett work together most harmoniously and their thoughts mingle together like different chords of one harmonious strain. It is wonderful how interesting these books, which have been so long read and studied, can be made under the guidance of such teachers as we have had in this Assembly. No literature not inspired by the Spirit of God could prove of such perennial interest to mankind. These books deal with the very problems in which all men are vitally interested, and deal with them in such a way, too, as to satisfy the questioning mind and the longing heart. This is why they live and will continue to live as long as human nature is what it is and human needs remain the same. "The Teaching of the Books," a volume which will embrace the lectures of the last two assemblies on the books of the New Testament, which, as announced last week, will appear about September 1, will give the public the best information as to the kind of work that is being done at Macatawa Park.

It has been our custom for a number of years to make the last Sunday of Assembly week an occasion of a union communion service. The sermon on last Lord's day was preached by Rev. Mr. Burgess, Congregational pastor at Normal, Ill. It was a thoughtful sermon, based on the words of John: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, but it doth not appear what we shall be." The communion service which followed was deeply impressive, marking, as it did, that oneness of fellowship which is characteristic of this place. In the closing hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds," all hearts seemed to flow together in that unity of love and of worship for which the Master prayed. The beach service in the evening, despite the cool weather, was largely attended. It was conducted by J. Z. Tyler, who selected as the theme for the evening, "What is Christ to Me?" The brief talks on this subject were interspersed with familiar songs which rang out sweetly on the night air and mingled with the music of the waves. There was no bonfire, but the stars shed their mild rays upon us, and the crescent moon, which hung out in the western sky, lent its benediction to the scene. Among the speakers, besides Bro. Tyler, were J. W. Allen, Dr. Seimaro Kubota, our Japanese brother, who is quite popular in these meetings, Hiram Van Kirk, a new speaker on these grounds, and F. G. Tyrrell, who never fails to command the applause of a Macatawa audience. These services on the sands uniformly close with the singing of a verse or two of "God be with you till we meet again."

It was at the meeting of the general board of the American Christian Missionary Society, at Chattanooga, last year, that the irrepressible secretary of Church Extension, in mentioning the disadvantages by which the "day" for that fund was beset, referred to the absentees preceding and following the first Lord's day in September, who were "swinging in hammocks at Macatawa or elsewhere." By way of heaping coals of fire upon this secretary's head we desire, from our editorial sanctum on the lakeside, to call special attention to the offering for Church Extension, in order that that fund may keep pace with the growth that is being made by other departments of the mission work. We have made this issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in the special interest of Church Extension. See our editorial elsewhere on "Business and the Kingdom," in which we have expressed our views more fully as to the wisdom of this method of our work. Let the secretary, who is probably now on a vacation, which the editor of this paper never takes, make a note of these things and be good!

Questions and Answers.

Can a deacon of the church sell ice to a saloonkeeper to keep liquor on? T.

That depends upon the kind of consciene the deacon has developed in the matter of the liquor traffic. If he has come to see that the business is wholly bad and wars against the best interests of the individuals who patronize it, and of society, the church and state, he will desire no partnership with it, not even to the extent of selling it ice. There is a sort of recognition of the legitimacy of the business, in having dealings with it, that no Christian ought to give to the liquor trafic.

Should a church try to raise money for missions when it is greatly behind on incidentals and no money ahead for the support of a pastor and no chance of rising any? W. P. Root.

A church in the condition described in this question evidently needs something to improve its financial status. Perhaps a little unselfish giving for the cause of missions might prove to be the very remedy needed. Of course, where there is absolutely no ability, in a financial sense, there is no financial responsibility, but if indebtedness be allowed as a legitimate excuse for not giving to missions, very few churches would be enlisted in misssionary work. No church should be asked or expected to do what it has not the ability to do, but as a rule it is better for a church, even though it be poor and in debt, to give a little out of the abundance of its poverty for the holy cause of missions.

Please explain 1 Peter 3:19 and 4:6. Who were the "spirits in prison" and the "dead" referred to, and how, when and where was the gospel preached to them?

Gregg, Texas. W. D. Bowman.

The "spirits in prison" were those who were disobedient in the days of Noah, as explained in the passage. The "dead" referred to in the second passsage seems to refer to those who had lived upon the earth, but who, at the time this letter was written, were dead. The first passage seems to teach very clearly that Christ, after his crucifixion, preached to "the spirits in prison." This is perhaps what is referred to in the second passage. Christ had an important mission to hades, or the underworld. His death seems to have wrought a very radical change in the nature of death, virtually "abolishing" it as Paul declares. He "led captivity captive." It is probable that he vacated hades and that since his death and resurrection the spirits of the deceased go immediately into the presence of God.

Referring to a recent answer of the editor to a question on the resurrection I would ask:

1. What do we understand by "resurrection," when spoken of concerning the raising of Christ? Does it mean that he came forth with the same identical body which was buried?

2. If this was the nature of Christ's resurrection, how can you interpret John 5:28, 29 to be anything less than a resurrection of the physical body?

3. When Paul (1 Cor. 15:20) declares that Christ had become the first fruits of them that slept, did he mean that the first fruits of the ripening grain would be different from the rest of the harvest?

4. Does not the redemption which believers have in Christ include both soul and body?

Ipava, Ill. M. T. Coope.

1. There is no doubt but that Christ's body in which he was crucified was resuscitated and came forth at his resurrection. The reason for this is apparent. It was important that he identify himself to his disciples as the same Jesus that had been crucified, who had returned to life again. His body, however, seems to have undergone a gradual transformation between his resurrection and ascension. He came and went through closed doors as physical bodies cannot do. It is not necessary to suppose, however, that in this particular our resurrection is to be after the same manner as Christ's, in the sense that our bodies are to come forth from the grave in the identical form in which they are buried, as there does not exist the same reason for it. What was a gradual process in the case of Christ, may take place "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," in the case of others.

2. We do not need and cannot use "physical" bodies in the resurrection state. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." Paul expressly declares that "that which thou sowest, thou sowest not the body that shall be." The passage in John does indeed refer to the resurrection, or the standing up again of the body, but it is a spiritual, not a physical body.

3. No; believers are to have bodies fashioned after the glorious body of Christ. But Christ did not ascend with a physical body. It was transformed when it had served the purpose of identification.

4. The redemption which believers have in Christ does, indeed, include the whole man, body soul and spirit. We are to have bodies in the future world, but not these bodies of flesh and blood. There is where the difficulty lies. Many people seem unable to conceive of a body that is not physical or material; but Paul says, "there is a natural body and there is a spiritual body." We now have "natural" bodies; we are to have "spiritual" bodies. This is what is meant by the resurrection. How much more glorious it is than the reanimation of these mortal and material bodies!

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE FOURTH PERIOD.

T. W. GRAFTON.

IV. "The Louisville Plan."

It was earnestly hoped that the recent changes made in the constitution of the American Christian Missionary Society, by removing some objectionable features, would secure the hearty co-operation of all the friends of primitive Christianity. In this the promoters of our missionary cause were mistaken.

It was the Society itself, as a human institution, that had given offense to the brethren who would have the Lord's plan or none at all; and no amount of changing or patching, of adding to or taking from its constitution would satisfy its enemies, so long as it was still a society.

But aside from its failure to please the brethren whom it had been devised to please, a very few months proved the weakness of the new plan as a financial measure. In dispensing with life memberships and life directorships no adequate substitute had been provided for replenishing the missionary treasury, and it was running dry. The work of the society was being crippled for lack of funds, and all missionary effort was at a standstill. To untie the missionary knot was now the problem that baffled the wisest of our leaders.

In 1868 Thomas Munnell was elected corresponding secretary, and at once threw his energy into the cause of Christian missions. As a remedy for the existing disorder over plans he suggested the following:

"1. Let every Disciple, in his own mind, pass an act of oblivion upon all past indiscretions as to missionary work. In this act, include everything done wrong in general or state societies, everything written unadvisedly, resolutions in convention, oppositions to societies, and such like causes of difference without now caring to decide who was right or who wrong. Let none but the small folks 'think on these things.'

"2. These old roots being taken out, let every state be districted into large divisions, so that it would require all the time of a district evangelist to keep up the missionary financial system, find out the weak places, urge the Sunday-school cause and stir everything into activity within those limits, a dozen ways that cannot here be described. Five or ten of these secretaries could keep all the active parts alive and at work.

"3. Each of these districts regularly pouring their contributions into the state treasury, the state would always have something to give to missions abroad—to the territories, to the South or East. Each state would then send through her own treasury all the funds she designs for missions outside her own boundaries, to the Board of Missions at Cincinnati. This board, having had years of experience in the foreign field, can manage all the funds of the brotherhood intended for that use in the most satisfactory manner possible."

It is not difficult to discover in these suggestions the germ of what afterward came to be known as the "Louisville Plan," a plan which for a decade harrassed our missionary movements and crippled our missionary progress, without securing to any extent the co-operation of the anti-society men, which it was devised to effect.

A resolution had been passed at the annual convention of 1868, calling for a semi-annual meeting of the society in the following May at St. Louis. At this meeting, which was largely attended, our missionary problem received serious attention. In spite of wasted energy and the illiberal policy of many churches the movement had made remarkable progress, and it was felt by our progressive leaders that the time had come for us to do something along missionary lines commensurate with our numerical strength. The failure of the plan adopted at the last general convention brought from the corresponding secretary an appeal for a more efficient financial policy. As a result of the deliberation of the convention the following resolution, offered by W. T. Moore, was adopted:

"Resolved, That a committee of twenty be appointed to take into consideration the whole question of evangelization and report, if possible, a scriptural and practical plan for raising money and spreading the gospel, said committee to report at the Louisville meeting in October next."

The committee appointed was a strong one. It represented, not only the staunch friends of the Missionary Society, but also men like Benj. Franklin, who had refused to co-operate on any plan that had hitherto been proposed, on the ground that the methods employed were unscriptural. The committee consisted of W. T. Moore, W. K. Pendleton, Alexander Procter, Enos Campbell, B. Franklin, Isaac Errett, M. E. Lard, Joseph King, W. A. Belding, G. W. Longan, R. Graham, R. R. Sloan, O. A. Burgess, A. I. Hobbs, C. L. Loos, Jno. S. Sweeney, T. W. Caskey, J. S. Lamar, W. D. Carnes and J. C. Reynolds—men of strength and wisdom, every one of them.

The convention which assembled at Louisville in October, 1869, has become a landmark in our missionary history. It was looked forward to as the end of all our unhappy differences over plans, and the beginning of a new era of world-wide evangelization. More than six hundred delegates assembled with this prospect in view. The committee of twenty presented, in their report, a plan of co-operation which, from the place of meeting, has passed into our history as the "Louisville Plan." Since it marks an epoch in the cause of missions among the Disciples, I will give in full that part of the report which related to the plan of missionary co-operation:

"1. That there be one uniform financial system to secure the means for missions both at home and abroad.

"2. That to render this efficient there be: (a) A General Board and corresponding secretary. (b) A Board and corresponding secretary for each state to co-operate with the General Board. (c) District Boards in each state and a secretary in each district, whose duty shall be to visit all the churches in his district and induce them to accept the missionary work as a part of their religious duty.

"3. There shall be an Annual Convention in each district, the business of which shall be transacted by messengers appointed by the churches; an Annual Convention in each state, the business of which shall be conducted by messengers sent by the churches of the state, it being understood, however, that two or more churches, or all the churches of a district, may be represented by messengers mutually agreed upon; and an annual General Convention, the business of which shall be conducted by messengers from the state conventions.

"4. The General Convention shall annually appoint nine brethren who, together with the corresponding secretaries of the states and the presidents of the state boards, shall constitute a General Board, who shall meet annually to transact the general missionary business and appoint a committee of five to superintend the work in the intervals between their annual meeting.

"5. It shall be the duty of the General Board and corresponding secretary to provide for and superintend missionary operations in destitute places not actually in state and district organizations, and to promote the harmonious co-operation of all the state and district boards and conventions.

"6. There shall be also a State Board and corresponding secretary in each of the states, elected annually by the messengers sent to the State Convention, and that it shall be the duty of said boards and secretaries to manage the missionary interests in their respective states in harmony with the system of general co-operation.

"7. Each state shall be divided into districts of suitable limits by the State Board; the messengers from the churches of each district shall elect, at their annual conventions, a board and a secretary; and the business of each secretary shall be to visit all the churches in his district, and in co-operation with their own officers induce them to contribute and send to the district treasury money for the support of missions.

"8. As our whole financial system is based upon a general co-operation of the churches, we recommend that each church, over and above the sums it may contribute for missionary work under its immediate control, give a pledge to pay annually to its district treasurer a definite sum for other missionary work, and that one-half of such contributions may be under the control of the district boards for missionary work in the districts, the other half to be sent to the state boards, to be divided equally between it and the General Board for their respective works; but this recommendation is not to be considered as precluding a different disposition of funds when the church contributing shall so decide."

This general financial scheme, since characterized by one of our scribes as "no stronger than a rope of sand," seemed to exactly meet the situation that confronted the Disciples at that time, and after due deliberation it was passed without a dissenting vote. By this act the American Christian Missionary Society ceased to be, and in its stead sprang up the General Christian Missionary Convention, gathering about it the hopes of a great brotherhood. The new plan had some things to commend it. It was a heroic effort to harmonize the diverging sentiments of a growing people. It recognized the supremacy of the church and provided for church co-operation—a principle for which the opposition had long contended. It was so comprehensive as to exclude none from "participation in the divine duty of preaching the gospel." It was felt, upon its adoption, that we would witness the awakening of "new interest among our people in missionary work." "I trust that the current year," hopefully wrote the editor of the Harbinger, "may prove to be one of unparalleled activity in this great cause, and that this system which rests upon the basis of the churches, and makes its appeal primarily and directly to their free and independent co-operation, will become at once uniformly adopted and thoroughly carried out."

The enthusiasm at first manifested gave promise of its triumph over the old spirit of opposition. Benj. Franklin, though not present at the meeting of the committee of twenty, gave his endorsement to the report and spoke his approval of the plan adopted in the columns of the American Christian Review. He said:

"In our estimation it is the most simple, natural and wise arrangement ever made, and that it will commend itself to all who desire to do anything beyond their own immediate vicinities for the spread of the gospel. We have never seen anything proposed that came near meeting with the same approbation in a convention. Nor have we seen anything that we could give such an unequivocal approval. We hope now that every friend of evangelizing will put his hand to the work and push the work, and let us hear no more about plans and societies, but work. We can work and live, or refuse to work and die. . . . . We need nothing now but work, true and honest work, with determination, faith and love. The Lord put it into the heart of the brethren to work while it is called to-day; and may his richest blessing attend all our efforts!"

But whatever the merits of the "Louisville Plan," it soon proved a failure in the one thing which, above all others, was in the hearts of its projectors. It failed to secure the co-operation of those who had opposed all our missionary efforts in the past. "They opposed the old plan because it was not a co-operation of churches, and they opposed the new plan because it was a co-operation of churches." Notwithstanding his hearty endorsement in the beginning, Mr. Franklin in a short time took up his pen against it, declaring: "We do not now go against it merely because it is not a good human scheme, or because it did not succeed; but because it is a human scheme, with the intention to go against all schemes of the kind. We put it and all the conventions and human creeds on the same footing, and go against them because they are human; originated in human wisdom and not in the wisdom of God."

It was now clearly seen that further attempt to secure the co-operation of these brethren would be useless. "They had set themselves," to use the language of W. K. Pendleton, "in opposition to all forms of representative gatherings—opposition to conventions, opposition to societies, opposition to boards, opposition to presidents, opposition to treasuries, but especially and above all, opposition to corresponding secretaries. There was nothing, it was contended, higher, bigger, or more to be respected than a church, an ecclesia, a congregation." A decade of discussion over plans and compromises for the sake of harmony had failed of results. In 1869 we were as far from our rightful position among the missionary forces of the world as in 1849.

ACTUAL AND FORMAL REMISSION OF SINS.

A. B. JONES.

If there is a general agreement among Bible students and religious thinkers of the various evangelical bodies of the world on any subject of Christian doctrine, it is in regard to the subject of remission of sins. This agreement approximates universality and is applied to two points, as follows:

1. That "whosoever believeth on Jesus Christ shall receive remission of sins." By which is meant, as explained in my former article, the full and intelligent surrender of the soul through Christ unto God. By faith in this connection is not meant any narrow, technical definition of the word, but a broad, comprehensive, full meaning of faith as involving repentance and all cognate moral experiences necessary to conversion. That whosoever has this part alone, this faith without baptism, shall receive remission of sins, receive it before his baptism—this, I say, is the almost universal teaching of Protestant Christendom.

2. In the next place, it is generally agreed by these same religious bodies and teachers that baptism is in some way related to and connected with the remission of sins. These are facts, account for them as we may and dispose of them as we may. The presumption is that the Scriptures either really or apparently teach these two items. If the Scriptures authorize both these points in Christian doctrine, then they are not antagonistic, not inharmonious. The terms and methods of reasoning employed by these leaders of religious thought in their efforts to explain and reconcile these two articles of faith are not always the same, but they are, I think, in substantial agreement. Some of these writers gravitate too far, occasionally, toward baptismal regeneration, while others gravitate too far toward the non-essentiality of baptism. But these are exceptions. The great body of these thinkers and writers gravitate about the central, scriptural truth on this subject. The terms used by writers to set forth the office of baptism are "sign," "seal," "symbol," "pledge," "assurance," "declaration." And their meaning is that to the penitent believer baptism is the sign, seal, symbol, pledge, assurance and declaration of the fact that God has actually forgiven and now formally forgives his sins, and of his consequent moral and legal purification. And our own writers employ these terms in the same way and for the same purpose. Mr. Campbell used every one of those words in discussing the subject of baptism. The chief difference between our writers and others is that we lay greater stress on the importance of baptism as an appointment of God, as a legal provision, as a governmental measure for the formal remission of sins.

Alexander Campbell's astute mind never penetrated beneath the surface of things with finer discrimination, nor was he ever more loyal to his set purpose of being loyal to the Word of God than when he stated in his debate with McCalla in 1823:

> Annanias said to Paul, "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins." . . . When he was baptized he must have believed that his sins were now washed away in some sense that they were not before. For if his sins had been already in every sense washed away, Annanias' address would have led him into a mistaken view of himself, both before and after baptism. . . . Paul's sins were really pardoned when he believed, yet he had no solemn pledge of the fact, no formal acquittal, no formal purgation of his sins until he washed them away in the water of baptism.

In these utterances Mr. Campbell was showing to the world his allegiance to truth, his fidelity to what he believed to be the teaching of Holy Scripture. He here makes a distinction between actual and formal remission of sins and places an emphasis on the value and importance of baptism that was not common in that day. Indeed, Mr. Campbell did not fully realize at that time the full value and significance of his own declarations. Some years after this, when his vision had become clearer and his view of the situation more distinct, he is represented by Dr. Richardson, in his "Memoirs of A. Campbell," vol. 2, page 217 as saying:

> We can sympathize with those who have this doctrine in their own creeds, unregarded and unheeded in its import and utility, for we exhibited it fully in our debate with Mr. McCalla in 1823 without feeling its great importance and without beginning to practice upon its tendencies for sometime afterward.

Again, as late as 1857 Mr. Campbell, in speaking of an address which he delivered in New Orleans, La., on the subject of baptism, says: "A formal remission of sins was and is the end and design of it." (See Memoirs of A. Campbell, Vol. 2, page 629.)

In his book on baptism, published in 1852, page 256, we find this paragraph:

> Baptism is a solemn pledge and a formal assurance on the part of our Father that he has forgiven all our offences—a positive, sensible, solemn seal and pledge that through faith in the blood of the slain Lamb of God, and through repentance or a heartfelt sorrow for the past and a firm purpose of reformation of life, by the virtues of the great Mediator, we are thus publicly declared forgiven and formally obtain the assurance of our acceptance and pardon with the promised aid of the Holy Spirit to strengthen and furnish us for every good thought and word and work.

The foregoing statements and facts are given for what they are worth. I claim no originality on this subject, except in the form in which I discussed it in my article a few weeks ago in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I now give attention to BROTHER BRINEY'S CRITICISMS.

The first point raised against my article by Brother B. is that I employ "philosophy" in my discussion of the subject. This objection is one usually raised by uneducated men. Men of Bro. B.'s standing generally raise the question only of the soundness of your philosophy. Every man employs philosophy in whatever he applies his thought or hand to. A failure to do this is only a prophecy in advance of his failure in life. We have always complained of others because they did not employ philosophy in their religious teaching. Especially has this been the case in regard to their views of faith and repentance and their relation and priority, and in regard to their views of the operations of the Holy Spirit. Shall we complain of others for not using philosophy and then complain of each other for using it? After all, does not this objection to philosophy amount to about this: "When philosophy sustains my position we will employ it, but when philosophy upsets my doctrine we must discard it?" Bro. B., it is said, has some very fine lectures on "Genesis and Geology," in which he wisely plays the part of a philosopher in his interpretations of the Word and works of God.

No man can understand religion or properly interpret the Bible without knowing in some measure and comforming to the laws of the human mind, without mental philosophy, now more commonly called psychology. Any theory of religion or interpretation of Scripture that runs contrary to God's laws as written in the constitution of the human soul, and contrary to the nature and character of God as revealed in the Bible, had better be hauled in for repairs.

I will now proceed to quote from Bro. B.'s strictures on my article such statements as appear to demand attention, and append my comments.

1. Remission of sins does not depend upon human philosophy, but upon divine appointment.

I should say it depends on both. If a responsible man is not philosopher enough to adjust himself to the divine appointments he will fail of the remission of his sins—fail for the lack of philosophy. I suppose this is something like what Bro. B. means by "defects that attach themselves to"—*un*philosophical reasoning.

2. Human duty ends when the divine appointments are ascertained and complied with.

That is, a man is under no obligations to look into these divine appointments and discover the "wisdom of God," the "righteousness of God," the "beauty of holiness" and the "eternal fitness of things." Just shut his eyes like a young catbird and swallow the worm dropped in his mouth and then nestle down and go to sleep! God says, "Come, let us reason together."

3. Bro. Jones' philosophy strangely ignores a very important factor in the forgiveness of sin, namely, the lifting or removal of the penalty."

Indeed! When I discussed the subject of "remission of sin" was I not discussing the "lifting of the penalty?" Can sin be remitted without the penalty being lifted? I suppose that is what Bro. B. means by "entanglement" in argument.

4. To which article of forgiveness does the removal of the penalty belong in Bro. Jones' philosophy—the actual or the formal?

To both, of course. Actual and formal forgiveness means actual and formal removal of the penalty.

5. If a boy violates a parental law to which a penalty of ten lashes is attached, and the father, seeing that he is penitent, says: "Kiss your mother and all is forgiven," all parties understand that the penalty hangs over the boy till the injunction is complied with.

All parties understand that the father, seeing the son penitent in his own heart, actually forgives, actually lifts the penalty first, and the injunction to kiss his mother is given for the boy's own moral good and in the interest of family discipline and means formal forgiveness. Thus Bro. B.'s argument "breaks down" for the want of philosophy.

6. A citizen commits a crime for which he is condemned to the penitentiary for a term of years. When he has served a part of the term the governor tells him that if he will sign a bond to be a good citizen in the future he shall be forgiven. This promise of forgiveness means the removal of the penalty and no one understands that the penalty is removed before the condition is complied with.

No one understands this to be the divine government, nor even a family government, but a state government—a government simply of law and penalty. And thus the "bottom drops out" of Bro. B.'s theology and all for the want of a sound philosophy.

7. The penalty of sin is condemnation, and forgiveness, to be practicable and valuable, must remove the penalty of condemnation. Does Bro. Jones hold that forgiveness in this sense takes place before the obedience to which the promise is attached is rendered?

No, Bro. Jones don't hold that forgiveness is extended "before obedience." But he does hold that when the sinner obeys to the extent of prostrating himself at the feet of Christ and pleading for mercy, the penalty, which it is plainly stated is damnation in hell, is actually lifted, and when he obeys in baptism it is formally lifted. Bible teaching as he understands it, and moral philosophy as he understands it, both lead him, with the great body of Christian thinkers, to this conclusion.

8. An effect is something that follows its cause as a natural and necessary result. It does not involve choice, but is a matter of inexorable law. Where the cause exists the effect follows as a matter of necessity and not as a matter of grace."

Another "entanglement" for the want of philosophy! My dictionary gives this definition of cause: "Any rational ground for choice or action." And gives this definition of effect: "The result or product of some efficient cause or agency." "A feeling or sensation resulting from observation or external impression." Bro. B. seems never to have discovered any difference between physics and metaphysics, between matter and mind. The intelligent reader will conclude, I think, that it is an "inexorable law of necessity" in argument that leads Bro. B. into such untrodden paths of reasoning.

9. If belief and repentance constitute the cause which produced forgiveness in the mind of God as its effect, the sinner is assured of forgiveness by his knowledge that he is a penitent believer, and no external matter can strengthen his assurance.

This is an argument against the point I made, and that is generally made by writers on the subject of baptism, that it gives to the obedient believer an assurance of the remission of his sins. While it is true that the believer knows, in a measure, his own subjective condition, yet it is equally true that this whole subject being new to him, and he being without experience and training in Christian thought and doctrine is, during the period of his transition from darkness to light, in a state of anxious doubt and uncertainty. And that when he has been led forward by the preacher to commit himself in the act of baptism, he shows afterwards a grateful confidence and an "assurance" that manifests itself in his conversation, and in the very glow of his face. The experience and observation of preachers generally, I believe, will attest the truth of these things, Bro. B. to the contrary notwithstanding.

10. If pardon is the act of the mind of God it cannot be a matter of psychological experience on the part of a sinner.

This is said in reply to a clause quoted by Bro. B. from a sentence of mine. That clause is this: "Actual remission of sins is a psychological fact and involves psychological experience." The sentence from which this clause is extracted, and the sentence next following it reads thus:

"Actual remission of sins is a psychological fact and involves psychological experience, a moral experience in spiritual natures resulting in a moral cause and a moral effect. Repentance produced by the gospel of Christ in the sinner as a cause is followed by forgiveness in the Father's heart as the effect."

Taking the above single short clause out of its contextual connections, and placing on it a meaning contrary to the teaching of the whole body of my article I suppose is what Bro. B. means by playing the part of a "scrap-doctor."

11. Does the passage (Acts 10:43) mean one thing to Bro. Jones, giving him assurance that sins are pardoned before baptism, and another thing to the penitent sinner, leving him without assurance till he is baptized?

The passage when clearly understood, I think, teaches the actual remission of sins to the believer; and baptism, when the subject is clearly understood, declares the formal remission of sins. The necessity of this "assurance" to the novice is explained in item 9 above.

12. One passage is conceded to teach one thing and another passage a contrary thing.

Not at all. One passage teaches the actual remission of sins, and the other the the formal remission, but there is nothing "contrary" in all this.

13. The phrase through his name is certainly not a meaningless appendage to the passage. It involves the whole gospel system, including baptism.

I fully agree with Bro. B. that the expression "through his name" is not meaningless. But to strain and tug at that phrase, trying to stretch it to cover baptism, as it appears to me will strike the minds of all broad, scholarly thinkers as a remarkable instance of "special pleading."

"To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth on him shall receive remission of sins." This passage, I take it, declares simply and plainly that the prophets bear witness that God will, through Christ, forgive all who put their trust in him. Without quoting other authorities, at present, I give the note of B. W. Johnson on this passage as found in his commentary:

"Three important facts are stated:

"(1) That remission of sins is in the name of Christ; (2) that it is only granted on condition of belief upon him, that is, trust in his name; (3) that whosoever believes this, Jew or Gentile, shall receive remission of sins."

Bro. B.'s suggestions about "inductive" reasoning and "Hebraism" are accepted, but I see nothing in them to make against the position held as to actual and formal remission of sins.

Our Budget.

—WANTED:
An offering for Church Extension.

—"By whom?"
By the Church Extension Board.

—"What for?"
For the aid of homeless churches.

—"When?"
On the first Sunday in September.

—"How much?"
Not less than fifteen thousand dollars.

—"How much is wanted from me?"
All that you can consistently give.

—"Where shall I send it?"
To G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., Kansas City, Missouri.

—"All right; here's my cheque for, for, for——."
For how much did you say?

—"O, well, see G. W. Muckley's report at the Jubilee Convention, in October, for reply."

—All right. G. W. Muckley's report at the Jubilee Convention will be a good one, and we shall expect to see your name, or that of your church, there as one of the liberal contributors to this important fund.

—For the week ending Aug. 17th, 1899, the receipts for Foreign Missions amounted to $1,130.11, or a gain of $454.88 over the corresponding week, 1898 The total receipts now amount to $128,870.33, or a gain of $9,966.51 over the corresponding time, 1898. We must receive $21,129.67 by Sept. 30th if we reach the $150,000 this year.

—The tenth annual catalogue of Cotner University with announcements for 1899–1900 presents splendid opportunities to the young men of the Northwest who are desirous of obtaining a Christian education, or an education under Christian surroundings and influences. See also statement in our college number last week.

—In commenting upon Dr. J. R. Graves' denominational definition of "the kingdom of heaven," the Religious Herald, Richmond, Va., says:

The idea of limiting "the kingdom of heaven" to Baptist churches is nothing less than preposterous. It is precisely this species of denominationalism which discredits those who exemplify it, and which imperils the success of true and fundamental Baptist tenets.

Good! And now that the Herald has come to see the folly of trying to crowd the kingdom of heaven into the Baptist Church, we hope that its eyes will soon be opened to the equally ludicrous attempt at crowding the Baptist Church or fundamental Baptist tenets, as such, into the kingdom of heaven. There can be no sectarianism in the kingdom of heaven. A house divided against itself cannot stand.

—Before any letters were sent out by the board, churches sent in for literature. This never occurred before. It shows a wide interest in this work.

That man may last, but never lives,
Who much receives, but nothing gives;
Whom none can love, whom none can thank,
Creation's blot, creation's blank.
—G. W. M.

—"And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel that they take for me an offering; from every man that giveth it willingly in his heart ye shall take my offering. And let them make me a sanctuary that I may dwell among them" (Ex. 25:1, 2, 8).

—The Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations of the State University, Columbia, Missouri, have just published the annual Handbook for New Students. This little book contains minute directions to the new students as to boarding houses, entering school, etc. It is invaluable to boys and girls who are entire strangers in Columbia, and unfamiliar with the management of a large institution. Any boy or girl in the country who is expecting or even contemplating entering the University, should write for one of these books. Address all letters to General Secretary Y. M. C. A., Columbia, Missouri, and they will receive prompt and careful consideration.

—The Disciples of Christ in Ontario, Canada, have a college at St. Thomas, to which they ask the interest, patronage and support of the brethren. A copy of the catalogue for 1899-1900 has just reached our table and gives evidence of a school of great usefulness and promise. The argument on the need of the school is as strong as it is unique. It rests on the law of self-preservation. The young men of Canada sent to the United States to be educated are too disposed to remain here. The St. Thomas Christian College is an attempt to prevent this loss to the Churches of Christ in Canada.

—Benj. L. Smith, Cor. Sec. A. C. M. S. Cincinnati, Ohio, spent last Wednesday in this city in the interest of Home Missions. He and his assistant secretary, C. C. Smith, are bending every energy to reach the $100,000 mark before the Jubilee Convention, in October. The amount now in hand almost doubles the highest high water mark of any previous year in the half century of the society's existence. The receipts for the first two weeks in August were $3,860.55, being a gain of $2 895.87.

—D. N. Gillett, recently called to preach for the church in Tuxedo, St. Louis Co., Mo., but a suburb of St. Louis, makes the fifth preacher St. Louis has called out of Iowa, and from Drake University. D. R. Dungan, pastor of Mount Cabanne, was the first dean of the Bible department of that institution, and held the position until he was called to the presidency of Cotner. E. M. Smith, for five years the pastor of Beulah, is a graduate of Drake, as is also F. C. Aldinger, the new pastor of Beulah; likewise E. T. McFarland, pastor of the Fourth Church, and D. N. Gillett, now at Tuxedo. It now looks as if St. Louis intended making Des Moines one of its suburbs in the near future.

—For a dime you can get a picture of Music Hall or Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, with the time and place of the Jubilee Convention printed below, for advertising purposes. Address Geo. A. Miller, Central Christian Church, 9th St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

—The special numbers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST issued during the past and present months have compelled us to withhold a large amount of correspondence and some excellent articles from our columns, but we shall now try to accommodate our correspondents as rapidly as possible. We have given liberal space to our various missionary and educational interests because of their importance, and trust that the Lord will bless the things said to the increase of his kingdom on this earth. The progress of the church is limited to its interest in missionary work, but we shall not be unmindful of the wish of our readers to be heard upon other things and themes. The accumulated copy will be absorbed as rapidly as a wise use of our space will permit.

—The American Home Missionary for July is devoted very largely to a discussion and defense of the merits of Children's Day for Home Missions, which is to be the Sunday before Thanksgiving.

—We give most of our Family Circle space, this paper, to an illustrated article selected by G. W. Muckley and requested for publication in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST because of its bearing on Church Extension work. It is an interesting bit of history.

—What seems to be an educational step of great importance has just been taken by the Southern Methodist Church, of Missouri. All of their schools in the state, it is said, are to be correlated to the one at Fulton, known as Central College. It is said that there were no fewer than ten chartered colleges belonging to this religious body in Missouri, all conferring degrees and all claiming to do the highest collegiate work. Under the new system there is to be but one college of high grade work for the entire state. All others are to be academies and to fit students for the freshman or sophomore classes of Central College. This is one kind of consolidation that seems to be wise, urgent and practicable and the movement worthy of emulation by religious bodies other than the M. E. Church South.

—In last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST appeared on the last page an attractive advertisement of the opening of a school of suggestive therapeutics, at Parsons, Kansas, by W. E. Harlow and Dr. John Tinder. Bro. Harlow has been known to us and to our readers for some time as one of our successful evangelists. Bro. Harlow states that he has no intention of abandoning the ministry for this school, but believes that with the school he, with his associate, Dr. Tinder, can render a more useful service to his fellowman. Of this we cannot say, but of their sincerity we have not the slightest doubt, and for this reason we commend their claims to the careful consideration of our readers.

—Hotel Emery will be headquarters of the churches of Western Pennsylvania during the Jubilee Convention, Cincinnati, October 13-20.

—The C. T. Association will grant one fare to the Jubilee Convention, Cincinnati, October 13-20. The W. P. Association will grant at least one and one-third fare.

—The Jubilee Convention committee, Cincinnati, O., says that every mail brings requests for assignment in homes during the convention. Send all such requests to Geo. A. Miller, Central Christian Church, 9th St., Cincinnati, O.

—Over one thousand citizens of the United States, two thousand Englishmen and about one thousand German and French citizens will be directly affected by the new order of things in Japan by which extra-territoriality disappears and foreign residents are made subject to the laws and business regulations of that empire.

—The poem written by Laurene Highfield, Quincy, Ill., entitled "God Knows," published in our Family Circle last week, is one of unusual merit, It will bear repeated reading.

—One of the indications of the increasing popularity of the Christian religion may be seen in the increasing space allotted to church news, Bible-school lessons and religious matters in general in secular papers. The Sunday Examiner, San Francisco, Cal., has opened a Bible class department under the superintendency of the Rev. G. B. Allen which is not without interest and seemingly popular.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST knows of a deserving orphan girl of 16 years who would like to find a home in a Christian family. Any letters sent to this office will be placed in the hands of one who can give further information.

—The 16th of September, 1893 was an historic day. The picture on our first page this week is a representation of an actual occurrence, The man on horseback represents E. F. Boggess, then pastor of the Christian Church at Guthrie, and president of the territorial board of Oklahoma. By arrangement of the Board of Church Extension he secured a horse and at the signal for all to start he began the race, heading his horse toward Perry, where he secured the best church lot in town, on which we now have a splendid building with a good congregation. He secured church lots in other towns, and we are now the leading religious body of the Strip. This movement cost our Board only $247, but quite a number of valuable locations in county-seat, college and railroad towns were secured. Our people have the best house in Perry, the capital of the Strip. Who said that the Disciples are always behind? We are not.

—The Palace Hotel and Hotel Emery will be Missouri headquarters at the Jubilee Convention, Cincinnati, O., October 13-20.

—A church building gives influence to a congregation. As long as a band of people have no church property they are regarded as a side issue.

—The way our Extension Board entered the Cherokee Strip, as described in other pages of this issue, and on the first page of cover, alone commends this board to the brotherhood.

—Unless a man is unusually eloquent he will have small audiences in halls. The unconverted will not climb up a dirty, dingy flight of stairs and sit on uncomfortable benches when there are comfortable churches in sight in the same town.

—William E. Curtis, in the Chicago Record, Aug. 10, devotes a column and a half to an account of "sacred relics," chiefly at Treves, "declared authentic by popes." We do not see how a pope's declaration can carry weight on such matters without an abstract of title, and if the record concerning a single article worn or touched by Christ is in existence and absolutely correct—authentic—we do not see why the record is not presented in evidence instead of the pope's declarations. There seems to be a renewed effort at work in Europe to stop the decadence of Roman Catholicism by an appeal to sacred relics and bleeding, moving, healing images, even of paintings on canvas, of which much is getting into public print of late.

—The Oregon Short Line R. R. has just issued an illustrated magazine on the Yellowstone Park, which for beauty in the printer's art would be difficult to excel. The large pictures of some of the most wonderful scenes of nature to be found in the world are shown in this magazine in beautiful colors, and for impressiveness almost rank with the canvas, touched by a master hand. The smaller cuts and type matter are in different tints and give a pleasing contrast to the eye. Every page, in fact, is so embellished and picturesque that the eye is loath to leave one for another. If you want to see and feel more of the wonders of nature in this park and how and when to visit it, send to D. E. Burley, General Passenger Agent, Salt Lake City, Utah, for a copy of this beautiful magazine of information and views.

—All honest and thoughtful minds outside the Catholic Church are now turned towards Rome. Well-informed Pretestants and even atheists, recognize the fact that the Catholic Church over the world is engaged in doing all that is good for the human race. In every movement for the betterment and enlightenment of the people the Catholic Church takes the lead. Especially is this so in education. The most eminent educators of this as well as other countries recognize this fact.

In reply to the above opening statements of a lengthy editorial in a recent number of the Catholic News, New York, we in our astonishment can only say, "How can these things be?" That the Catholics have some fine scholars and schools in the world is not questioned, but to say that the Catholic Church is "doing all that is good for the human race" and that "in every movement for the betterment and enlightenment of the people the Catholic Church takes the lead" is to contradict history. Archbishop Ireland himself says that the poor both in and out of the church in America, where Roman Catholicism is not in the lead, are one hundred per cent. more intelligent than in the Old World, the countries entirely dominated by Roman Catholicism not excepted. But for audacious assertions and claims we have no doubt but that the palm of leadership rightly belongs to the Roman Catholic Church.

—The New York Observer gives the following as an illustration of the different ways by which various important passages of Scripture may be interpreted:

A boy who, on departing for church one Sunday, was given by his father a five-cent piece, and also a quarter, with the information that he could put either the one or the other into the contribution box. On the boy's return from church he was asked which coin he had contributed. He explained that the preacher had said that the Lord loveth a cheerful giver, and, added the boy, "I knew I could give a nickel a good deal more cheerfully than I could a quarter, so I put the nickel in." We fear a good many people give on that principle, with reference to their own pleasurable sensations, or disguised selfishness, rather than according to the Bible standard, which calls for a giving of oneself with one's gift.

—I wish to express my hearty appreciation and my thanks for your most helpful editorial in this week's CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST on "How to Obtain the Spirit's Fullness." Oh that Christians everywhere might experience such a hunger and thirst for this fullness as would lead them to pay the price for this heavenly gift! I feel the truth of your words, and desire the gift, but how small a pittance do I offer in return! How can we be aroused to pay the full price? May God help you to write many more such inspired and inspiring words!

PERSONAL MENTION.

If S. M. Martin will forward us his address we will forward a letter in our care for him.

Henry C. Canter, of Frankfort, Ind., announces his readiness to hold meetings for churches on easy terms.

W. H. McClain, of this city, delivered two addresses at the 8th district C. E. convention at Bonne Terre, Mo., last week.

For the information of Mr. Belding, of Troy, N. Y., will state that the address of Mrs. Hattie L. Garnett is Cynthiana, Ky.

F. O. Fannon, pastor First Christian Church, this city, has returned from his vacation and is at work with renewed energy in his parish, study and pulpit.

A. M. Harvuot, chairman Jubilee Convention committee, is spending his vacation at Bethany, W. Va. He is gathering strength against the emergencies of October 13-20.

J. D. Johnson, of Canton, Ohio, will attend the yearly meeting of the Disciples of Christ of Washington and Greene counties, Pennsylvania, at Rogersville, September 8-10.

W. B. Young and wife, of this city, have escaped to the mountains of Northwest Arkansas "for the health that is possible in that salubrious atmosphere." His address will be Farmington via Fayetteville, Ark.

W. H. Wagoner announces the folllowing dates for his institute work: Cushing, Mich., Aug. 21-27; Bangor, Aug. 28 to Sept. 3; Benton Harbor, Sept. 4-10; Dowagiac, Sept. 18-24. He reports crowded houses to hear him at Emerald Lake and Excelsior.

H. C. Patterson will remove from Webb City, Mo., to Indianapolis, Ind. The change is made in order to the education of their daughter. Bro. Rogers is to succeed him in the pastorate in Webb City.

Bro. Brooks, of Corinth, Miss., is a very busy man. Between pastoral duties, protracted meetings, writing and other affairs, he, however, finds time to increase the circulation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in his district.

At the Central Illinois Chautauqua Assembly at Mechanicsburg the sermon Sunday morning, Aug. 20, was delivered by Z. T. Sweeney and the afternoon sermon by J. E. Lynn, of Springfield.

Clark Bateman, who recently closed a camp meeting with his people at Storm Lake, Iowa, can be secured for protracted meetings during the fall.

Elmer T. Davis concluded his first year's work with the church in Kansas City, Kan., Aug. 1, with favoroble results. There were 32 additions during the year. The church building he says is to be moved to a more central part of the city and repaired.

W. R. Seytone closed his work at Everton, Ont., and the night before leaving he was waited upon by the brethren and presented with a complimentary address and a purse of money. He may be addressed for meetings or regular work at Buffalo, N. Y.

O. F. McHargue, who has been with the church at Bozeman, Mont., five years, gets leave of absence next spring to visit Palestine. His wife will accompany him. Bro. McHargue is an admirer of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and wishes it was a regular visitor to every family in the Bozeman church.

Leonard G. Thompson and Grant K. Lewis have succeeded Dr. Aylesworth and Mrs. Harbert to the editorship of the Way, a monthly journal published in Denver, Col., by the Pierce Publishing Company. In Leonard G. Thompson the Way will have a strong writer and in the Way Colorado will have a strong paper.

S. A. Strawn, of Owasso, Mich., was recently surprised by a pleasant visit from the officers of his congregation and their wives. Gifts and refreshments indicated the character of the visit. Bro. S. says that the church is growing and their house of worship being improved by a new carpet and chairs for the choir. Bro. S. has indicated his good will and interest it the flock by a kindly written pastoral letter to each member.

The members of the church at Nora Springs, Ia., recently surprised their pastor, W. W. Wharton, with an excellent supper and a beautiful art square, all of which were highly appreciated. Bro. Wharton has resigned at Nora Springs to take effect Oct. 1. He will likely locate at some place farther South. The Nora Springs Juniors, he says, won the district banner for the largest missionary contribution of any Junior C. E. in the third district.

On last Thursday we were favored with a pleasant call by J. N. Dalby, of Sedalia, Mo., and kindly posted up on things in that progressive city. The church is delighted with its pastor, Melvin Putman, successor to J. S. Myers, and is growing under the influence of his sincere, eloquent presentation of Christ and the Christ-life. About $5,000 is being spent this summer in enlarging, repairing and refurnishing the church. The new church, under Bro. Cook's care, in Sedalia, is also prospering.

MACATAWA PERSONALS.

One of the saddest events which has ever occurred at Macatawa was the death, on last Wednesday evening, the 9th inst., of Mrs. H. S. Earl, whose severe illness we have mentioned in these columns. There had been fresh hopes of her recovery a few days prior to her decease, but she sank away at the date mentioned above, gently as a child falling asleep. This, following so soon the death of their youngest son, the news of which had never been told her, made it doubly sad. The funeral services were held in the Auditorium on the following day, and were conducted by the editor of this paper. Bro. Earl, with one of his sons, has returned to Irvington with the body for interment. Sister Earl was a Christian of a meek and quiet spirit. She was a native of Australia, where she was born in 1851, and where she was married to Bro. Earl in 1867. Our profoundest sympathies are with the afflicted husband and children.

J. Z. Tyler is about starting to Nebraska to deliver a series of lectures at Hastings.

F. G. Tyrrell and family leave this week for Chicago. Bro. Tyrrell has spent only one Sunday at the Park this year.

Dr. Collins, of Covington, Ky., is spending another summer here at the Park, accompanied by a Baptist and Methodist minister of the same place.

J. W. Allen and J. H. Garrison preach next Lord's day at Cascade, Mich., about 10 miles east of Grand Rapids, where the church has a "Rally Day."

Dr. Seimaro Kubota, our Japanese brother, who has made his home with Bro. J. Z. Tyler for some time, and who has been spending the summer with him here at the Park, delivers a stereopticon lecture at the Auditorium here this week on "The Empire of the Rising Sun." He gives this lecture in a number of the Michigan churches in the next few weeks. He is preparing to return to Tokio, Japan, where he was baptized by Bro. Stevens, to be a missionary, while he earns his way by dentistry. Bro. K. is a true Christian, and is greatly esteemed by those who know him.

Opening of the Cherokee Strip.*

What struck my imagination most, on hearing the report of Bro. Muckley, was that part referring to the opening of the Cherokee Strip and the agent of the Church Extension Board standing in line with thousands of others at high noon, with his impatient steed ready to run the race. If the Secretary wishes me to suggest to him a trademark which I think will prove a bonanza in Church Extension work, let him have a picture made of a man on horseback running at full speed, with a scroll in his hand bearing the legend, "Church Extension!" When I heard that part of the report I said to the committee appointed to examine the report, of which I was a member, "When before in all our history did we ever do anything half so businesslike as that?"

I have received a postal card since I have been here in Chicago from a brother in the Cherokee Strip, dated "Indian Territory, noon, September 17th," saying: "I have got here; rode twenty-six miles in one hour and forty minutes. Have a splendid piece of rich bottom land, two miles from the city. This is to be a great railroad center!" Now I imagine Bro. Boggess, agent for Church Extension, was along in that crowd, and in that "city" he has already selected lots under the auspices of the Church Extension Board for the building of meeting houses. Now, I call that business and such enterprise in religion as we have never had any illustration of before in our history, so far as I know. It used to be said that when a new town was settled in the West the first man there after the real estate agent was a Methodist circuit rider with his saddlebags, and in them the Bible and hymn book. A shrewd observer once remarked, somewhat irreverently, that if he could put Campbellism into the running-gears of Methodism, he would convert the world! He only meant that if he could take the pure gospel of Jesus Christ, as we preach it, and run it on pure business principles, the whole world would soon be converted. It seems to me now we are getting into "running-gears," and I believe this business enterprise in religion means that the kingdom is coming and that we are entering upon a new era of church activity. More business in our religion will soon mean more religion in our business. This incident is to me one of the morning stars, ushering in the day when Christians shall seek first the kingdom of God and make it their chief concern to extend its dominion over all the earth.

*Stenographic report of address made at National Convention of 1893 by the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Where Shall We Build?

Church Extension is the business end of our missionary labors; it is tangible and permanent; the "leaven hid in the meal;" the "mustard seed sown in the community;" the earnest of a church building; the Homœpathic pill that breaks up the fever of financial doubt and darkness and ushers in the hopefulness of success; the antidote that breaks up the anæsthesia of indifference.

The conflict between "money and the kingdom" has reached a stage where oratorical fireworks and rhetorical bombast will not suffice.

The need of the hour is a calm, candid and prayerful consideration of our means, compared with our opportunities. Twenty-seven hundred homeless congregations appeals to the church in eloquence which must not be unheeded. Eighteen hundred of these are lifting pleading, helpless hands to our Church Extension Board for help, and only 500 of the requests having been granted in ten long years, only 50 per year, and then 950 organizations have sprung into existence in the last two years. At this rate how long will it take to house all our children.

The Lord help the churches to celebrate the Jubilee Convention with the full $250,000, so we can set our faces for $1,000,000, and like the Catholic priest, of Texas, we can say it is no longer a question with us, Can we build? but where shall we build?

E. F. BOGGES.

Important Notice to Illinois Delegates.

The Palace Hotel has been chosen as Illinois headquarters during the Jubilee Convention October 13-20. The Palace is one of the largest hotels in Cincinnati and in location is the nearest large hotel to Music Hall.

The hotel has three street fronts and very wide courts, making its rooms exceptionally pleasant. We have secured the very low rate of $1.00 a day for room or $2.00 a day for room and meals, with 10 per cent. off if guests remain full seven days. Being offered at this low rate we are afraid that the limited number of rooms reserved for Illinois will not be sufficient to supply the demand. The best we can do is to let first come be first served. The advantages of entertainment at a first-class hotel so centrally located are obvious to all, especially so when the rate is only a very little above the cost of entertainment at private homes.

If you desire accommodations at the Palace at rates above named, send your names at once to W. H. Maxwell, Manager Palace Hotel, Cincinnati, Ohio, and also to J. E. Lynn, Springfield, Illinois.

Give your personal attention to this at once if you desire to get a room at the state headquarters with your neighbors.

KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES PROMPTLY CURED.

A Sample Bottle Sent Free by Mail.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the wonderful new discovery in medical science, fulfills every wish in promptly curing kidney, bladder and uric acid troubles, rheumatism and pain in the back. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells about it and its great cures, both sent absolutely free by mail, address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention that you read this generous offer in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Items from New York.

The West 56th St. Church in this city, since Bro. Payne left in June, has had the pulpit ably supplied by Bro. Moore, whose sermons are logical and practical.

Bro. Willis, of our 169th St. Church, continues his faithful work, which is influencing for good the surrounding community.

The pastor of our 119th St. Church, Bro. Philputt, sailed for Europe in June, as his health demanded vacation and rest. A few years ago Bro. Philputt began the herculean task of building up a church in the vicinity of where the 119th St. Church now stands. Year in and year out with untiring zeal and perfect trust in God did this consecrated minister labor to win souls for the kingdom and almost entirely by his unfailing, persistent, Christlike efforts has he succeeded in building up one of the most spiritual memberships among our churches. The Lord has richly blessed his ceaseless labors, and he has, to greatly encourage him, a most devoted band of Christian workers, who are in unison as one person with their minister, for striving to uplift humanity in this great city and bringing souls to Christ. During the pastor's absence, Bro. Colston and Bro. A. Flower have been preaching of Lord's days.

Although it is midsummer, when many of the churches here are closed till fall, the church work is nobly carried on by those specially fitted for the various departments. The Junior Endeavor attendance averages forty, though many are away for their vacation.

The Sunday-school is well kept up and made especially interesting by their superintendent, who is an earnest, wide-awake young man.

Almost one hundred Christian Endeavors meet regularly every Lord's day evening and the spiritual meetings are enjoyed.

The United Christian Endeavor Societies of Greater New York were represented in Bro. Philputt's church recently when "The Echoes from Detroit," were given; and although the church is large all could not get in.

The decorations were beautiful, the singing and speaking were truly sweet echoes from the great convention.

The successful work that has been accomplished in this great metropolis by our various churches plainly shows to each and every Christian worker the vast need of many more consecrated congregations, each one doing their part to spread the gospel and save souls.

WORTHY TO SPEAK AND BE HEARD.

Some men speak without first thinking, but this could not be said of those whose productions we print below. Some men are heard because of their experience of long years. What W. T. Moore says of England reminds us that the Metropolitan Chapel Committee of the Methodists of London, England, had at its disposal, early in their work, an Extension Fund, for London work only, of $500,000. One man, Sir Francis Lycett, gave $250,000 of that amount. Here we are, nearly one million strong, with 9,000 organizations, striving to raise $250,000 by the close of 1900. Let us hear opinions on this subject of our Church Extension work and its crying needs from men who have studied all questions pertaining to the advancement of our plea. They should not be heard for their sakes, but for the sake of 2,700 homeless Disciples of Christ. G. W. MUCKLEY, Cor. Sec.

Church Extension.

Practical Christianity is the only kind that is worth anything. The main thing, therefore, is to find out the best way to be practical in all our efforts to advance the cause of Christ. Even liberal giving may amount to very little. We must give wisely, or else our giving may be little more than dissipation.

Of all our church enterprises the Church Extension Fund seems to me to be the most practical. Its usefulness is no doubt very generally recognized, so far as it may be employed in developing new territory; but I have an impression that many will regard it as unnecessary in old, settled communities. But my own experience has made it evident that the "Extension Fund" may be used to the very best advantage where the cause is already well established. Of course, it is at once conceded that it may be of the greatest practical benefit in pioneer work; but this fact only illustrates the breadth of the principle which underlies its operations.

My long residence in England, and close contact with the work there, taught me the importance of the "Church Extension Fund." I give it as my deliberate conviction that our work in England could have been advanced five hundred per cent. during the last twenty years if we had had a liberal fund of this kind at our disposal.

I am not now dealing with figures. Other writers can furnish these. I simply want to say as emphatically as the matter can be put in words that our Jubilee Convention can provide for nothing that can promise so much as a large increase of our "Church Extension Fund." It ought to reach five hundred thousand dollars in the near future, and the contribution of the churches this year should be an assurance that the sum of five hundred thousand dollars is practically in sight.

No More Important Work.

There is no more important work before the brotherhood than that of the Board of the Church Extension. What great good will come from the enlistment of 100,000 persons in the service of Christ, this year, if they are left without care? When enlisted they are but spiritual babes. They must be organized, disciplined, housed. The latter is the work of the Board of Church Extension. At least a quarter of a million of dollars ought to be in the hands of this Board within the next eighteen months. The September collection must be made an important step toward this result. There are 2,700 homeless missions among the Disciples of Christ. Not less than 1,800 congregations have applied to the Board of Church Extension for assistance during the last ten years. The Board has been able to render assistance to only 500. Do we owe nothing to the Board? During the last two years 950 congregations have been organized. Of this number 550 were not able to build houses of worship without outside assistance. It is the business of the Board of Church Extension to give aid to such congregations—IT IS OUR PRIVILEGE TO PLACE THE MEANS IN THE HANDS OF THE BOARD. Will we do so?

There are 127 Home Missionary Societies among the Disciples of Christ. They are sending evangelists to the North, to the South, to the East and to the West. They are enlisting men and women under Christ by the thousand. In this glorious work we all rejoice. But what shall become of these new recruits? Will we assist them in securing houses in which to study the Word, keep the divinely appointed odinances, worship God? Do not forget that where there are 127 Home Missionary Societies, actively and successfully at work, there is only one Board of Church Extension. The question now before us is: Will we place means in the hands of this one Board that it may make permanent the good work accomplished by the evangelists sent out and sustained by these societies? Remember the Board of Church Extension and its needs. Jesus sits over against the treasury.

B. B. TYLER.

That Quarter of a Million.

What quarter of a million? Why, that which we have determined to raise for Church Extension by the close of the year 1900. How much do we lack of having this amount? About $55,000. How much of this can we safely leave to raise next year? Not over $40,000. How much does this leave for us to secure in the September offering? $15,000, if my arithmetic is not wrong. We must raise this amount, my brethren, and assure the completion of the task we have set ourselves.

The raising of this $15,000 at our September offering means the immediate helping of from thirty to fifty churches to build houses of worship, the average loan being from three to five hundred dollars. Remember that we have 2,700 homeless congregations, a large proportion of which are unable to build without assistance. Remember that 1,800 of these have applied to our Board during the last ten years, and that we have been able to assist less than five hundred of them. We have organized 950 churches during the last five years, and of these 450 are without church homes and are unable to build alone. They will languish and die, some of them at least, if they are not aided soon. Including our national, state and district societies we have 127 Home Mission organizations sending out evangelists to bring men to Christ. We have but one organization to assist these new converts to provide them homes. Will you not help it to do this much-needed work?

The first Sunday in September is the time. Begin at once to prepare for the offering, and let it be such an one as will rejoice the hearts of the struggling bands of Disciples who are asking for aid. W. F. RICHARDSON.

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 4, 1889.

A Great Need.

I cannot see how any one can face the fact that our people are every year organizing just twice as many churches as can get for themselves houses of worship to meet in without an instant appreciation of the necessity of our Church Extension work, and a prompt increase of zeal and liberality in its behalf.

Either one-half of our new congregations must go homeless or else the fund for aiding to put a roof over their heads must be greatly enlarged. Their only hope is in some such outside help. They are doomed to the paralysis of perpetual houselessness without it.

Are we willing to look upon such a condition with folded arms? Does it not appeal to a sense of obligation within us? Are we not conscious of a great responsibility in regard to it? I believe we are, and that in consequence this supremely necessary work among us is destined to grow into large proportions in the near future. Instead of building less than one hundred churches a year by the aid of our Church Extension Fund we ought to be building five hundred. And even then we should be but providing for the present rate of increase among our churches. Even then it would require something like twenty-five years to catch up with the present demands of the work. For we have now more than two thousand unhoused congregations that must remain unhoused unless this fund enables them to build.

If we appreciate the value of our own houses of worship, in enabling us to push God's work in the world, then we know how helpless these homeless mission churches must be. If we understand how much a church building gives permanency and stability to our cause in any community, then we know of what good stuff these houseless congregations must be made to hold fast and endure in the presence of a lack so terrible.

From every point of view we need and ought to have the first Sunday in September the best offering for Church Extension ever made among us. GEO. DARSIE.

Frankfort, Ky.

Far Reaching in Results.

None of our missionary enterprises are further reaching in their work or none deserving of a more liberal support than Church Extension. Including district, state and national societies we have 127 missionary boards sending out evangelists. Less than one-half the new churches organized by our workers are able to build church houses without outside help. Here are these men constantly at work evangelizing with only one society with one collection a year to furnish the necessary loan to these new churches. Without church houses they soon break up and without the Church Extension Board they must go without a house. Is it not a criminally neglectful policy that would ask this Board to do with a meagre collection? Our 2,700 homeless missions plead with the eloquence born of despair for us to come to the rescue. For lack of funds our Board can aid, even in a meagre way, but one out of four that ask for help. A permanent fund of $250,000 is a small amount to ask for by the close of this mighty century. Loans are made only to such congregations as are not able to borrow money on the ground. Begin now to plan for a large collection the first Sunday in September for this most deserving fund. Our Jubilee Convention will be marred without it. Put business into your Christianity. M. E. HARLAN.

Worthy of Rousing Words.

Church Extension is worthy of "rousing" words. A thing doesn't have to be "fifty" years old before we can jubilate over it; and while the Church Extension is too young to be a legitmate part of the the great Jubilee Convention, we can take it there and jubilate over it anyhow. Its record through these brief years of its existence is its plea for life and place. What it has done is but a fractional part of what it has been called upon to do; but the multiplied, unmeasured calls are the reasons for its enlargement and expansion. We become so enthused over Home and Foreign Missions that we often neglect Church Extension, or give it but a small fraction of our attention; and to my mind, if we properly understood our situation Home Missions, at least five times out of ten, would be spelled and pronounced, C-h-u-r-c-h E-x-t-e-n-s-i-o-n.

About as pitiable a picture as one would wish to see is that of a husband with wife and lots of children without a house in which to dwell. And about as pretty a picture as one would wish to see is that of some kind, generous philanthropist, noting the houseless condition of this husband, wife and children, at once sets about to build them a home. That is our picture, ladies and gentlemen, and this is the faithful portraiture of Church Extension. In the last two years there have been organized over 400 congregations for which men builded no church homes. True, by the aid of Church Extension and other aid we housed over 500 other organizations; but think of the 400 houseless ones and let them plead for Church Extension. Forget not the September offering, then, and let it be something worthy of this great cause. WALLACE THARP.

Opening of the Cherokee Strip.

How the Board of Church Extension Entered the Cherokee Strip.

When the Board learned how the Cherokee Strip was to be opened up on Sept. 16, 1893, arrangements were made to go in at once and possess the land. J. H. Hardin was at that time corresponding secretary of the American Society and gave the hint to the secretary of the Church Extension Board that the Strip was to be opened up and how it was to be opened. I at once presented the matter to the Board and we arranged with E. F. Boggess, then pastor of our church at Guthrie, to train a horse and make the run into the Strip. We told him we would fill his pulpit, so that for a month or two, if necessary, he could devote his entire time to getting church lots in the leading college, railroad and county-seat towns of the Strip.

The arrangement was made by the government that those desiring farms and lots in towns could run in and the first to come should be possessor. At 12 o'clock, noon, on Sept. 16th, 1893, a government officer was to fire off a gun, which was to be a signal for all to start. We instructed Bro. Boggess to get a a horse by renting, borrowing or buying, at our expense—get a good one at any reasonable cost—and train that horse to start to run at the crack of a gun and station himself astride the horse at the most favorable point so he could run in the quickest possible time to Perry, which was to be the capital of the Strip and get a church lot for the Christian Church. He did as instructed and we will now let him tell in the following article, how he did it.

Before reading his article it is pertinent to say that he was to stay on the ground and help the Board get lots elsewhere. The Board had also sent out notices through our religious press and otherwise to Disciples who should be going into the Strip to be on the lookout for Bro. Boggess and help him get good locations and organizations at once. As a result we are now the leading religious body in the Strip, and by this movement we are now shaping the religious thought of the Strip, and it cost our Board only a little over $200. It pays to go into new towns early. You get the best locations and you get lot and house for what the lot alone will cost in future years, and also get the advantage of the first good will in giving for the first church building.

We give here a list of the important towns which our Board has possessed for our plea by this movement and by loans before and since the run made by Bro. Boggess.

List of Loans Made in Oklahoma Territory by the Board of Church Extension, A. C. M. S.

Guthrie, O. T., County-seat and Capital of Territory	$1,000
Norman, O. T., County-seat and Seat of Territorial University	500
Kingfisher, O. T., County-seat	500
El Reno " "	650
Oklahoma City " "	1,000
Perry " "	750
Downs " "	100
Seward " "	200
Enid " "	400
Blackwater " "	500
Shawnee " "	300
Stillwater " "	400
Chandler " "	500
Orlando " "	350
Fourteen loans, aggregating	$7,150

It will be observed that nine of the fourteen churches aided in the territory are in county-seat towns, one of which is also the capital of the territory, and that the Territorial University is located at another. All the important towns in this rapidly growing country are represented in this list, and all are railroad towns. Several of the loans made have been returned to our treasury and everything indicates that without the timely aid extended we would not have so completely occupied this new country.

Entrance Into the Cherokee Strip.

September 16, 1893! Historic day! Awful day! When will the events of that day be recorded and its disappointments made known?

For 200 miles on either side of the "promised land" people had been congregating for months, and for ten days there had been intense excitement, bustle and stir at the government booths. Everybody was there. Every state in the Union was represented; also three countries outside the Union. As a man cannot see everything at once, I shall only give a few observations from Orlando and Perry, as I started from Orlando and ran to Perry.

By eleven o'clock two trains had arrived at Orlando, Oklahoma, and stood side by side, each composed of ten coaches. Here, one-half mile from the Strip line, they were unloaded and a United States marshal placed at each door. When, presently, the refilling began, each person was anxious about the first division, but soon saw that this was no time for debate. This was one of the times when everybody wanted to be on the first train. The coaches were packed like boxes of sardines. They were loaded on top. The rods under them were alive with people. They stood on every projection and crowded into every opening. The engines were loaded—cab, pilot, footboards, tender and all. It seemed that there was hardly a place for the smoke to come out, so densely were the people crowded on. At the line thousands were waiting to get on the first train, but were only reminded that the trains were loaded down until not another could hang on.

It was passed along the anxious line that the farthest away should be first and the nearest the land should be last to enter. As far as the eye could see on either side groups of anxious people gathered, with their vehicles of every description, on the high point looking over the forbidden line to the "promised land." At twelve the gun was to be fired as a signal to enter. At a few minutes past eleven the people began to grow nervous. Every horse's head was pressing the inside of the neutral ground. The horseman sat erect in his saddle, whip in hand, spur raised, waiting the signal. All at once, "Bang!" goes a gun. The whip falls. The spur presses the tender flesh. The mustang and blooded horse spring foreward over the line. The engine moves. The race is on and one hundred and fifty thousand people are in the rush of life. Fifty-eight miles apart the lines broke, and in one hour's time 7,000 pieces of land were staked. Where at twelve o'clock there was not a single legal landholder, one hour later is a populous country, with cities of from three hundred to twenty-five thousand.

My horse was a swift one and, having been trained for the race, reached the government town site of Perry, the capital of the Strip, just thirty-nine minutes from the starting-point. I arrived ahead of the first train, and when my horse swung down the hill on the home-stretch for the city, lo! a city already staked—a city staked by "sooners." The first thing I did was to select a beautiful lot, stake my horse, go to the corner and step it off and sit down. A man came along and asked me what I was doing. I said, "I am holding this lot, sir, for the First Christian Church of Perry." "Well, then," he said, "you had better get out of the street." I staked again and drove my pin, stepped this lot off straight, and when I got back a fellow who had come in on the train was sitting near my horse. I said, "Sir, what are you doing here?" "Holding my lot, sir," he replied. "When did you come?" I asked. He coolly replied, "I was here on the other end of this lot when you came here." "Well," I said, "I will just stay with you." It was not very pleasant staying, so I left. By this time you could not tell where you were. Almost every square rod of ground had a stake on it, and some one claimed the right to possess it in strong terms. A man from Guthrie had staked a lot and another fellow had gotten on it in some way and laid claim to it. The Guthrie man said, "What will you take to get off my lot?" The man replied, "One hundred and fifty dollars." The money was paid over and in a few hours the man found that he had paid the fellow one hundred and fifty dollars to get off of the government acre. This is only one of the many disappointments.

One example of the rough element is seen in the fact that one saloon—and this is only one of the many, as Perry had 128 places where whisky was sold—took in the first Sunday $1,726 as one day's receipts. I have never felt the need of Church Extension so badly as in these magic towns. It was impossible to do anything in such a Babel. A splendid lot was finally bargained for and purchased, a tabernacle built upon it, and some sixty persons banded together temporarily. In the course of a year and a half, through a loan of $750 from our Extension Board, our people possessed the best church building in Perry and now have the strongest church in town. Similar efforts were made elsewhere and at once. As a result of this early movement, and by aid in loans from the Church Extension Fund, we now have good churches in the following towns: Blackwell, Chandler, Downs, El Reno, Enid, Kingfisher, Oklahoma City, Perry, Seward, Shawnee and Stillwater. Guthrie and Norman had their buildings before the run, being also aided by the Church Extension Board.

This timely work could not have been done but for aid from our enterprising Church Extension Board. Would that we had entered Oklahoma the same way! It cost us $1,000 for a lot in Guthrie, whereas we could have had it for $25 or $100 if we had gone in at the opening, and would to-day be the possessors of many more church lots and church houses at one-tenth the cost. Would any church or individual possessed of means, great or small, refuse to put money into the hands of so enterprising a board as our Board of Church Extension? Oklahoma is developing rapidly. It will demand that the work of the church keep pace with all other enterprises. The Lord only knows what our strength will be if we take care of what he places in our hands.

The harvest is white and we pray for workers. Future days alone will prove the wisdom of the Board in this opportune movement. Let the churches sanction this Board's work by liberal offerings this Jubilee Year.

Dear Brother:—I deem it an exalted privilege to tell you how much good your Board did us in granting a loan that made it possible for us to complete our building here. We cannot say enough in praise of the building fund of our brotherhood. It has been the means of helping hundreds of churches to a home. We are now looking forward to the collection in September. Any church that refuses to contribute to this fund will die. E. M. Carr.

What State Secretaries Say of Church Extension.

It is well known that our Board of Church Extension does not loan the money in its care by any slipshod methods. The corresponding secretary has the widest acquaintance with our people—especially with our state secretaries and state boards. A church in any state is aided only after careful investigation. Loans are made in the different states generally by the recommendation of the state boards and by the American Society. These state secretaries stand close to the needs of the mission churches. They know full well that newly organized churches need homes.

How Church Extension Saved Platteville, Wisconsin.

The debt had crushed the life out of the congregation. The membership had dwindled from about 100 to 18. The debt was growing every year.

Once all members but one were in favor of abandoning the meetings. Our State Board came to their relief. Bro. John Robertson, now of Colorado, who held the note, offered to remit more than half if the balance, $1,200, could be paid in 90 days.

This was provided in various ways, but some of the pledges will not be due until next October, some later yet. How to get it paid in 90 days perplexed us.

Here the Church Extension Board consented to advance the money pledged to our State Board, taking proper security. Bro. Robertson was satisfied, the debt was paid, the mortgage released and Platteville is already assuming a hopeful outlook.

The future is bright. Without the help of the Church Extension Board our cause in this prosperous little city would be lost.

There are churches in Wisconsin which would not be there but for Church Extension. There are some that would have been lost to us but for the Church Exfension Fund.

There will be others yet to build that will find it necessary to get help from the Church Extensfon Fund. That fund is a good thing, should be perpetuated and increased. Every church in Wisconsin should make it an offering this year.

C. G. MCNEILL,
Cor. Sec. and State Missionary.

Church Extension in Mississippi.

The first Lord's day in September is Church Extension Day. We have $20,000 worth of churches in Mississippi, that the Church Extension helped us to get. Other brethren sent in the money and it was loaned to us on low interest and easy terms. Let no pastor or elder fail to see that a liberal offering is taken up for Church Extension on the first Lord's day in September. Send the money to G. W. Muckley, 600 Waterworks Building, Kansas City, Mo.

JOHN A. STEVENS, State Evangelist.

Church Extension in Tennessee.

Every congregation of Disciples of Christ able to help others to erect church buildings should send an offering the first Lord's day in September. The Board has helped the following places in Tennessee: Tullahoma, Jasper, South Pittsburg, Olive Hill, Howell, Ervin, Walnut St., Chattanooga, Highland Park and the Colored church, Nashville. Others will ask for help in the future. While we cannot under present circumstances use this fund as readily as other states, it should be our earnest desire to help others as far as possible. The fund is doing a good work in many states and the management is anxious to receive $250,000 by the beginning of the new century. This amount can be easily secured if every Disciple will do what genuine love of the cause prompts him to do. We urge the Tennessee churches to do their duty in regard to this offering.

A. I. MYHR, Cor. Sec.

Church Extension in the East.

The congregation at Rockville, Md., received a loan from Church Extension and returned it in full. They are a small band, but contribute to missionary work. The Third Church in Washington, W. J. Wrihgt, minister, by the aid of Church Extension secured a valuable property where they now worship. The church at Joppa, Snow Hill and Goodwill have each been granted a loan.

Some of the advantages of this method are

1. Churches must first help themselves and settle all other debts before they secure help.

2. They help other weak churches by paying back these loans.

3. The churches are helped to clear up their titles. Two of those mentioned above found the title to their lots defective through the investigation of the Church Extension Board's attorney. Since this Board has helped us in time of need, and knowing in other sections there are churches even more needy than we on account of high rates of interest, let every preacher in the district urge upon his congregation a liberal offering for Church Extension the first Lord's day in September. Generous offerings must be made to reach the $250,000 by the close of 1900. As our work grows this fund should grow, for more and more and more churches are needed. Four churches built and building in Maryland this year. Three of them are being helped by Church Extension bsides the help received in Washington. "Lend a hand!"

J. A. HOPKINS, Cor. Sec.

Church Extension Essential.

To praise Church Extension is like praising the sunshine. Both are essential. If we continue to grow we must house our people. In my evangelistic work over the states I find wherever the Church Extension has started the work that it is prosperous. Many congregations now are without houses of worship. Many others will lose their houses unless they are aided by Church Extension. Think of it! one hundred congregations in Oklahoma, and very few of them have houses. Let us work our people up to the white heat of enthusiasm and raise the $250,000 by 1900.

J. V. COOMBS.

Church Extension in Arkansas.

Church building has about kept pace with church organization in Arkansas under the auspices of co-operation. Not one of the new congregations that I can call to mind could have built without the aid of Church Extension. I mention, among the important points that have been helped, Pine Bluff, 18,000 population, a good house; Argenta, or North Little Rock, a very important place, good building; Siloam Springs, a good town, good house; Rogers, a good house; Mena, a new and rapidly growing town, a convenient little house; Gravett a neat, comfortable house; Roe, a good little building; Corning, Arkadelphia, Hot Springs and a number of others. As far as I am able to see, the state mission enterprise would have to almost stop efforts at permanent work, if the help of Church Extension was withdrawn. Every church that has been helped, and every church and individual that is interested in the advance of the Master's kingdom, should make a liberal offering for Church Extension in September, or at any rate, before the close of the year. The year 1900 should see Church Extension reach $250,000. Let us do our part.

E. C. BROWNING.

Church Extension in Louisiana.

Church Extension has met with general favor by our people from the beginning. The need of the fund is so apparent that no argument is needed to make clear its claims. The number of strategic points open to us where strong congregations can be built up if a house of worship can be secured forces the importance of this fund to the front. Many congregations have been housed and made happy through its timely aid. But so many appeals for help knock at its door that only a tithe of the good it might do can be done. In Louisiana we could enter so many places if we only had a house in each place to make permanent the congregation organized. Baton Rouge, the capital of the state, Shreveport, Alexandria, Monroe and many other places of note have no church building. Surely, the needs are great. Bro. G. W. Muckley, so well known by his relation of corresponding secretary to this fund, has set his mark to raise $250,000 by the close of the year 1900. He appeals to me and to you, to all the preachers of our great brotherhood to come up to his help. "In union there is strength." We all preach this doctrine to others. It will be a telling lesson to put it into practice among ourselves. Will you not join hands with Bro. Muckley and in the best way at your command lay the claims of this noble work before your people? The very least that could be expected is that you will tell them about it, thus giving your congregation an opportunity to know what it is and what it is doing. Bro. Pastor, if you will do this much your people can be trusted to do the rest. Let us all pull together and a great work will be done. May the Lord stir up your hearts in behalf of this work and bless the labors of your hands.

J. B. COLE, Cor. Sec.

Church Extension in California.

The time is rapidly drawing near for the annual offering for Church Extension. This is a matter of vital importance to California, as we now have in use money from this fund, without which some of our churches could not possibly have survived. Therefore it should appeal to us with double force, and we cannot emphasize the importance of this work too much. The plan upon which Church Extension operates appeals strongly to business men; the money is not given but loaned in such a way that every dollar goes upon its round of helping and sustaining every five years together with the accrued interest at 4 per cent. California is greatly in need of help from this Board in many places, hence we are simply helping ourselves directly by putting forth every effort to make offerings for Church Extension the first Lord's day in September as large as possible. Northern California has enjoyed a year of unusual prosperity, and while we are filled with gladness and joy don't overlook the claims of Church Extension.

GUY W. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

Church Extension in Kansas.

No enterprise deserves higher regard or more loyal support from our Kansas churches than that represented by our "Church Extension Board." Church Extension has many children in Kansas. Assistance from this source has been the salvation of our cause in many places. More money has been placed by this Board in our state capital, Topeka, than in any other city in the United States. Altogether $27,310 has been placed in Kansas. Brethren, do we appreciate the magnitude of our obligations to this Board?

As a result of the boom many of our congregations were left with a heavy debt on their church home. In numerous instances the property was about to be sacrificed. Other religious bodies were waiting to secure the prize. "Church Extension" came to the rescue and our cause was saved.

In many new points we have been able to establish the cause we love only by the assistance of this Board. As our work enlarges and expands, as it must in this great and growing state, we will still look to our Extension Board for help. Reciprocity is a good thing. Let all of our churches rally to Bro. Muckley's call. By 1900 we must make this fund $250,000. We can do it. Let Kansas show her appreciation and roll up a great contribution.

Nothing figures so largely in our permanent growth as a people as Church Extension. It insures a solid and substantial development.

The plan of operation and business methods of this Board are above criticism. The funds are faithfully and wisely handled. The rate of interest is low. In Church Extension we see "perpetual motion." The influence of a dollar in this fund never dies. It is better than a gift. The activity and interest in the return of the money is a blessing to any church. This fund does not put our churches to sleep or relieve them from all responsibility.

In this our "Jubilee Year," let us do something worthy of our position. Dear brother preacher in Kansas, see to it that your church answers the call on the first Lord's day in September. Let Kansas move to the front.

O. L. COOK, Cor. Sec.

Mt. Vernon, Washington.

As a church we feel very grateful to the Board of Church Extension for the loan we got just in the nick of time. We could not have succeeded without your aid, and now realize how valuable a great Church Extension Fund would be to our brotherhood. This church will send an offering in September.

N. W. CARPENTER, Clerk.

Hot Springs, Arkansas.

We will take the September offering for "Church Extension."

"Church Extension" has been a true friend of this little church. Without its help this important mission could not have been occupied, for with the help we have received, the struggle has been a hard one. Think what the loss would have been to the Christian Church in Arkansas, and indeed to the whole brotherhood. Hot Springs, one of the most famous health resorts in the world, with a home population of 17,000, with from 40,000 to 50,000 visitors each year (many of these our own brethren), would have been without a Christian Church. Can any one estimate the loss? As it is we have a nice little chapel, a membership of 80, a Sunday-school, and all lines of work prospering.

T. NELSOM KINCAID.

What Beneficiaries Say of Church Extension.

It would be very interesting if the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST could find space to publish all the testimonials from our missions that have been aided by Church Extension. This has been extended to 430 churches in 37 states and territories, and now appeals are coming from Canada, and the Board is being asked to aid in paying for the completion of a church in Honolulu, Sandwich Islands. How can our people know the facts of Church Extension's needs and not respond? On this page are testimonials of its goodnesss, and this number could be multiplied up to 430. There are 2,700 homeless churches among us; 127 home societies, district, state and national, organizing new churches; 950 new congregations were organized in 1897 and 1898; 400 could build alone and 100 were aided by the Church Extension Society, leaving 450 homeless of our recent organizations. Is it not conscience-stirring to think of what these 2,700 could grow into if our Board could aid them to houses? See what Atchison, Kan., is doing to-day. Read these testimonials.

G. W. MUCKLEY, Cor. Sec.

Atchison, Kansas.

Had it not been for the timely help of the Church Extension Society the church at Atchison could not have secured its house of worship when it did. In the year 1883 the writer was called to the work in that city, his salary being paid in part by the A. C. M. S. He found 40 members meeting in a small hall, second floor. Within a year he began urging a building. But there was no money in the membership. By lecturing, preaching and soliciting help in Kansas, Missouri and Illinois, $350 were raised. Then $500 were borrowed from Church Extension—the first loan that society made—a lot purchased for $850 in a fine location, a neat frame chapel built and the church formally organized in May, 1885. To-day this church is one of the largest in the city, numbering 470 members, having by far the largest audiences—even with the original building greatly enlarged. The church will send a liberal offering for Church Extension in September, because it realizes that without the aid of that society the present successful work would not have been possible.

W. S. PRIEST.

Pine Bluff, Arkansas.

We have been for several years struggling along at this place, a weak few but faithful Disciples, trying to hold together. But owing to the fact that we had no house in which to meet, and were forced to meet in upstairs rooms, we progressed very slowly, many were becoming discouraged, as we had made several attempts to raise sufficient funds to build a house, and had failed. Finally, Bro. F. B. Sapp was called to take charge of the work, and by his indomitable will and Christian zeal he succeeded in raising from the brethren here and elsewhere about $1,500. But as we could not purchase a suitable lot for less than about $900, we were of course unable to go any further without assistance. We therefore made application to the Board of Church Extention for a loan of $500, which was granted, and we at once began the erection of a house. To-day we have a membership of 62 and one of the prettiest little church houses in the city. We make our offering every year to the Church Extension, for we fully realize the great good being accomplished by it. Had it not been for the Board of Church Extension and the funds they so judiciously control we would not to-day be worshiping in our own beautiful little church.

L. T. SALLEE, Clerk of Church.

Versailles, Missouri.

About three years ago our little congregation at this place determined to make a supreme effort to build a house of worship. One of our good brethren gave us a handsome lot worth over $500. We raised something over $2,000 ourselves. We laid an enduring stone foundation, and erected thereon a beautiful brick superstructure, but with all of our economy we could not complete it. We needed $1,000. We appealed in our extremity to the Board of Church Extension, which very graciously came to our relief and loaned us that amount at the very low rate of four per cent. This enabled us to complete our house. We are worshiping in it now, and have probably the best Sunday-school in the county. We are struggling along and doing the best we can in the payment of the principal and interest of the debt, and feel sure that we will ultimately repay the money to the Board. We are gradually gaining strength and influence. We are greatly indebted to the Board for timely assistance, for without it we could not have succeeded. We arenestly hope the Disciples in the great state of Missouri will give generous support to Church Extension, as we regard it as one of the most efficient means of promoting the cause of Christ in destitute fields. We thank you from the bottom of our hearts for your generous assistance, and hope to be able to make a contribution ourselves in September next.

A. L. ROSS, Clerk.

Corunna, Indiana.

Had it not been for the aid we received from Church Extension at the opportune moment we would have lost our church edifice. We were exhausted. Everybody was discouraged. We could not obtain another dollar. Then we secured the loan, paid our debts, and our church took on new life. Everbody wondered. This was three years ago. Our loan is nearly paid up. Long may the Church Extension live. I trust our people will give freely to it, thereby increasing its usefuiness.

W. M. MERCER.

Warrenton, Missouri.

You can hardly know what a help it was for us to secure that loan, payable in installments of $50. The congregation was small when we built our nice church house, costing $1,700. Times were hard, but everybody contributed liberally, yet there was a deficiency. Knowing the Church Extension Board would assist, we went right on with the building making, it an agreeable place to worship and a credit to the community. We hope the fund will grow, that you may be able to help all. We will send our offering.

F. E. SCHOWENGERDT.

Villisca, Iowa.

The church at Villisca will cheerfully respond to Church Extension call in September. It was by the help of the Church Extension Board that we were enabled to build our church home. Otherwise, it would have been an impossibility, and what promises to be one of the leading churches of the city would probably have gone down as an organization. Accept our grateful thanks for the treatment we have received from the Board.

W. B. ARBUCKLE.

Tuxedo, Missouri.

The church at Tuxedo, Mo., is a beneficiary of Church Extension, and we regard the loan as Providential; for without it we hardly see how we could have saved our property. May the churches everywhere, the weak and the strong, rally for the September collection in behalf of Church Extension, which is "pushing along a good thing"—ONE snowball which, instead of melting by thus touching it, only increases as it is rolled.

In our weakness we shall surely take the collection, and hope you will be pleased with the spirit if not greatly helped with the amount. Let the flag of Church Extension never come down. We could take the Philippines and West Indies for primitive Christianity tomorrow if that fund were as large as it ought to be.

O. E. PAYNE.

Kalkaska, Michigan.

I have been here only two years. When I came they had a nice church. And they told me that it was due to the kindness of the Church Extension Board that they had it. The congregation here is about 12 years old. They have had a hard struggle, but have steadily grown, and now have as respectable a congregation and as good a building as any in town. I cannot tell you just how much of this success has been due to the kindness of your Board, but a great deal of it has. It is hard to see how we could have gotten along so well without the loan. And I am sure as long as this congregation stands it will be a loyal supporter of the Extension and all missionary work. Yes, we will send an offering in September.

H. H. HALLEY.

Inverness, Florida.

Perhaps no community has greater cause to feel thankful for aid extended to secure a home to worship in. Bro. J. R. Biggs writes as follows: "When I remember that we commenced to worship under the live oaks, 'God's first temples,' then under a small shelter, then in a union schoolhouse and then the time when we had to seek other quarters, and that the Extension Fund then came to our support, it would be mean and heartless, indeed, if we failed to be glad and truly thankful to those who put it in the hearts of good men and women to help the homeless. Without the help of the Extension Fund it would have been impossible for the few Christians in this town to have built a home, and, though struggling under the paralyzing effect of the freezes of 1894 and 1898, we shall make an effort to "do unto others as we would be done by."

The subject shall be kept before the congregation, and all will be done that is possible to keep up interest in the matter and make a heart offering in September.

W. C. ZIMMERMAN, Elder.

Walla Walla, Washington.

We will do all we can in September. We are making some progress in our financial condition. All is paid up except the Church Extension money and we will make an effort to pay part of that this fall. God, bless the work and may the brotherhood make a large offering in September.

L. O. HERROLD.

Brock, Nebraska.

In 1894, when we were in great need and had done all we could, I wired you, "Grant us $300 or we suffer." Soon the answer came, "We grant the loan." We thanked God and took courage. We now have a good building, Sunday-school, preaching one-half time, and out of debt.

R. CORYELL.

McCook, Nebraska.

Through whatever means the country will be saved to Christ, the Church Extension will be a prime factor in the work. One year ago McCook had a tabernacle, now the brethren are rejoicing over as beautiful a church edifice as there is in the city—a house of worship costing nearly $2,000. The Board of Church Extension, together with the tremendous energy and sacrifice of the brethren, have made these things possible.

T. PAUL BEALL, Pastor.

Bradbury, Ohio.

We feel very grateful to Church Extension for the loan made us. It came in time to save our house, and also the church, for it would soon have been scattered without a home; but light begins to dawn, thank God. Count on us in the September offering.

R. HOODEN.

Benton, Pennsylvania.

The church wishes me to express their sincere appreciation of the loan recently granted by the Board of Church Extension. We feel like helping this movement as we never have before. Helped us at the proper time. Never was help received more gratefully. Hope the September offering may be the largest in its history, I remain,

H. O. MCHENRY.

Sheffield, Missouri.

I wish to congratulate you in your wonderful efforts that you are making to assist weak churches to complete their church homes. I do not know what we would have done without your aid. Now we feel very thankful that we have a good church building to worship in, and we will try and send you an offering in September.

F. H. PENDERGRASS.

St. Bernice, Indiana.

We would be void of the principle of Christianity did we not feel grateful to you for the loan granted us, which came just in time to save us. We would have lost our church house had you not helped us. Surely, if others have had the experience we have had, they could not speak in too strong terms of the value of the Church Extension Fund. We will do our best for you in collection for September. May God bless you.

S. DOUGHERTY.

Madison, Kansas.

Complying with your request of recent date, permit me to say: A little over one year ago our organization at this place was struggling along for a bare existence, was meeting in the old schoolhouse and such other places as we were permitted to occupy. We heard of your Board through one of our ministers and conceived the idea of appealing to you for assistance, with the grand result that to-day we have a beautiful little church home with pleasant surroundings. Had it not been for your assistance we would yet be in the mire. May God bless Church Extension and your efforts in aiding poor struggling churches everywhere. We will endeavor to make you a good remittance in September and thus help you in the noble cause.

Wheeling Through Europe.—III.

UP THE RHINE.

The transition from Holland to Germany is not a violent one. Between that part of Holland which is obviously Dutch and that part of Germany which exhibits conspicuously German characteristics there is a broad belt of neutral territory, where occasional windmills are seen, but where sometimes a faint suggestion of a hill is discernible (which is essentially un-Dutch), where most of the children but few of the men wear wooden shoes, where the industries are of a German type and where e people talk bad Dutch on one side of the line and bad German on the other. There is a tall stone by the roadside with a perpendicular line carved in it, and when you have passed that mark you have crossed from the kingdom of Wilhelmina to the Empire of William. The German Customs House is a few miles farther on and there a portly official, whose special duty it is to examine suspected smugglers on bicycles, dozes quietly in his office. We aroused him, after some delay, and he came out ferocious, as a man does when suddenly awakened from a nap. To all his questions we vigorously shook our heads and repeated at the same time that useful phrase, "Nicht verstch." It was our first application of the rule that the best way to get along with German officials who interfere with you is not to know what they are talking about, and it worked very well. Finally, we ventured to understand one question, which was as to whether the wheels were ours, and replied to it affirmatively. That was enough, and the pompous official, who had recovered his good humor by this time, dismissed us with kind wishes for a pleasant journey.

To do them justice, German officials are not half so bad as their reputation. The stories which had been told to me about the insolence and ferocity of the German police, especially those in the small towns, had led me to look upon them as a species of cannibalistic bogie men who made a specialty of devouring young and tender American cyclists. I was told that one would be halted fifty times a day by a demand for the license, which all local wheels carry in form of a numbered tag as big as a placard, but from which tourists are exempt; that a policeman may pounce upon you at any moment for riding too fast, or on the wrong side of the road, or on a forbidden street, or for not ringing the bell at the right time or ringing it at the wrong time, or for almost running into somebody; and that every policeman considers himself a little kaiser and will not answer the simplest question unless approached with the greatest deference and delicacy. This is all humbug. There are, to be sure, certain police regulations in regard to the use of bicycles in cities, but these are seldom troublesome and their enforcement is marked no less by courtesy than by rigidity. The police touch their caps when addressed, answer questions fired at them from a passing wheel, and seem to derive no special satisfaction from requesting you to dismount if you happen to be riding on a street where cycling is forbidden. The only violent collision which we have had with the police was when a road-sweeper in the Black Forrest, presumably with some sort of constabulary authority, used his broom to stop Damon, who had been riding on the sidepath, where riding is "verboten." Damon had no business to be riding there, but the road-sweeper had no business to stop him in that abrupt manner. The official dwelt upon the first part of that proposition in fluent German, while we emphasized the latter part of it in equally fluent English. There seemed to be no logical conclusion to this sort of debate, so, when he stopped to take breath we rode off leaving m in the middle of the road waving his broom. In general, the German police are courteous and intelligent and, unlike ours, speak their language with no appreciable Irish brogue.

The journey across Germany, from Holland to Switzerland, is a journey up the Rhine. We had already seen that famous stream at Leiden, shortly before it finds its way between Dutch dykes into the North Sea. In Holland no river can be said to flow except in that figurative sense in which one street may be said to run into another, and the Lower Rhine, with its current apparently dependent on the direction of the wind, is like all the others. Up at Arnhem it is not nearly so bad, and by the time one has followed it up to Cologne the stream, with its now swift current, has begun to win one's respect, though it still excites no particular admiration.

But no one thinks or cares about the river at Cologne. The one object which completely overshadows all other sights is the cathedral which, as everybody knows, has an undisputed claim to the title, "the grandest Gothic structure in the world." The six and a half centuries which it took in building and the millions of money which were spent upon its massive yet delicate masonry, seem not too high a price to pay for such an edifice. No work of man or nature which I have ever seen has produced such an impression of immensity combined with minute perfection in detail. As one walks in the outer gallery among the flying buttresses or looks out from the windows of the towers across a forest of pinnacles and spires, it seems that lace-like delicacy has been united to the massiveness of a mountain.

We spent a day in Cologne and almost all of it in the cathedral. If one could tear himself away from that long enough, he might find it interesting to visit the Church of St. Ursula. This young woman was a British princess about thirteen hundred years ago. She made a religious pilgrimage to Rome and, as she was returning down the Rhine with eleven thousand Christian maidens as attendants, a band of heathen Huns met the little company at Cologne and massacred the whole outfit. The bones of the eleven thousand virgins are preserved in this church, not in a decent cemetery fashion, but built into the walls to give an ornamental effect. For the sake of symmetry and artistic design, the remains are carefully assorted, shin-bones together, shoulder-blades together, and so on. Many of the skulls are adorned with gold and silver trimmings, and are kept in a separate room where they are exhibited only for a cash consideration. Altogether it is as large an assortment of martyrs as one is likely to see anywhere for the price. One need not speak about them with any great reverence, for at least ninety-seven per cent. of the story is time-honored fiction, and if three per cent. is true, nobody knows which three per cent. it is. The bones are the real thing, but a thousand years would easily suffice for gathering them and constructing the legend about them as well. Still, it is an awful warning to young women not to go roaming about unprotected in companies of less than fifteen thousand. If there had been more of them they might have helped each other, but what could a paltry eleven thousand do?

The Rhine flows almost across Europe, but the "Rhine trip," which everybody takes for the sake of the scenery, is only about eighty miles, from Boun to Bingen. Frequently the boat trip is extended twenty miles at each end, making it from Cologne to Mayence, but the picturesque part of the Rhine lies between the first two mentioned towns. Here the valley is narrow, the river swift, and the hills which rise abruptly from the water are clad with vines and crowned with ruined castles. The vines represent the present industry of wine-making. The old industry of robbing travelers is represented by some of the castles, while others were in their palmy days the strong holds and abodes of emperors, electors and other fairly respectable gentry. It is customary to remark that since the robber-barons have been suppressed their busines has fallen practically into the hands of the hotelkeepers and others who cater to the traveling public, but our experience has not confirmed the truth of this facetous and familiar comment.

Experienced friends had advised us to take a boat from Boun or at least from Coblenz to Bingen. Accordingly, we decided to stick to our bicycles and the road, and we are heartily glad we did. The scenery is always best where the hills rise most precipitously from the river, and there of necessity the road is at the water's edge. The express steamers sailed magnificently on up the river while we paused to climb the mountain of Drachenfels to explore the ruins of the castle of Roland at Rolandseck, where every rock and hill has its own separate story and where the very whispers of the wind tell over the romantic legends of the Middle Ages, to visit the royal chateau of Stolzenfels and to seek favorable points of view for the best scenes everywhere. Unquestionably, the wheelman has an advantage over every other traveler up the Rhine.

There is a certain subtle and indescribable charm about this river, as there is about the valley of the Wye in England, the potency of which I have felt but cannot explain. The scenery is not wild or rugged; the mountains are scarcely high enough to merit that name, for few of them reach a thousand feet above sea level; the immense volume of traffic on the river suggests commonplace commerce, and the hillsides suggest profitable agriculture. The separate elements of the picture are pretty, but no more. And yet no one, I believe, is disappointed in the Rhine, however high his expectations may have been. Perhaps the charm is largely a matter of the imagination, which takes the simple elements of hill and valley, river, castle and village, and combines them according to its own forms, adding materials from its own store. Certainly the Rhine, stripped of its legends and its history, would not be the same river. The rock of the Lorelei is perhaps the spot which most nearly approaches grandeur, but Heine's little poem has doubled its attractiveness.

Bingen is an insignificant and ungainly town, which mars a beautiful spot on the river, and does slight credit to the ballad which made it famous. From there we rode through the Rheingau, where the finest wines of Germany are produced, to Wiesbaden. Though famed as a resort for health and pleasure, the city did not tempt us to a long sojourn and we passed on to Mayence. Here the museum of Romanic and Germanic antiquities is the thing which no sight seer should miss. But it was a beautiful day to be out of doors and so, not being very conscientious about sight-seeing anyway, we skipped the museum and spent our time more profitably in trying to order cold luncheon with water at an out-of-door restaurant where a very German waiter was determined to serve us a hot dinner with beer. Our resistance was finally effective, but the positive side of the program could not be carried out at that establishment. Next to a German's propensity for eating out-of doors (and a table d'hote served at a table on the sidewalk is the commonest of events) comes his predilection for drinking malt and vinous beverages. This makes it impossible for the average German waiter to believe his ears when he hears you say in faultless German (carefully conned from a phrase-book), "Please bring me a glass of water." He can't conceive that one should really want to drink a liquor which comes out of neither a bottle nor a barrel. Repeatedly an order for water has brought setzer. However, we have failed to discover anything very deadly about European water as yet. Bibulous acquaintances heve often remarked upon the dangers which lurk therein and innkeepers have given us solemn warnings, but the only real danger appears to be that one is liable to die of thirst while he is trying to get it.

W. E. GARRISON.

New York Letter.

The little church at Dunmore, a suburb of Scranton, Pa., celebrated, on Aug. 8-10, the first anniversary of its Sunday-school and church, amid much gratitude and rejoicing. Bro. R R. Bulgin and his good wife have done a most excellent work and the good people of the church and community have stood loyally by them. When Bro. Bulgin left Hiram College about two years ago he took up the work at Providence Church, Scranton, which he laid down a year ago in order to revive the work at Dunmore, which was organized in 1853, but through removals, deaths, etc., the church had gone down, only a few Disciples remaining in the community. Bro. Bulgin had the good judgment to see that this work might be revived and decided to undertake it, which he did at considerable sacrifice, but the royal band that has gathered about will not allow him to suffer. They organized a Sunday-school with 17 members and now it has about 200, Bro. L. L. Major, superintendent and Mrs. Bulgin at the head of a fine kindergarten department with about 100 in attendance. The church was organized with eight members, including Bro. Amos Washer, a charter member, Sister Robertson and perhaps one or two others who had lived in that section of the city for many years and remained loyal to their conviction of truth all these years. The church now has a membership of about 80 and is growing. Two united with them during the celebration; one by statement, the other, being a Catholic, came be primary obedience. The first evening was in celebration of the Sunday-school, when exellent reports were made by the officers, both of their main school and their mission, which is conducted by Bro. Edward Krause and others in a locality a mile from the church.

Wednesday evening service was an appropriate celebration of the first anniversary of the church, when the pastor, treasurer and elder made inspiring reports of the year's work. The finances, as the spiritual aspects of the work, are in a splendid condition, all bills were reported paid, with a small balance in the treasury, and the property is well lacated, in good repair and free of all encumbrance. A street will soon be opened alongside the church, leaving it on a corner, and also making a good parsonage site at the rear. The building is neat, lighted with electricity and well arranged for the work to be done.

Thursday evening was devoted partially to the setting apart of church officers for the ensuing year. Those elected were Amos Washer, elder; J. K. Johler, L. L. Major, C. J. Gillett and Edward Krause, deacons. These all were ordained to their high and holy work by prayer and the imposition of hands, each promising to be faithful to the duties of his office.

Among the pleasing memories of my visit to the Dunmore Church were Miss Florence Robertson's soulful singing, the marvelous whistling of Oscar Ludwick, one of the Sunday-school boys, whom they familiarly addressed as "Doc," and the meeting of the earnest, devoted people, the royal financial helpers, such as Sister Robertson, Bro. Major and others, the delightful home of Sister Burley and its restful prophet's chamber, and the encouraging fellowship with Bro. Bulgin, the devoted pastor of the flock.

It would not do to visit Scranton, the center of the great Lackawanna coal region and not go down into the mines; so we put ourselves into keeping of Bro. Ross, one of the superintendents of the Delaware and Hudson Company and took us 500 feet below the surface and then perhaps a mile underground, through what seemed inexhaustible supplies of "black diamonds." And down in the bowels of the earth I had the new experience of playing the miner, digging coal, some of which I brought home to make paperweights, inkstands, etc. I shall long remember, and pleasantly, my visit to Scranton, and hope that the Disciples there may so labor as to take a large share of that city of 125,000 people for Christ.

Bro. R. W. Clymer, pastor of the Providence Church, North Maine Ave., has been in the field only a few months, but is getting a fine hold upon the work, and is starting off well in this his new field. He was formerly pastor of the Sixth Church, Indianapolis, where he labored for three years. We had the pleasure of seeing and hearing him at Dunmore one evening.

This visit into the eastern section of Pennsylvania has only deepened the conviction that most all of the East is ripe unto the harvest awaiting the sickle of the simple gospel of Christ. The cities and towns of Easton, Mauch Chunk, Bethlehem, Wilkes Barre, Phillipsburg, Stroudsburg, Carbondale, etc., where we have no church of the Disciples of Christ, but in most of which there are a few who could be organized into the beginning of a church. The same is true of many important places in New Jersey as in Pennsylvania. We are very anxious to put a good general evangelist into all this section of the country where in a few years many people might be turned to the Lord, and good churches established. I believe there is no field in the United States equal to this, here on the Atlantic Seaboard, for the glorious plea of the Disciples of Christ. We must take this country for Christ and we must do so as quickly as possible. I would like to get the name and address of every Disciple of Christ in Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York without church privilege at the place of residence. Will all in this section so situated drop me a line upon reading this, giving the names and addresses of other Disciples in the community? And will any Disciples knowing of such in the territory named, inform me of their whereabouts, etc.? We must start the work in some of these places at any rate.

S. T. WILLIS.

Those Questions by D. H. Bays.

I have read with interest the article by Bro. D. H. Bays in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Aug. 10, and I now attempt an answer to his questions. He asks me first: "Do you believe in the old theological dogma of the plenary or verbal inspiration of the Sriptures?" I answer that I do believe in the verbal inspiration of the Scriptures, properly defined; but I do not believe in the caricature of it which is often propounded by writers who deny it. In my volume on the Credibility and Inspiration of the New Testament Books, I have carefully expounded what I believe the Scriptures to teach on this subject, and for a full presentation of my views I must refer Bro. Bays to that book. In brief, however, I may add that my conception of inspiration is admirably expressed in a quotation which Bro. Brooks makes in the same number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, under the heading, "What is Inspiration?" It is in his first quotation, and the words employed which I endorse are these: "Inspiration denotes such a degree of divine influence, assistance, or guidance, as enabled the authors of the Scriptures to communicate knowledge to others without error or mistake, whether the subjects of such communications were things then immediately revealed to those who declared them, or things with which they were before acquainted." This defines the inspiration of the writers. I would define in the same way that of inspired speakers; and I would distinguish both from revelation, or the process by which knowledge was miraculously imparted to the minds of these writers and speakers. I may say, for the benefit of Bro. Brooks, that in the quotation which he makes from my Commentary on Acts, I was not giving my conception of inspiration in general, but only of the particular example of it set forth in the second chapter of Acts.

I am asked secondly: "How do you harmonize the seeming disagreement between Matthew and Luke respecting the genealogy of Christ with the doctrine of plenary inspiration?" I do it by showing that when the two writers are properly understood their "seeming" disagreement is no disagreement at all.

Third: "If you regard the two genealogies as in practical agreement, then how do you harmonize the doctrine of the literal descent of Christ from Abraham through the loins of Joseph as taught by both Matthew and Luke with the doctrine of the immaculate conception as taught by the same writers?"

In this question there is a false assumption. It is not true that Matthew and Luke both trace the descent of Christ from Abraham "through the loins of Joseph." It is not true that either of them does this. On the contrary, both of them are careful to show that the descent was not through the loins of Joseph. Matthew does this, first by dropping the word "begat" when he comes to Joseph, and styling him simply "the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus;" and second, by adding an account of the conception and birth of Jesus for the very purpose of showing that he was begotten by the Holy Spirit, and that Joseph "knew" not Mary till after the child was born. Luke does it first, by giving in his first and second chapters a still more detailed account of the conception and birth of Jesus; and secondly, by beginning his genealogy with the words respecting Jesus, "Being the son [as was supposed] of Joseph."

Bro. Bays says that the genealogy has been "a fruitful source of great perplexity to his mind," and that for years he has "sought information upon it to very little purpose;" but if his point of difficulty is that presented in his last question, it is evident that his failure to find the information is due to his searching for it in the wrong place. You cannot find the needle in the haystack if it is not in the haystack. He should have searched in the text and the context. There it is as conspicuous as the stone which the builders rejected, and over which they stumbled without seeing it.

Bro. Bays expresses disappointment because, when I called attention to a very objectionable statement about the genealogies in the New Dictionary of the Bible, I did not make "an effort to harmonize the discrepancies, real or apparent, between the two." For this I had two very good reasons: first, because suce an effort was not called for by the purpose for which I noticed the objectionable statement; and second, because such an attempt at harmonizing would require more space than I thought proper to give to it at that time. I have expounded these genealogies elaborately in my work already referred to above, the Credibility and Inspiration of the New Testament Books, and I am confident that I have there proved that when properly understood in the light of Hebrew usage with respect to genealogies and genealogical terms, there are no discrepancies between them and no inconsistencies in either. I again refer Bro. Bays and all other inquirers on the subject to that volume, and I trust that I shall not be regarded as egostical when I add that this volume has not received the attention at the hands of our young preachers to which it is entitled and which is demanded by their own deficiencies. In my class-room instruction I permit no student to pass without understanding these genealogies. They may forget what they learn, but they must learn it at least once.

Unification of our Missionary Interests.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I am tardy in expressing my sincere appreciation of your editorial on the unification of our missionary interests. To my thought nothing is more important just now than the question you have again called to the brotherhood's attention. I rejoice to note that the Oracle is also committed to the movement. The papers speaking thus only voice the sentiment of thousands of our pastors to whom the matter of raising and apportioning missionary funds according to present plans has come to be a heavy burden.

The fact is, Bro. Garrison the churches are going to unify these interests whether or no; and if there is to be preserved any concert of effort the leaders in our missionary enterprises must take early action.

The are many advantages that are at once apparent. I will note a few.

1. Unification will resuld in an all-around missionary education. Neither secretaries nor people generally will become one-sided. Money will be raised for missions, and that term will be rich indeed in meaning when it embraces all phases of the blessed work to which we are committed.

2. Two or at most four offerings per year will give time for educational work apart from offerings. At Angola we have mission work —the work—before us all the time, and at least one service each month of distinctive missionary character. Only two offering days, however, and when they come they are welcomed by a people prepared for them. The special efforts—often extreme—before an offering remind one of cramming for examination. There is no real growth about it. It is an undue and abnormal tension that cannot be maintained. The necessity for repeated high-pressure efforts itself condemns the practice.

3. Unification would do away with the spirit of rivalry between missionary boards. That it existsin not open to question. One feels discouraged, when making every possible effort, to have some one board complain that it has not received its share. Let us rise above this.

4. Unification is a matter of great economy. As it now is each board is a separate institution with its own outfit. Secretaries, two, three or four, visit each one of the larger conventions instead of one of these worthy men from a general headquarters presenting the different phases of the work.

5. Weak churches will feel that they have a right to live and that they have a place in the brotherhood if an offering for missions is asked of them instead of response to some special appeal with almost every visit of the preacher. It does seem to some of us that it is time the appeal of the weaker organizations should be heeded. Scattered through the country are hundreds of struggling bands who simply can't keep up with all demands, and so give heed to none. If not confused and discouraged, as they now are, by multiplicity of calls they would gladly make some response for missions, and so have part in the glad fellowship of world-wide work.

As it now is the strong churches are making thier own plans, those in fair condition choose one, two or possibly three offerings for the year and the weak are doing nothing and dying. We appeal for union in other lines; let us, to be consistent, have our missionary work one. CHAS. S. MEDBURY.

Angola, Ind.

[The above letter, coming as it does from one of our best missionary pastors, one whose church ranks among the highest in missionary offerings, is of value in that it cannot be construed to be an expression of one that is unfriendly toward our present missionary boards. The view presented is that of sober judgment and conscientious convictions and represents the mind of many of our leading pastors on the subject.—EDITOR.]

Camp Richmond.

Richmond Street Church is endeavoring to solve one of the great problems that confront all Cincinnati churches, by means of a summer camp. To a great many people in the city an extended vacation, such as would recuperate the exhausted energies, is impossible. Fo financial reasons or for others equally strong, they cannot get away from the city except for excursions so brief as to be of doubtful benefit. And yet, if some change of air and scene is not brought within their reach the continued effort to bear the daily burdens of life amid the din of the hot, crowded city will soon prove too great for the weary shoulders.

To cope with this difficulty "Camp Richmond" has been instituted. A suitable spot was found at "Stony Point," a few miles down the river. A little bluff overlooking the Ohio, shaded by beautiful trees, affording wide prospect up and down the river and commanding beautiful views of the Kentucky hills, gives prospect of a refreshing change from city heat, while the street car line, but a few rods away, brought it within easy access from the heart of the city.

Tents were procured, provisions, bedding and all necessaries obtained, and by the middle of July "Camp Richmond" was one of the realities of Richmond Street Church life. The camp has proved a complete success. Experience, instead of dampening our enthusiasm has only deepened it.

There are in all six tents of various sizes. These provide the necessary accommodations for kitchen, dining hall and sleeping apartments, though in fine weather a wholly outdoor life is generally preferred, except in the matter of sleeping. The aim is to keep expenses at the very lowest point. Meals are served at cost, while everything else is free. Friends in the church have provided cots, bedsteads and bedding, so that no charge need be made for lodging. The same holds true with regard to boats and other things.

A half-hour ride on the car carries one from the heat of the city to all the advantages of rural life. It is quite the fashion to run down to the camp to spend the afternoon or evening. Many come to pass the night, as business duties will not permit a longer absence from the city. After an evening by the camp fire or on the river, sleep comes readily in the comfortable tents. Then, after an early breakfast at a table spread under the great trees, the sun glancing down through the tossing leaves, while the birds sing their morning songs overhead and the great river flows by near at hand, a breezy ride on the electric car and the duties of the day are taken up in the busy city.

Each week a number of children from the city are given an outing at the camp. A fund has been provided, so that these may enjoy the benefits of the camp, who would otherwise be deprived of its privileges.

On Lord's day services are held, both morning and evening. The interest taken by those in the neighborhood is most gratifying.

The entire undertaking was an experiment, but results so far indicate that the influence will be of untold benefit for the Jubilee Convention. Justin N. Green, the chairman of the assignment committee, is pastor of the prosperous Richmond St. Church and planned this summer social settlement for his people.

CIN. COR.

From the South.

For the third time by the kindness of the brethren of Southwest Arkansas, I have been called to preach for them at their annual encampment at Mineral Springs, and a delightful privilege it is.

During this encampment the missianary convention of the third district is held.

I do not care to speak of my meeting in which I was ably assisted by Mrs. Mace, of Amity, as leader of song, but rather of this convention, and one week in Southwest Arkansas.

There are 16 counties in this district, containing 32 small congregations that do not aggregate more than 1,000 in membership.

Bro. George Clark has been the faithful and capable evangelist laboring in this district, but he now retires on account of the health of his family, and he is succeeded by Bro. H. B. Hughes.

Last year Bro. Clark gave 256 days to the work and received $185, the general board assisting in this. In the whole field only two men were devoting their whole time to the work, but a number were giving a portion of time.

But listen! the increase in membership during that period was almost 20 per cent. The field is indeed ripe and the people are good and true, but they are poor. They are growing in missionary zeal and activity and much for God will come from Southwest Arkansas, but now is their hour of need and a little help now, my brethren, will go a long ways and accomplish much in this field.

It is of my own volition that I make this appeal, but if you want to put a dollar—more or less, according to your means—where it will do much for Christ and for men and women hungering for the simple gospel, sit down and send your offering to the secretary, Mrs. Anne Cable Wilson, Camden, Ark.

Remember this appeal, my brethren, and help this needy district.

Prof. J. F. Draughon, who is the author of four text books on bookkeeping, will, on Oct. 10, 1899, open a well-equipped business college in the Emilie Building, St. Louis, corner 9th and Olive Streets. His brother, who was for four years principal of Draughon's Practical Business College, Nashville, Tenn., will have charge of the St. Louis College. He also has flourishing business colleges at Galveston and Texarkana, Texas. His colleges are the best patronized business colleges in the South. They give a superior course of instruction and have special facilities for securing positions. Money for tuition may be deposited in bank till position is secured, or good notes will be accepted. Special rates will be given all who enter at St. Louis on or about the opening. See ad. of these colleges elsewhere in this issuse, and write for free catalogue. Address J. F. DRAUGHON. Church Anniversary.

The 25th anniversary of the church at Rinehart was held yesterday. After a stirring song service and an address by the writer, dinner was served on the grounds. Roll call and reminescent talks occupied the afternoon. Just six of the charter members were present. More than 400 have been baptized and united with the church during its history.

To Our Friends.

The church at this place is making an effort to pay off their loan; also to make other necessary improvements. This will be somewhat of an effort, as the congregation is small. The brethren feel that the old patriarchs that have borne the burden ever since the church was organized should be relieved. We feel that we have many friends in other churches and that they would be glad to help us. We solicit their contributions; also others that will help us in our efforts.

Boise, Idaho.

In my two letters of recent date, published in the Christian-Evangelist in the interest of the church, I failed to mention that this church has constantly received substantial aid from the General Board, and that this aid has been greatly appreciated by the membership here. This aid has made it possible for them to maintain their organization.

I am informed by Bro. Smith that the Board has no power to invest missionary funds in church buildings, and while this may be true, in my judgment it is not right. In many cases it would be a thousand times better to build a church home than to spend the money on incompetent preachers—as some of them seem to be.

The board have at least this power: They can pay the full salary of a pastor, say $1,500 a year. And then let the members here pay out on the church. This I believe they would be able to do. Boise is perhaps the most important field in the United States at the present time.

This city has a wonderful future. It will quadruple its population in the next five years. It is just now beginning to feel the impulse of Eastern capital and enterprise, and the old-time mossbacks are beginning to crawl out from the fence corners and look at the procession.

This field cannot afford to be neglected, and I am sure if the members of the board could see the possibilities of this field as it really is they would not wait a moment in placing here on a term from three to five years one of the very best men available—a man whom they would have to pay at least $1,500.

This letter, like the other two, is unsolicited by the church here. I expect to start home to-morrow, but my prayers shall continue for the success of the little church at Boise, Idaho.

State Mission Notes.

RAILROAD RATES TO THE STATE CONVENTION.

This office has been asked often lately about railroad rates to the state convention. The matter has been in fermentation for some time, but we were not able to answer until now. We are just in receipt of a letter from Mr. Barker, of the M. K. & T. and also from Mr. Townsend, of the Mo. Pac., telling us that "all terminal lines at Jefferson City," and that means Mo. Pac., M. K. & T. and C. & A., "have agreed upon a rate of one fare for the round trip, tickets on sale Oct. 2-4. Good to return till and including Oct. 6." This is as good a rate as we have ever obtained. It is a better rate than even the Interdenominational Sunday-school has been able to obtain, and no other religious body in the state have ever obtained it. This is because we have GREATER CONVENTIONS.

I have promised that if they would grant this rate we would have the greatest convention ever held by our people in the state, and I am making the same statement to the other roads in an effort to secure the same concession. If we fail in this then we had just as well whistle to the wind as to ask for the rate another year; we will not get it.

Further announcements of rates will be made from time to time. Now will not the see that the announcement as to rates is published in the county papers? They will all be glad to publish any item you may furnish them about the convention. I would like to see which superintendent can display the most ingenuity in getting this matter before their home people.

PREACHERS

also are requested to bring the matter before their congregations and get them to appoint some persons to go to Jefferson City. It will be also a splendid time to bring the matter of state apportionment before them and urge that, let the amount be ever so small, they must be in touch with this great work. Nine cases out of ten where there is a failure to contribute it will be because the preacher does not bring the matter before his people.

CHURCHES

ought to see that their preacher comes to the state convention; they ought to demand it of him, and to make their demand effective it would be a good thing to put the money in his hand and say go. We must have the greatest convention in all our history; anything less would be a shame to our people. The world is looking forward to it and wondering what it will be. We must impress them with our greatness. Yours in His name,

T. A. Abbott.

C. E. And Bible-schools of Iowa.

Once more we wish to call your attention to the state convention which will convene Sept. 4th. We want you to begin now to get ready to attend. Thursday afternoon of the 7th, and Friday afternoon and evening of the 8th, have been given to the Bible-school and Endeavor work. We wish that every society and school in the state might be well represented in this part of the convention. Appoint your delegates next Sunday, that they may have time to get ready.

The following is a part of the program we hope to have carried out in this part of the convention:

Class recitation, conducted by the Normal method, by Prof. Crusenberry.

"Bible-school Methods and How to Operate Them," by W. B. Clemmer.

"Place of Bible-schools in the Restoration Movement and in the Development of the Church," S. B. Ross.

"Primary Work—Helps and Methods," Mrs. Sherman Hill.

"Echoes from Detroit Convention," Sumner T. Martin.

Report of district secretaries.

"Special Training for Bible-school and C. E. Workers," A. F. Sanderson.

"The Pastor in Bible-school and C. E. Work," William Orr.

"Duty of Parents Relative to Bible-school and C. E. Work," W. A. Moore.

Symposium on "How Your C. E. Helps the Church," led by Edgar Price.

We are hoping to secure one of our strongest men for the evening address. Time will be given for a general discussion upon the above subjects. Don't fail to have your school and society represented.

State Evangelist.

Washington, D. C.

The Fourth Church in Washington, D. C., begins to assume a tangible form. During President Hayes' administration there was built a union chapel on Whitney Ave., in the northwestern section of the city. There has been conducted, continuously, a Sunday-school of one hundred or more at this place. The building is three-fourths of a mile, as yet, from any other church, and is in a rapidly growing community. This property is worth from $8,000 to $10,000. The trustees would not sell the building to the Methodists, Lutherans or Presbyterians, but gave it to us. Finest opening yet seen in the national capital for a a vigorous and active young congregation of Disciples to spring at once into being. Most all of the old Sunday-school workers can be made Disciples of. A preacher is expected to take regular charge of it in July. Look out for Whitney Ave. Church of Washington, D. C.

The California State Meeting.

The state meeting is past, but it was another one of those sainted gatherings by the sea that will never be forgotten.

We had a good program in every department; the attendance was large and many were kept away by the fruit and grain harvest.

The music was the nearest to the standard of 1897, when Bro. Fillmore was our leader.

Our singing this year was under the leadership of Mrs Princess Long, which will explain our success.

A number of new workers appeared in the California field for the first time. Bro. Boyer, of Stockton; Bro. Morgan, of Woodland; Bro. Murphy, of Red Bluff; Bro. Honn, of Modesto; Bro. Kirkham, of San Francisco; Bro. Waggoner, of Hanford; Bro. Williams, of San Francisco; Bro. Bonnell, of Geyserville, and of the younger class were Bro. Russell, of Palo Alto; Bro. Martin, of Petaluma, cousin of S. M. Martin, the evangelist; Bro. Coggins, of Marysville; Bro. Mills, of Palo Alto, and one Bro. Elder, of Fresno; Bro. Johnson only a few months out of the Methodist ranks.

The older California preachers were present by the score, and it was a great pleasure to us all to have Bro. L. B. Wilkes with us all the time, feeling quite vigorous and with his clear, ringing voice.

Sunrise prayer-meetings were held on "Endeavor Rock," where the choral waves joined with our morning praise in richest melody.

The night services of the last Lord's day were well attended, for the people had a mind to go.

We made a grand movement toward expansion by purchasing a fine "parcel of ground" covered by an eucalyptus grove, about eight acres, and adjoining the present tabernacle ground of "Garfield Park."

What a delightful Mecca we have beside the sea, whither the tribes of the Lord shall gather each year and give thanks unto the name of the Lord!

A most excellent state board was selected, with W. H. Martin as president.

Bro. T. A. Lawson, of Santa Clara, has been selected as state evangelist, and no better man could be found. There are, however, several other able evangelists who will be in the field more or less: Bro. McWilliams, Bro. Wilhite, Bro. Brown and Bro. Ware.

We had a most delightful greeting in having Bro. J. W. Ingram, of Pasadena, with us one day, who gave us a good sermon on the kingdom.

Another pleasure, too, was the presence of ex-Governor Drake, of Iowa, the great philanthropist, who gave words of greeting to his brethren in the "sunset land."

MINNESOTA.

Princeton, Aug. 19.—There have been six additions at Wyanette; five by baptism. The interest still continues. This is a great mission field. Our brethren are enthusiastic and very earnest in the advocacy of our plea for Christian union. Since my coming here the M. E. minister has tried very hard to convince some of the converts that "sprinkling" is the only "mode of baptism." In this he failed. The people are more eager to believe in "one Lord, one faith and one baptism" than in all human made "modes." The language of Agrippa to Paul, "With but little persuasion thou wouldst fain make me a Christian," is becoming popular and effective daily.—JOHN M. LUTTENBERGER.

IOWA.

Dallas, Aug. 14.—J. C Wright's meeting here, July 17th to Aug. 11th, resulted in 27 additions. There were 16 baptisms in all. In spite of the busy season of the year and the extreme hot weather the house was filled with earnest listeners every night; 18 of those uniting with the church represent heads of families, some with hair silvered with age. Bro. Wright was both interesting and instructive, and as he returns to his home in Knoxville he leaves many warm friends behind him.—B. L. KLINE.

ILLINOIS.

Blandinsville, Aug. 14 —One addition to the Old Bedford Church last Sunday evening. Regular service.—A. R. ADAMS.

West Salem, Aug. 14.—Baptized three at our regular services at the Marion church yesterday. All married persons.—G. W. TATE.

Charleston, Ill.—Work is moving along nicely. Four added at regular services yesterday; two by letter, two confessions. Three added in a little meeting at Walnut Grove—10 miles north—recently held by writer.—F. W. BURNHAM.

Pekin, Aug. 15.—Two baptisms at the Malone church last Sunday. My pastorate here has closed. Bro. J. T. Alsup following me. My new field is Stanford. My year's work at Pekin was blessed with 47 additions, $110.58 raised for missions, $156.80 applied on debts, $1,251.48 raised for all purposes. Two short meetings held away from Pekin during year resulted in 33 additions.—FRED E. HAGIN.

OREGON.

Portland, Aug. 9.—After a nine days' meeting at Gresham, 13 miles east, in this (Multnomah) county, an organization of a Church of Christ was consummated on the 7th by the election of three deacons and five deaconesses. Prof. H. R. Winchell, principal of the public schools, is chairman of the board and Sister Winchell clerk of the church. Music, visitation and literature committees were appointed and steps taken looking to the inauguration of a "Mothers' Council." In five minutes sufficient funds were subscribed to have preaching once per month, and at their request I will look after the spiritual interests of the church as evangelist. They start out to obey the injunction of Paul to "owe no man anything, but to love one another," and, though few, they are stronger than some churches which have existed for 40 years, being as the first church, "of one heart and one soul" (Acts 4:32). At the invitation of the Baptists we are to meet in their house. They have been very kind to us. This is a new field—virgin soil—and "isms" are many, but the church has the confidence of the thinking people and will succeed.—BRUCE WOLVERTON, evangelist first district.

IOWA.

Nora Springs, Aug. 14.—Two confessions last week, one the week before, two young men and one young lady. Good audiences every Lord's day.—W. W. WHARTON.

Oelwein.—Little more than six weeks was spent at Oelwein in the tent meeting. Bro. S. B. Ross, the pastor, had everything in readiness so far as possible for a good meeting. The brethren there are an earnest and faithful band numbering now about 200. About three years ago the congregation there was organized by Bro. Lawrence Wright. Later another meeting was held by Bro. Harlow which resulted in about 45 additions. Bro. S. B. Ross was secured as their first pastor and is still with them. The last Lord's day we were there the board unanimously recommended that Bro. Ross be indefinitely called to continue his work as pastor. Bro. and Sister Ross have done a most excellent work and are much loved for their work's sake by both their brethren and those outside of the church. The earnestness and hospitality of the Oelwein church made this one of the most enjoyable meetings in which the writer has ever engaged. While Oelwein is a railroad center and in some respects a hard field to work, yet the Lord blessed our labors and added some 65 to the band of workers there. The writer was more than rejoiced to have Bro. C. W. Olinger, who has been assisting during the winter by having charge of the song service, take his stand upon Christ and the Bible alone. He has been for years a member of the Presbyterian Church, and comes with no complaint whatever against those with whom he has worked so long, but comes that he may "do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." Bro. Olinger is a fine leader of song service, and I shall be glad to recommend him to any who may need help of that kind. We enjoyed meeting and working once more with Prof. Mary Wood, who was for four years of the time of our pastorate at Oskaloosa one of the teachers in Oskaloosa College. Her father and mother and twin sisters, Rose and Margret, constitute a happy and earnest Christian family. We feel that much of the success of the work in Oelwein has been due to the constancy of these Christian workers. The church there arranged to secure a corner lot in a good location, and are now looking forward to the erection of a suitable church building. We shall always feel a personal interest in the progress of the work at Oelwein.

We are just now beginning at Ft. Dodge. Pitched our tent yesterday and preached in it last night to a good audience. Bro. Dodge recently held a four weeks' meeting here and has things in good condition, we believe, for a good work. He has been caring for the flock here until something more permanent could be done for them.—D. A. WICKIZER, state evangelist.

MISSOURI.

Cameron, Aug. 14.—Two additions at our services yesterday; one by confession.—S. J. WHITE.

Paris, Aug. 14.—Two baptized at Oak Ridge, Monroe county, and one reclaimed at Higbee since my last report.—C. H. STRAWN.

Rockport, Aug. 15.—An excellent young lady was baptized by the writer on Sunday evening.—S. W. GLASCOCK.

Canton, Aug. 18.—Three baptisms at Stronghurst, Ill., last Lord's day.—A. N. LINDSEY.

Prairie Hill, Aug. 17.—House will not accommodate the people. Two additions and prospects for more soon. We have visited every family in the town and are now visiting those in the country for miles around. The meeting is a source of perpetual enjoyment.—MORGANS AND DAUGHTER.

Joplin, Aug. 14.—Three additions yesterday; two by letter, one by restoration. H. C. Patterson, of Webb City, F. M. Rogers, of Edina, and Melancthon Moore, of Reserve, Kansas, all spoke at our Jubilee Aug. 3d. Bro. Moore preached for us on Aug 6, and Eugene McFarland preached for us on Aug. 10, being en route to his work at the Fourth Church, St. Louis.—W. F. TURNER.

Richland.—Bro. E. E. Davidson and I have just closed a three weeks' seige at Mt. Grove with 48 added; 32 by obedience. We began here last night.—D. B. WARREN.

Billings, Aug. 17.—Five additions here at regular services in the last two weeks; four by letter; one by baptism.—F. J. YOKLEY.

Sparta.—Nine confessions here in four months. Our Bible-school is growing under the wise leadership of Supt. E. L. Eichelberger. Y. P. S. C. E. is doing a fine work in the way of training its members to take part in church work.—F. J. YOKLEY.

Ozark.—Two additions here by letter since last report.—F. J. YOKLEY.

IN THE BEGINNING.

From "Church Building Quarterly."

Some of our friends in other communions might think us a trifle assuming if we made the beginning of Congregational Church building the same as that of Copyright, American Tract Society.

THE TABERNACLE.

True, it was the "tabernacle of the congregation," but not, in the modern sense, a Congregational Church tabernacle. It was simply the beginning of church building. The caption, "In the Beginning," has an eye to a more recent date (1608), in Scrooby, England, where and when what we now call American Congregationalism took shape and began to grow. Visitors look with reverence on the Scrooby Church and vicarage, and the Scrooby Manor House, in that historic town, as marking the spot where one of the greatest movements of the 17th century began, the movement to found an untrammeled church and lay the corner stone of a free government. The patient endurance of persecution before leaving England; the perilous voyage across the Atlantic in a sailing vessel like Look at the Facts.

Mrs. T. Dolan, of Madrid, Perkins Co., Neb., writes: "I was cured of painful periods by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and his 'Compound Extract of Smart-Weed.' I think Dr. Pierce's medicines the best in the world."

Mrs. Carrie B. Donner, of Dayton, Green Co., Wis., writes: "I can highly recommend Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription — having taken it for nine months previous to confinement. I suffered scarcely any compared with what I had at other times."

"I suffered fifteen years with female weakness and nervousness," writes Mrs. Vincent Bohall, of Franklin, Johnson Co., Indiana. "One year ago I began taking your 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I took six bottles of each and now I am well. I owe my life to Dr. Pierce."

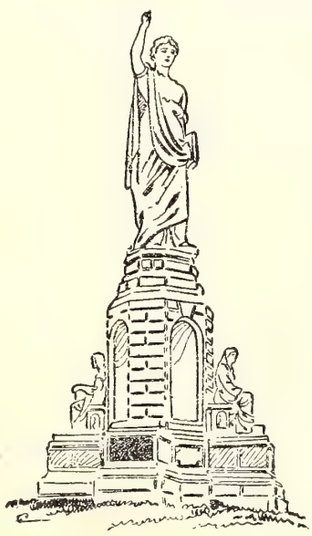
THE FIRST SUNDAY ON CLARK'S ISLAND;

the death of half their number the first winter—all are proofs of sturdiness of character, loyalty to Christ and truth, that our nineteenth century work in the West seldom surpasses.



Our little bands of Christians on the frontier, meeting in log shanties and dugouts, can think back to our Congregational beginnings in Plymouth, when the transatlantic Scrooby Church of 1608 held service for a time after the landing in the "Commons" before was erected—"half church, half fort"—by no means an inapt illustration of the need of defense from both temporal and spiritual peril in any and every generation. What a contrast at every point of comparison, those early beginnings with our latter-day surroundings! Compare a holiday trip across the Atlantic on the "Majestic," "Alaska," "City of Paris," with the Pilgrims' three months' "tug in a tub!" Compare a winter landing in the wilderness with the waving welcome of friends to any one of our seaports. Compare Pilgrim facilities for obtaining supplies with those of the outermost outposts of our Western work to day.

The descendants of these men are in no danger of doing overdue homage to their unparalleled daring.

THE NATIONAL MONUMENT

and stir up the sons of such sires to make the hall a museum of mementoes. Nothing, however, that art can do will equal nature in the plain granite of Plymouth Rock.

Memory and imagination seldom have a freer field than when beside or mounted on this stepping-stone of American Congregationalism. The singularly enduring qualities of the two seem likely to go down the ages together. The canopy over the rock is a suggestion and a hint that the way to preserve our growing work is to put a canopy over every little church if we would preserve it.

With what astonishment and thanksgiving would the Mayflower passengers look on what has come out of their doing and daring! Not less than two millions of Congregational adherents to-day vigorously pushing national and world-wide evangelism.

It seemed to us, while looking on the reminders of the early days of Congregationalism on these shores, that the rude beginnings our brethren in the West are compelled to put up with might soften a trifle under the light of these early days. No less an authority than the lamented Dr. Henry M. Dexter gives a quasi endorsement of the probable accuracy of the following as representing

THE FIRST MEETING HOUSE IN BOSTON.

For architectural symmetry and churchly suggestion this building is not far in advance of the sod house or log shanty of the West. Not a few of our Western churches, whose beginnings were two parts hardship to three of Christian grit, are fair competitors for leadership among us. It does a church good to struggle at the outset. Money and elegance are no match in church work for manliness and energy. Many a Western farmer will see in the picture of the Pilgrim an offset to the farm wagon—his family carriage. In the hundreds of beginnings yet to be made our brave bands will do well to read a chapter from Plymouth.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

I have received pictures of Burleigh and Henry Cash, our members in Pennville, Ill. Burleigh is 11, Henry 8. They have their caps on and look like they were just starting out to have some fun. Burleigh writes: "The best vacation days I ever had were about a week ago. I went with my brother (a preacher) to his appointment. On our way we stopped at the Soldiers' Home and made it a visit. I saw some very nice things there and I got to ride on the street cars for the first time, and got to see some very nice country." And his brother Henry writes: "The best vacation days were when we went to our farm. We had a nice time swimming with our cousin, and eating my apples. Papa got us some pet rabbits; we think they are very nice." Carl Swift (11) and Donnie (8), his sister, have just joined the Advance Society. They live in Billings, Mo. Frank M. Reid, of Madison, Cal., says: "I wrote before and said I would keep the rules, but I only kept them six weeks. But every Monday I look for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and am always glad to see the stories. I think the society is doing a great deal of good. I will renew my rules at once."

Sometime ago I received the pictures of Jessie and Eunice Shafer. Jessie now sends the following true story about her little sister: "A year ago my little sister met with an awful accident. Papa owns a gristmill, and last year he ground on Saturdays. One Saturday Eunice was sitting in the yard playing school and teaching her dolls. The lower part of her hair had come unplaited. Mamma had spoken about it and had told her to plait up, but Eunice was too busy playing with her dolls just then. At half past eleven mamma called her to get an armful of wood. Away she ran as fast as she could, but instead of going around the mill to the wood, she went through it, and reached under the main shaft for the wood. The wind was blowing from the south and as she stooped down it blew her hair on a set screw that was on the shaft. It took her around it till it wound her hair so close it tore the scalp on the right side, making a would five inches long and three and a half wide. The line shaft on which she was caught is driven by a 10-inch belt, and it runs at the rate of 350 revolutions per minute. Her clothes were all torn off and wrapped around the shaft, while the hair on the left side of her head was wound into the boxing. Every time she went around the shaft she struck a corn-crusher that stood near. The drive-belt was very loose and her weight threw it off the pulley; that saved her life. Papa was at the door taking in corn and heard her scream. He ran to her, but the belt was off before he got there. 'Eunice, are you hurt?" he said. 'No,' she answered, but take me off of here'—but her hair was fast. Papa called to the men to give him a knife. 'No, no, don't cut my hair!' said Eunice. So the men unscrewed the boxing with a wrench and took out her hair, but it was ground off till it was only three inches long. Papa threw part of her dress around her and carried her to the house. Mamma never knew it till she saw him come in the yard. She ran out and cried, 'Oh, what has happened?' Eunice only said, 'Mamma, your little girl is nearly killed!' Her head has never quite healed up, but is doing well; she went to school last winter. Her hair on the right side has come in just as curly as it can be while on the other side it is almost straight. I hope we may never have another accident." I should think so! Children, there are some very useful lessons in that story for you. Just think how all that suffering could have been avoided if a little girl's hair had been plaited! After this, when you are told to fix your hair, you had better give your dolls a recess while you tend to it. And another thing, go around the mill when you are in a dangerous place; the wind is pretty apt to be blowing in its direction, and it might blow you into it. But I think the lesson of all is the way God loves children and takes care of them, and holds his loving arm between them and danger.

S. Lucinda P. Amsden is all just one person and she lives in Victor, Col , and she writes: "I want to become a member of the Advance Society, as I love the Bible and like to study. Will you please write me what history we are to read? I am 12 years old, a member of the church in Colorado Springs (of which Dr. B. B. Tyler is the pastor), a member of the Sunday-school and the Junior C. E. Society." No particular history is required. What we want is to acquire the habit of reading some history every week (at least five pages), so our minds will not run altogether to weeds and fiction. Pick out a history, or a biograhy that looks like it will be interesting—can't you tell by the looks of a book whether it is a bore or not?—and then fall to work. All history is true, or ought to be, and while we are reading about Mr. Micawber and Becky Sharp and Ellen Montgomery, do not let us neglect to read about sure-enough people who have lived in the world, just as we are living, who ate and slept and visited just as we do, and who became great and famous, and achieved notable things just as we expect to do. The worst thing about a history is usually the first chapter. A historian that knows his business must bound his country, and that is tiresome. But stick to it, cling on like a turtle in fair weather (you see I had to insist on fair weather in my simile,because a little thunder puts an end to a turtle's persistency), and pretty soon you will find yourself over the rocks, strolling in a delightful country; provided, always, that you have found the right kind of biography or history. If you don't like Dickens' "Child's History of England," or Irving's "Life of Columbus," the chances are you won't like any history till you are older, or have read more. But that doesn't matter. Just keep reading it any way; it will make you fat (I mean mentally, of course). You send in a report when you have kept the rules 12 weeks.

Kathleen Crouch, Lindley, Mo.: "I am spending the vacation here with my aunt. She takes the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and I have become very much interested in the children's department; I would like to join the Advance Society. I live in Harris. I will be examined for the fifth grade when school commences. I am 11. I like Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush, A Hardy Norseman, Little Women and Wide, Wide World. My sister, Allison, is five." Laura Belle Campbell, Raytown, Mo.: "My brother, Franklin, has kept the rules for his first quarter. He is 14, and enjoys the work. I have kept my second quarter. We are both members of the Christian Church. I like your continued story very much, and only wish it was longer." Jessie Shafer says: "That time our page was not in the paper I felt lonsome all week!" Floyd C. Reid, Santiago, Mo.: "Now for my narrow escape. When I was about six we had a barrel sunk in the cellar for the water to run in. It was on the cellar steps one day peeping at my little brother. My foot slipped and I fell headforemost into the water. I was a narrow escape. Nobody knew how I managed to escape. When I got out I ran to mamma, crying, 'Oh, mamma, am I drowned? am I drowned?' I had heard of people being drowned, and I thought I certainly must be!" Julia Cox, Cox, Mo.: "I am glad to write this time, for I have kept the five rules. The best time I had was last summer. A few of us little folks had a picnic in our pasture. We all took a lunch with us. We played hide-and-seek and several other games. About four o'clock we all went home." Lily Gooch and Clara Moses wish to know if any others have learned the Av. S. Yell. They think it would be a good thing for all quotations learned to be put into book form. I have no doubt it would form a fine collection.

New HONOR LIST: Elmer Clarence Rinehart (2nd quarter); Julia Cox (3rd quarter); Bertha Beesley (2nd quarter), Moshelle, Mo.; Floyd C. Reid (3rd quarter); Clara Moses and Lily Gooch, (2nd and 3rd quarters—they send two reports at once), Ashland, Ill.; Burleigh Cash (2nd quarter); D. M. Shafer (3rd quarter), Decatur, Texas; Vetura Blanche Collings (2nd quarter), Raytown, Mo.; Mabel and Gertrude Minnick, Davenport, Wash.; Laura Belle Campbell (2nd quarter), and Franklin Campbell and Beauford Collings, of Raytown, Mo. Next week the continued story will tell what happened when Jotham left his friends in the cave and slipped down to the well in the very midst of his enemies. Here is a new subject for you to write upon: Favorite Characters in History and Fiction. I would like for everybody to write me a list of their 10 favorites that they have read of in stories and a list of five historical persons who they think they would rather have met in real life, or whom they like best to hear of or read about. Don't forget—10 favorites of fiction, five favorites of history, not counting any one named in the Bible. When naming a fictitious character, tell what book it occurs in. I wish when sending reports you would mark your favorite quotation learned during the quarter; then I can print it; when you do not, there are so many I can't print all, and don't know which one to choose.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

THE TEMPLE BEGUN.*

It has already been stated that there are strong reasons for believing that the number of returning exiles who left Babylon for Jerusalem soon after the issuing of Cyrus' decree of permission in 538 B. C. was far less than has commonly been supposed. The list which is preserved to us in the second chapter of Ezra and which at first sight seems to be the actual number of those who constituted the first migration is, on closer inspection, perceived to be rather a register of those who at a later time were actually in the province of Judah. Of this fact the hints are numerous. In the first place, those who are mentioned first as constituting important personages are Zerubbabel, the prince, the successor of Sheshbazzar, and Jeshua, the high priest, who are known to have been in Judah in the year 520 during the ministry of the prophets Haggai and Zachariah, some eighteen years later. With them is closely associated Nehemiah, whose visit to Jerusalem can hardly be earlier than 450 B. C. during the reign of Artaxerxes I. It will be noticed further that the next name in the list in Ezra 2:2 is Seraiah, which, however, in the parallel passage (Neh. 7:7) is written Azariah and which is evidently none other than Ezra himself. It will thus be seen that the leaders of the first movements for a period of a century and a half after the edict of Cyrus are set down as a part of this census. Moreover, it will be noticed in the list itself that the people are grouped according to the cities which they occupied after they returned from captivity. Mention is made of the children of Gibeon, of those of Bethlehem, Anathoth, Ramah, of Michmas, of Bethel, of Jericho and of other towns. Of course, only a period of residence in the country could have permitted a census to speak of these persons in this manner, which gives a hint that the list was one made up many years after the beginning of the revival. In the summary of the list (Ezra 2: 64, 65) we are informed that the whole number of those who had returned up to that time was not less than fifty thousand. But the situation set forth in the books of the prophets Haggai and Zachariah in 520 indicates very clearly that the population of Judah was most scanty and unpromising, and refers to the people, not in the terms which characterize the new emigrants from Babylonia, but rather the people who had remained in the country. They speak of the population constantly as the "remnant," those who were "left in the land," which might probably also include those refugees who had made their way into neighboring provinces, but were sufficiently near by to return at the first signs of reviving prosperity. It will thus be seen that there are reasons for believing that the lists given to us in Ezra and Nehemiah are rather those of the total number of the returned after many years had passed and at a time when the nation had settled itself somewhat to an orderly life. It is scarcely possible, from the testimony of the documents themselves and of the prophets of the period, that more than a small fraction of fifty thousand came at the first opportunity offered them by the king of Persia. It was this very fact which constituted the serious problem of Judah's revival. The promises of restoration which the prophets had made seemed far from fulfillment and great discouragement burdened the minds of those who had actually returned. Nevertheless, it is certain that very soon after the arrival of the first company under the leadership of Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah, there was made a beginning of the new temple on the site of the old one in Jerusalem. It is not unlikely that there had been for some time, and perhaps during the entire period of the Exile, a semblance of worship kept up at the site. Indeed, the decree of Cyrus (Ezra 6:3) for the rebuilding of the temple alludes to the site as "the place where they offer sacrifices"—seemingly referring to a custom already in vogue and perhaps perpetuated from the time of the destruction of the city. It is equally certain that nothing very definite was done toward the rebuilding of the temple until the year 520, so that the actual work of the returned exiles at first could hardly have been more than a formal laying out of the temple site and perhaps the preparation, in some small way, of a foundation This would naturally occur soon after 538 under the direction of Sheshbazzar. Perhaps there was at that time established a somewhat more regular form of worship in connection with this foundation, but anything like actual progress in the building of the temple was not made until many years later.

Our lesson sets forth the fact of this beginning, with such accessories of Levitical service as were possible under such meagre auspices. The lines of the temple foundation were laid out and a few priests, who had come with the returned pilgrims, took the leading place in the services and with musical instruments assisted in the worship. The beginnings of the later temple psalmody are already in evidence. To be sure, many psalms of our collection are probably earlier than the time of the return, but the actual work of collection into a volume to be used in the liturgy of the temple was probably not undertaken until later. There was enough of joy, however, on the part of those present to fill up somewhat the lack of attending pomp and circumstance. Still, there were those present who had seen the old house which had been destroyed some fifty years before and who, seeing the barrenness of the city, its demolished walls, its ruined houses and the general air of desolation which pervaded the scene, together with the stately structure which Solomon had erected centuries before, wept as they marked the change. These mingled voices of joy and sorrow were the strange accompaniment of the simple task of laying the early foundations.

The reason for the slowness of the work in building the temple after it was once projected is set forth by the narrator as due to the antipathy of the surrounding people, who were not permitted to share in the work of the restored community. The reason assigned, however, by the prophets themselves at the period when the temple was actually rebuilt was that the community was so weak that it was unable to accomplish the restoration of the house of God, or was too discouraged to undertake it. Probably both reasons operated, though it is also likely that the opposition of the neighboring people was not as great at first as after the reforming zeal of Ezra had wrought that clear line of separation between the Jews and their neighbors, and had caused the feeling of resentment on the part of all outside the elect circle of the chosen people; but our narrative dwells upon such opposition as was raised to the actual work of the builders in this period. Judah and Benjamin are grouped together as the surviving people of the covenant, and perhaps, after the years during which Jerusalem had lain prostrate in desolation, the outside inhabitants were unwilling to see it return to a prosperity which indicated pre-eminence over themselves. It was perhaps partly this feeling and partly the real desire to co-operate with the Jews in their new enterprise and the refusal which they received from the leaders at Jerusalem which turned them against the new community. Certain it is that the people of the province north of Judah in the days of Jesus were as earnest worshipers of God and as faithful to the Mosaic teachings as were the Jews themselves. The Samaritans had a copy of the Pentateuch, which they preserved with scrupulous care, and they observed all the regulations of the ancient Hebrew life, claiming indeed that their sanctuary at Mt. Gerizim was the place where men ought to worship God. Of course, these movements grew up long subsequent to the time of which we are studying, but the seeds of that opposition were sown at an early period after the return. The claim is made by these neighbors of Judah that since the days of the fall of Samaria under the king of Assyria, in 722 B. C., they have observed the true worship of God and are, therefore, entitled to join with the Jews at Jerusalem in the building of their shrine. But Zerubbabel, the prince, who was a descendant of the royal family of Judah, together with Jeshua, the high priest, speaking as the two heads of the community, refused utterly any right to these neighbors to share in the work committed to their hands. This attitude on their part naturally awakened resentment and caused a long series of diplomatic efforts to be made at the court of Persia to stop the building of the temple. It was not difficult to persuade kings as jealous as those of the Mesopotamian Valley that the new elements in Jerusalem were seeking to build up an independent state and to set at naught the authority of the empire. It is probable, therefore, that both factors must be recognized—such outward opposition as was made, which was probably much more open and avowed at a period later than that of the present lesson, and, on the other hand, that weakness of the community resulting from the scanty and impoverished remnant of the inhabitants of the land and the fewness of those who had returned as yet from Babylon.

One cannot fail to observe, by carefully studying the testimony of our sources concerning this period, that the revival of Judah was very slow, laborious and disheartening, that the men who stood at the head of affairs—Sheshbazzar, Zerubbabel and Jeshua—were rather weak and incompetent for leadership and that the whole burden of responsibility for the reawakening of Israel's life devolved upon the prophets who were soon to rise to lead the way toward the actual resurrection of which Ezekiel had spoken. It is difficult to see how there could have been any revival aside from the prophetic activity. Where political plans and national self-interest failed, the work of the divine teachers appeared to supplement and overshadow all of these; and the future of Judah, together with the hope of the world's redemption through the Savior, was made possible only through the work of heroic men guided by the Spirit of God, who took in hand the small and scanty resources of the community and sought to bring order out of chaos and hope out of despair. Thus in Israel, as in every community, the preachings of righteousness is the solvent of national and individual problems. Apart from that divine instruction which comes through the preaching of the gospel, the state and society have no sure means of reaching happiness and prosperity. Every community needs the gospel and needs it in increasing measure. The Christian people are the salt of the earth. The preachers of the gospel are the prophets of the Lord, bearing witness of his will and offering the only hope for social and civic righteousness and peace.

TOPIC FOR SEPT. 3.

HOLDING UP THE PASTOR'S HANDS: WHAT CAN WE DO TO HELP OUR PASTOR?

(Ex. 17:1-13.)

How beautiful a thing it is, this picture of the man of God not strong enough in himself, supported on either side by his helpers. How it comes home to each one who, conscious of his own weakness, has ever been called upon to stretch upward tired hands in order that the cause of God might prevail. How weary sometimes are the hands upward held! How faint grows the heart and sick when it feels "these poor feeble hands must soon come down!" Then what joy, what relief comes with the consciousness of two or three standing by to support.

As often as not, perhaps, those who help the pastor most are doing it in little ways that they are not aware of. It's an old story, possibly, to repeat these ways, but they cannot too often be brought to our minds.

1. Stay after the Endeavor meeting to the evening service. If you do not stay, your pastor knows it, and every one who goes cuts a nerve of his arm. "But it is not possible for me to stay!" Sure? If it were a musical service by the choir wouldn't you find it possible? You are needed at the night service as much as in the C. E. meeting, to greet strangers, to sing, to supply nerve-force to the gospel message.

2. Keep that part of your pledge which is more shattered than any other, and go to the midweek prayer-meeting. You growl because the old, old speeches are made by the old, old, prosy speakers. Then you make a new one in poetry! Keep your pledge and freshen that meeting!

3. Let us never criticise our pastor except to his face. Let people find out his faults for themselves, but let us be determined that people shall never find out his faults from us. When he becomes unbearable to many he will go; but till that time we should suffer in silence. The greater the silence the more is the suffering reduced. Every word of criticism, however just, is a sword-thrust, not into him, but into his work.

4. Pray for the pastor. Even if our prayer is in secret, our Heavenly Father shall reward us openly by showing us added strength in our pastor's arm, and if it should once come to his ears that a little company, even if it be but two or three, are praying for him, how his face would shine!

5. When he preaches, look at him and listen to him. A listless audience is like tired arms. Some audiences sustain a preacher as wet clothes sustain a swimmer. Others are like a cork jacket. Let every hearer resolve himself into cork.

6. Sometimes a foolish little boy or girl lays a flower on the preacher's desk in his study before he goes into the pulpit. He places it in his buttonhole, and the fragrance of it is like a constant prayer throughout his sermon. Said Dr. Munger in conversation once to me, "When a preacher is in the pulpit he must never spare himself." It is then he dies on the cross. Do you not think it beautiful, then, to add a flower to the sacrifice.

7. When the preacher asks a thing of one of his flock, how it adds to the value of the service if it is done with cheerfulness! How plainly sometimes do the features say where the tongue is silent, "Well, I'll do it, but you're imposing on my good nature!" When, bless you, the good nature isn't there to impose on. Did David Harum ever say, "A willin' hoss is wuth twict as much?" If not he ought to have.

8. Help the pastor to shake hands after service with strangers and everybody. Some people think it professional in him to shake hands. If we shake too, it will destroy the professionalism, and all hands that aren't sore love to be shaken.

9. Help him visit the sick. I have known many boards of elders who are supposed to visit people, but somehow there is only one elder that ever does it, and that's Elder Brown or Elder Smith who lives in the parsonage and preaches on Sundays. Let every member of the congregation help the board of elders, which so rarely help itself, in visiting the sick.

10. Forbear nagging the pastor. He'll come to see you when your turn comes. He'll visit your section of the church work in due time. His watchful eye is over all, though you don't know it. Give him more room. He's responsible for all and he feels it. That is but a poor employe who keeps rushing to headquarters for instructions. Go on in your little corner silently, and if need be, alone. He will find you out.

Finally, if your pastor fails to thank you for your propping up his hands, do not think he doesn't appreciate it. He may be silent, but he is helped. Even if he doesn't know the quarter from whence cometh his help, the Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly.

BROWN.

Martha A., wife of W. B. Brown, departed this life early Thursday morning, August 3, 1899, at her home in this city. She was born in Kentucky, October 6, 1828. Her parents moved to Missouri in her early childhood. The greater part of her life was spent in Monroe County. Sister Brown confessed her faith in Christ and united with his church in her 16th year. Her life was spent in the service of the Master. She was one of God's noble women, whose many excellent traits of character have had an influence for good upon all who knew her. She had been almost a constant sufferer for more than forty years, yet was always cheerful and patient. Her faith was beautiful and her hope bright. She believed and rejoiced in the promise that "all things work together for good to them that love the Lord." For forty-three years she and her husband walked the path of life together. Three children came to bless their home, and are left with the father and husband to mourn the loss of a devoted companion, a loving mother and a wise counselor. Their hearts are sad, but they have the blessed hope of meeting again in the world of light, where there is no separation, but joy and peace and praise forevermore.

COLVIN.

In Beebe, Ark., July 1, 1899, A. B. Colvin, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Colvin, of Arapahoe, Neb., aged 30 years. In the midst of a busy, useful life, with but a brief illness, this good brother passed to his eternal home. He was at the time of his death an elder in the Christian Church at Beebe, superintendent of the Sunday-school, and teacher of the young people's Bible class. He was also president of the local Y. P. S. C. E. and had been recently elected at state superintendent of Y. P. S. C. E. work as the recent church convention of the state held at Hot Springs. The local church is stronger for his untiring work, and the business world the purer for his carrying his Christianity into his every-day life.

THURMAN.

Eliza Lenora Thurman was born at New Haven, Mo., Dec. 4, 1875. She became a Christian at the age of 17 and was a member of the Church of Christ at New Haven until her death, which occurred July 16, 1899. October 24, 1897 she was married to Jas. Thurman who, with a babe, survives her. Funeral service by the writer.

VAN ZANT.

Departed this life Aug. 5th, 1899, at Independence, Kan., Sister Mary R. Van Zant, in the 89th year of her age. She was born in Fleming County, Ky., and was married in 1830 to Elijah Van Zant who fell asleep in 1876. Of this union 12 children were born, seven of whom are dead; three of the sons are living in California and two daughters, Sisters M. M. Hallingworth and M. C. Lanning, live at Independence. Sister Van Zant united with the Christian Church in 1821 and died at a good old age, yet still a trusting child of God, sweet-spirited and patient under all of her afflictions. The writer preached at her funeral.

WALLEY.

Lottie Elmira Walley, of Hannibal, died at the home of relatives at Emerson, Mo., July 21, 1899, aged nine years. She was happy and loved in the Sunday-school both by classmates and teacher. She made cheerful the home and every circle of playmates. Her honest, sincere and hopeful life had already predicted for her a noble womanhood. But we bow to the will of the wise Father. Her Savior needed her. The mother has had a double trial within a year, having lost her husband in a railroad wreck. She has the sympathy of all.

WELLS.

Mary A. Wells was born in Hardin County, Ky., Feb 11th, 1836, and moved with her parents (Stephen Notingham and wife) to Richmond County, Ill. On the 16th of April, 1856, she was united in marriage to T. J. Wells, and in 1859, under the labors of Wm. Read, became a member of the Church of Christ at Union Prairie, and lived to the day of her death a true and faithful member. Sister wells was one of a few against whom no accusation of any kind could be brougth. She was ever mindful that all her words and actions should conform to the will of Christ, in whom she trusted. She died August 11th, 1899, at the age of 63 years, six months and one day, and was tenderly laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery at Ingraham, Ill.

The Jubilee Convention Bulletin No. 2.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, OCTOBER, 13-20, 1899.

Every state and territory in the United States will be repesented; also Canada, England, Australia, New Zealand, China, Japan, India, Jamaica. The convention embraces:

American Christian Missionary Society,
The Christian Woman's Board of Missions,
Foreign Christian Missionary Society,
Board of Church Extension,
Board of Negro Education and Evangelization,
National Board of Education, with special meetings of the alumni of each college, Gathering of Christian Endeavorers,
Gathering of Christian Sunday-school workers,
Board of Ministerial Relief,
With many conferences, such as Pastors and Evangelists,
Business Men,
Pioneers,
State and National Secretaries,
Benevolent Associations, etc.

It is less than a century since the Disciples of Christ began their mighty plea for the union of the children of God by a return to primitive Christianity. Just fifty years since the American Christian Missionary Society was organized in Cincinnati, and twenty-five years since the Christian Woman's Board of Missions was born in the same city. How richly God has blessed us in these years. "He hath not dealt so with any people." Within the lifetime of many who will be present at this convention we have grown from a feeble folk to number at least 1,100,000. Our papers, colleges and missionary organizations are towers of strength and ever increasing. It is fitting that we should gather this fall in Cincinnati in great throngs, were most of our missionary organizations were born, and celebrate the golden and silver jubilees of these first two societies in the city of their birth. It will be a in the history of great missionary movements. None expect fewer than 10,000 delegates; many confidently look for 15,000. May it be greater in social joy, intellectual uplift and spiritual power. The union communion service alone will pay you for coming. Cincinnati will welcome the hosts with joy.

ENTERTAINMENT.

According to a resolution passed at the Indianapolis convention, the degates prefer to provide for their own entertainment. The Committee on Assignment, however, will take great pleasure in providing places of entertainment, according to the following schedule:

Hotels—American plan, $1 to $3 per day; European plan (lodging only), 50 cents to $1.

Boarding houses and private homes of the city will make a rate of $1 to $1.25 per day. Lodging can be secured in boarding house and homes at from 50 to 75 cents per day. Meals can be obtained at many excellent restaurants from 15 cents upward.

The committee will make no assignments until delegates arrive, but those desiring to be assigned before coming, if they tell will the committee what they desire, will be put in correspondence with suitable parties, and can arrange the matter themselves. Some have already done this.

RAIROAD RATES.

One fare for round trip has been granted from all points in Central Passenger Association territory. Tickets to be on sale October 12, 14, 16 and 17, 1899; good returning to and including October 21. Note especially the selling dates of tickets.

THE LARGEST ATTENDANCE.

The churches that are brought in touch with this convention will find it a power to quicken their spiritual life and enlarge their zeal for the Master. So it is important that everywhere churches, Sunday-schools and Christian Endeavor societies begin to plan to send delegates, and by repeated announcements seek to secure a large delegation. The churches should be made to feel that the preachers are desperately in earnest about this matter. Every church in the brotherhood should be represented. One Kentucky Christian Endeavor Society has already arranged to send fifty, a new church at Columbus, O., fourteen. Faculty and students of two colleges will be here. Canvass your church at once and tell us how many will come.

EXCURSION MANAGERS.

Fifty excursion managers are at work in different parts of the country, and many have already arranged for large delegations. Give them all the support possible, but wherever a carload can be secured, let it be done. Certainly, half rates or less can be secured wherever a large number of delegates is assured.

JUBILEE CONVENTION HEADQUARTERS.

The Central Christian Church will be headquarters during the convention for the enrollment and assignment of committees. It is now the headquarters for all the local committees. It is located on Ninth Street, near Central Avenue, and is about six blocks from Music Hall. The Central Church telephone is No. 821.

THE RECEPTION COMMITTEE.

About 150 young people are being organized to meet delegates at the trains and escort them to the headquarters. They desire to know the exact time special delegations expect to arrive, that they may meet the trains before they arrive at the city depot.

THINGS TO REMEMBER.

1. This first meeting is the reception, Thursday night, October 12.
2. Enroll at Central Church as soon as you arrive.
3. Your badge and program with music will not be given you until you enroll, and you will need these before you go to any sessions of the convention.
4. Send your name at once, indicating the sort of entertainment you desire, and the committee will gladly help you to find a suitable home.

OLD TIMES AND OUR TIMES.

BY F. D. POWER, WASHINGTON, D. C.

There was the charity chain craze, offering membership in the charity chain for ten cents, and requesting a busy man to return the communication with ten cents, and sit down and make two exact copies of the same, sending to two friends with the same reasonable request, and they repeat the same performance until twenty should perfect the mystic round, and closing with anxious warning against breaking the chain; and when the $200,000 thus raised is all in, the giver's name shall be enrolled, like John Hancock's, where "all nations shall behold it, and all time shall not efface it."

There was the nickel-for-every-member novelty, asking for five cents from every man, woman and child, and requesting every one to solicit nickels for one week from their friends, and when the sum of thousands shall have been raised, money may be sent, and the enterprise may be inaugurated, and the names of the great multitude of five-centers will be placed in the corner stone and recorded in a volume for their perpetual fame, and all children are requested to go without candy, and grown people to deny themselves a cigar or ribbon, and the preacher is modestly enjoined not only to do this in his own congregation, but to pursue the good work in others by correspondence.

There was the autograph quilt curiosity—a proposition to all good men and true in every place—twenty blocks and twenty names wanted for each block, to be marked with red thread, ten cents to be contributed with each name, and as the names of distinguished persons will help in selling, "please get the President, vice-President, members of the Cabinet and members of Congress to write their names in a block and return as soon as possible."

There was the old method of sending the pastor, or some brother or sister who travels, and get $5 here and $10 there and $20 yonder, and the cost of getting it eats up half of the sum contributed, the pastor is away from his post, and if he gets enough it is sunk in one place and never heard of again. The last brother who came to see me this way traveled a thousand miles, saw the inauguration, and got just enough to pay his way to Washington and return, and did not think it worth crediting to us in his report of funds received.

We are grieved by these devices. The good people who resort to them are our brethren, most excellent, most devoted, most worthy of help. We feel for them and want to help them. Now Church Extension meets these multitudinous calls. It looks into such cases as need investigating. By the co-operation of all our churches it provides for such as are worthy. The Church Extension Board meets the absolute necessity for a consideration of such appeals and the distribution wisely of such benevolence. By organization and united effort on the part of all, a thousand times more is done and better done than could ever be done under the old haphazard methods, and the dollar you give helps, not one struggling church, but twenty churches every century, and goes on helping for a thousand years.

A GREAT ADVANTAGE.

Suppose a telephone company should be organized for long-distance purposes and the rate would be made low enough so that every preacher in the land might have one in his house and be able to talk to his friends in distant cities.

Again, suppose all the preachers in the land felt so interested in a good Church Extension offering that they would begin to order supplies by telephone from the Kansas City office about August 1st. Telephones all over the land would be so tied up with the repeated messages to the Church Extension office that a great stir would be made in the land.

Really, why could not every preacher in our brotherhood order supplies by sending in a postal card? The board would gladly furnish supplies. They are in the office to use. There are "Nuggets of Truth on Church Extension," "Extracts of our Annual Report," "Collection Envelopes," etc. Send in your order to G. W. Muckley, Kansas City, Mo.

Again, what a great advantage to step to the telephone the Saturday before the last Sunday of September and call up some unintentionally forgetful preacher and say, "Ting-a-ling, ling! Hello, Central! Please give me the City of Forgetfulness." Getting the town, you call up the pastor who has omitted to take the offering and stir up his pure mind by way of remembrance of these things. He responds, "All right; glad you called my attention to it; for, being busy, other things had kept me from attending to it."

Really, there is no excuse for a pastor forgetting so important a duty Every congregation in the land would respond to the call for the September offering if only there were some one to present its claims. Think of 2,700 homeless congregations among us! Nine hundred and fifty churches organized the past two years. Only 550 of them provided with homes. Can we properly rejoice at the Jubilee Convention if we provide a large Evangelizing Fund and have so small an Extension Fund that 50 per cent. of our churches go down for lack of homes?

Perpetual Motion Discovered, or what $1,500 will do Perpetually in Church Extensio

Each building in the cut represents a mission church aided by a loan of $500 from the Church Extension Fu each year for ten years, beginning in 1880.

Suppose one of our stronger churches should undertake to start perpetual motion of money by contributing $1,5 in five years.

In 1880, the church would send $500 to the Church Extension Board which would be loaned out to the fi church represented by 80. This church must be aided altogether by the first contribution.

In 1881, the 80 church pays back its first note of $100 and the contributing church sends $400 to the Board a $500 is loaned to build the 81 church.

In 1882, the 80 church pays back its second note of $100 and the 81 church its first note of $100 and the c tributing church sends $300 to the Board and a loan is made to build the 82 church.

In 1883, the 80 church pays off its third note, the 81 church its second note, the 82 church its first note, and contributing church sends $200, making a $500 loan to build the 83 church.

In 1884, the 80 church pays it fourth note, 81 its third, 82 its second, 83 its first and the contributing chu sends its last $100 to the Board which completes its total of $1,500, and the perpetual motion is started, because in 1 the 85 church is built by the 80 church paying off its last note, 81 its fourth, 82 its third, 83 its second, and 84 its fi making $500 to build the 85 church.

By this we see that a church contributing $1,500 in five regular annual payments may start the "Perpetual Motic of Church Extension and assist the Board each year to build a mission chapel with a $500 loan until time shall no more.

Are you a mission church? If so, do not fail to pay back your fifth of the loan each year, for a break along line puts the machine out of order.

There are hundreds of our stronger congregations that could undertake this plan in their own name for Chri sake.—J. A. CLEMENS, Arcola, Ill.

The above is just as true of smaller contributions. The illustration serves to show what your money will working in the Church Extension Fund.

THE
CHRISTIAN - EVANGELIST

J. H. GARRISON, EDITOR.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

THE EXILED PROPHET

By J. G. ENCELL

For 60 Days We Offer This Book For $1.00, Postpaid

This book is of especial interest to Sunday-school teachers just now. Some of the Sunday-school lessons for the third quarter of 1899 are taken from the Book of Daniel, and the first seventy pages of "The Exiled Prophet" contain an Essay on the Book of Daniel, written by the well-known author and Bible scholar, Dr. D. R. Dungan. This essay will explain the Prophecy of Daniel, and should be read and studied by the Sunday-school teachers of to-day. Having read this they will be prepared to present the Sunday-school lessons in the present quarter to their classes in an acceptable manner. In addition to Dr. D. R. Dungan's explanation of Daniel the book is an able treatise on Revelation, the author of which has devoted many years of study and investigation to what many think is a "Sealed Book."

The book embraces 245 pages, neatly bound in cloth and profusely illustrated. Send orders to CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., ST. LOUIS.

The Christian Hymnist,

A New Church Singing Book.

A Brand-new Singing Book for All Departments of Church Work and Worship.
Over 300 pages, More than 500 Tunes, and between 600 and 700 Hymns.

Part One

Contains the old standard hymns and tunes, gathered from every available source, together with a large number of new tunes, written expressly for this book.

Part Two

Contains choice and valuable hymns and tunes of the "Gospel Songs" order by leading writers and composers.

In compiling and editing this book, both the Choir and Congregation were kept in mind, as, in fact, were all the departments of Church work where praise in song is given.

Choice Tunes

From such writers as TENNY, the FILLMORES, SHOWALTER, OGDEN, TOWNER, HERBERT, GABRIEL, ROBERTS, HOFFMAN, PAINTER, ROSECRANS, HAWES, WARE, KIEFFER, O'KANE, THOMPSON, DOANE, GIFFE, LANGLEY, DOUTHIT, SUFFERN, RHEEM, MOORE, KING, ALLEMAN, KURZENKNABE, CRIST, BELDEN, MCPHERSON, HUGG, MCINTOSH, MCCAULEY, LORENZ, HOPKINS, and others, will be found in this collection.

Our Own Writers

Another feature of the book is the number of our own hymn-writers represented: BATEMAN, BROWN, BRADLEY, COBB, TRICKETT, WRIGHT, GILCREST, and others.

The Music

In this work is sufficiently classical for the most cultured choir, yet of a character that can be comprehended and rendered by any congregation.

The topical arrangement of the work is so perfect that an appropriate hymn and tune for any occasion can readily be found.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Thomas Brackett Reed, Speaker of the House of Representatives in the United States Congress, has sent in his resignation as a member of Congress from the first district of Maine to Governor Llewellyn, of that state, to take effect Sept. 4th. It has been known for several months that it was Mr. Reed's purpose to resign politics for the practice of law, and in view of this fact Republican members of Congress have decided on Gen. Henderson, of Iowa, to be his successor as Speaker of the House. Thomas B. Reed has been a conspicuous figure in our national politics for many years, and it is scarcely too much to say that he was the ablest man in Congress. He has no doubt indulged in Presidential aspirations, and his party friends have strongly sympathized with his aspirations, but so far fortune has not favored this pardonable ambition. He was, beyond doubt, one of the ablest Speakers who have ever presided over the American Congress. Though denounced as a "czar" for his severe methods of compelling business to proceed, time and his political opponents have justified his course. To voluntarily lay down the vast political power wielded by the Speaker of the House for the pursuits of private life is a phenomenon not often witnessed. Mr. Reed is to locate in New York City to engage in law practice, in which, it is reported, he is guaranteed a salary of $50,000 a year. Whether this is the chief motive that has prompted his retirement from office, or whether it is a shrewd move by which he may the more surely realize his political ambition, is a question about which there is a difference of opinion. It is difficult, however, to see how his chances for the presidency would be enhanced by this move. The money motive is probably the chief one, with some weariness, no doubt, of political life, which held no higher honors for him, in all probability, than he had already realized.

President Jacob Gould Schurman, one of the United States Commissioners to the Philippines, has returned to this country after a six months' study of the situation in those islands, at the instance of President McKinley. In an interview he is reported as saying that he is not at liberty as yet to speak so far as the results of his official negotiations with the representatives of Aguinaldo or other Filipino officials are concerned. As to the causes of the rebellions in those islands, the last of which we are trying to suppress, the principal ones, he thinks, are the "tyranny of some of the religious orders, the exercise of arbitrary power by the governor-generals and the delay and corruption of justice." The masses of the people, he says, have been told and believe that under American rule they would be subject to the same tyranny. Concerning the beginning of the present rebellion and the relation of the Tagalos to other tribes, President Schurman says:

> Before Feb. 4, the Tagalos thought that the Americans were cowards and that their victory in Manila Harbor was due altogether to their superior ships. They provoked the Americans to fight and expected to be looting Manila within twenty-four hours. Aguinaldo is believed in the islands to be honest, and I think that he is acting honestly in money matters, but whether from moral or political reasons I would not say. While I do not care to discuss the real motives behind the rebellion at this time, I will say that if it were suppressed there would be many prominent native officials out of an occupation. At present the Tagalos are levying taxes on all the other tribes, and the collectors cannot be watched to see whether they turn over all the money or not. The other tribes are neutral, and are being domineered over by small armed forces of Tagalos.

When Mr. Schurman has submitted his official report to the President he will feel freer to talk, no doubt, concerning the condition of things in those islands.

The Dreyfus trial drags slowly along, with the civilized world as interested spectators. During the past week the wounded counselor of Dreyfus, M. Labori, has sufficiently recovered from the effects of his wound to resume his place in the court, to the great discomfiture of some of the leading witnesses for the prosecution. Captain Dreyfus himself seems at last to have awakened to a realization of the conspiracy against him, and instead of contenting himself, as at first, with indignant denials of the accusations against him, and the protests of his innocence, is improving the opportunities offered him to defend himself against his accusers by a calm and dispassionate examination of the evidence which they offer. The prosecution is making considerable capital out of a report that a "Dreyfus syndicate" has furnished 35,000,000 francs to prevent the conviction of the prisoner. There appears to be no evidence whatever of such a syndicate, but the mere intimation that there is such a thing, together with the charge that foreigners are enlisted on the side of Dreyfus against France, is having its weight with many people. In spite of the fact that no new evidence of importance has been furnished by the prosecution and that witnesses for the defense have shown the baselessness of much of the testimony that has been offered, the friends of Dreyfus are not wholly sanguine of the outcome. They feel that the court-martial, made up of officers in the army who are inferior in rank to the general officers who are arrayed against Dreyfus, will be overawed by them and will fear to acquit the prisoner. A few prominent men, however, such as M. Cornely, editorial writer of the Figaro, confidently predict the clearing of Dreyfus. But whatever may be the issue of this famous trial, the probability increases that some sort of a revolution will be attempted by one class or another as a result. Evidently the political atmosphere of France needs purification, and it may require a storm to purify it.

None of the anti-trust talk of which we see and hear so much from the political leaders has the slightest effect, it would seem, in checking the formation of new trusts. A dispatch from Pittsburg announces that two consolidations of coal mining interests have been completed there within the last fortnight which will affect the consumers of bituminous coal throughout the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys and the lake region. One of these is the Monongahela Coal and Coke Company and the other the Pittsburg Coal Company. The total capitalization of these two concerns, the dispatch informs us, will be $104,000,000. Railroad and steamboat lines, coal elevators and yards are included in this combination. It is further stated that the stock of both companies has been heavily over-subscribed, and that premiums are already offered for the stock of subscription rights. All this, of course, means no good to the coal consumers throughout the vast regions of country above mentioned. Already we read of soaring prices of both anthracite and bituminous coal in expectation of the winter's demands. It would be a well-deserved providential rebuke to this colossal greed if some other kind of fuel, which would be a substitute for coal, should be discovered, and leave these great combinations stranded for want of patronage. Until such substitute is found, is there any hope in legislation for the needed protection of the common people, and especially of the poorer classes, against the exorbitant demands of these coal combines? This is a question in which a great many people are interested.

The response to Porto Rico's appeal to this country for relief from the disaster caused by the late hurricane has been such as to convince the people of that island, if they needed such evidence, that Americans have more than a mere commercial interest in them and their island. A special dispatch to the Globe-Democrat, from Philadelphia, says:

> The auxiliary cruiser, Panther, with $50,000 worth of food, clothing and building material on board for the relief of the suffering Porto Ricans, left her berth at the Washington Avenue wharf shortly after 9 o'clock to-day, for her run to San Juan, which Capt. Ward hopes to reach by Saturday. The relief committee gave out the following schedule of purchases, the greater part of which was shipped on the Panther: Two hundred cases condensed milk, 3,661 sacks flour, 640 barrels flour, 200 bags hominy, 200 barrels rolled oats, 100 bags barley, 125 bags green peas, 680 bags pea beans, 500 cases tomatoes, 600 bags rice, 300 kegs nails, 40 barrels pork, 15 barrels beef, 309 cases corn, 122 barrels crackers, 25 barrels salt, 10,000 yards gingham, 50,000 feet lumber, locks, hinges, hatchets, saws, rules, screws, nails, screwdrivers, dry goods, ready-made clothing, lard, salt herring and other provisions. The Red Cross Association contributed $1,000 to be used for the purchase of building lumber, tools for carpenters, hardware and ready-made clothing. Powers and Weighman sent 1,000 ounces of quinine.

Whatever else may be needed to prevent suffering will be cheerfully furnished by the generous people of this country who never hear the cry of distress without reaching out helping hands.

THE CHRISTIAN - EVANGELIST AND HIGHER CRITICISM.

In another place will be found an article by Bro. G. F. Assiter entitled, "The Higher Criticism," in which the attitude of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST toward higher criticism is lamented and criticized. We do not trouble our readers with mere personal criticisms, but this article deals, in a spirit of candor and kindness, with the policy of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and it seeems but just to the writer and to ourself that we should pay respectful attention to his statements.

It is due to Bro. A. to state that he is not a long-time reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Otherwise it would hardly have been possible for so clear a thinker and so fair-minded a man to have fallen into the error of saying of this paper, "It has championed the cause of the critics," etc. To say that we have "championed the cause of the higher critics" is wide of the mark. This by no means expresses our real attitude toward higher criticism and the higher critics. It ought not to be necessary for us to state that higher criticism lies outside the sphere of our legitimate work; that one must be a specialist, having the proper equipment and devoting himself especially to that field, in order for his opinion to be entitled to any weight on any question of higher criticism. That is not our work. There is a large number of scholars who are engaged in the study of these historical and literary questions. Many of these questions are very important in themselves and have an important bearing upon our understanding of the Bible. But, after all, higher criticism is but a means to an end, and not an end itself. We are glad, however, so many scholars are devoting their time and talent to this field of inquiry. We are sure that good will come out of this investigation. Errors will be committed, no doubt, and wrong conclusions will be frequently reached, which later investigation will modify or reverse; but out of it all there will come a clearer, broader, better view of the Bible.

What, then, has been and is the attitude of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST toward the higher criticism? It has, indeed, championed the right of Christian scholars to discover every fact, historical, chronological or literary, that throws any light upon any book of the Bible and report the same. So far we may be set down, properly, as championing the cause of the higher critics. We have never, however, accepted, much less championed, many of the conclusions of the higher critics. Some of these conclusions seem to us hostile to the integrity, inspiration and authority of the Scriptures; others seem to us to be lacking in sufficient evidence; concerning many others, we have not taken the time from a busy and crowded life to investigate the evidence, pro and con., and arrive at any satisfactory conclusion. Finally, there are some results of recent biblical criticism sufficiently clear and apparent to commend themselves to our acceptance, and we have been greatly helped by them.

But, as stated above, we have not entered this field, except in a mere incidental way. One might suppose from what is stated in the article in question, and by others of our correspondents, that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was very largely devoting itself to the subject of higher criticism. If one will take the pains to examine our files during the past few years, since these questions have been rife, he will be surprised to find how little we have said on the subject. Our reason for this course has been twofold: In the first place, we do not feel ourself equipped for the work of a higher critic, nor have we the time for that sort of investigation; and in the second place, it is very evident that our readers are not prepared for any such investigation. Those of them that feel the need of such study will have no difficulty in finding the books and magazines that will assist them in their investigations.

If any one is desirous of a fuller statement of what we think our attitude should be toward the subject of higher criticism, he will find it in a small tract entitled, "Higher Criticism: What it is, and What Should be Our Attitude Toward it," which was first delivered by the editor of this paper before the Texas Christian Lectureship in December, 1893, and subsequently published in tract form by the Christian Publishing Company. Now that the editor's position has been attacked by a number of writers, we should be glad to have all our readers who are interested in this subject read this lecture. We beg leave here to make a brief quotation from it, bearing upon the phase of the subject we are now considering:

"Perhaps the most practical question for this Lectureship to consider is, What should be our attitude toward the higher criticism? Four attitudes are conceivable, viz., (1) indifference; (2) indiscriminate hostility; (3) indiscriminate acceptance of everything suggested by higher critics; (4) a hearty recognition of the legitimacy of higher criticism as an instrument for ascertaining the truth concerning the Bible, with the reserved right of accepting or rejecting its conclusions according as they may commend themselves to our judgment, after giving them an honest and fearless examination. In view of what I have already said you will not be in any doubt as to which of these attitudes I think we ought to assume. The first is worthy only of religious dullards; the second of creed-bound traditionalists; the third of unanchored rationalists who, having loosed the cable of faith, are seeking to steer their course by the light of reason alone. The fourth attitude is alone worthy of enlightened and loyal Christians, freed from the bondage of opinionism, andstanding fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made them free. On this point I confess to having felt for some time a deep solicitude for the brotherhood of believers with which it is my honor and privilege to be connected. Our position is a unique one in the religious world. We have broken loose from the tyranny of human creeds, not to escape the obligations of an evangelical faith, as some have done, but to put ourselves in a position where we may defend it more successfully, unimpeded by traditions and unhampered by party restraints. We have said to the whole world, 'The Messiahship and divinity of Jesus of Nazareth is the creed of Christianity and on that rock foundation we take our stand, rejecting all other foundations.' Here we have stood, fought our battles and won our victories. Our position has given us a freedom to investigate the Bible and to accept all its teachings unknown since the apostolic age. Alexander Campbell, that intrepid leader whose memory we revere, stood, in his day, in the forefront of the battle for Bible translation and investigation, urging that its books be studied in the light of their surroundings and with due consideration of who the writer was, what he was writing about and to whom he was writing. This is the very essence of higher criticism. He was not afraid of the light, but wanted it turned on from every quarter. My solicitude has been that we maintain this enlightened and courageous attitude toward biblical investigation, and not join with the unthinking devotees of adamantine creeds and traditions in decrying higher criticism in an indiscriminate way. This would be unworthy of our position and history."

This has been the attitude of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on this subject through all these years. If this be condemned by any of our readers, we are sorry for it, but we cannot do otherwise, so help us God.

The larger part of the article to which we have referred is occupied with showing what was the character of some of the men who were identified with criticism in the beginning. Only a word of reply is necessary to that part of the article. It would be an easy matter to make out a list tenfold longer of the names of consecrated, devout scholars of the evangelical type who have devoted themselves unreservedly to these biblical inquiries. Shall we reject the Declaration of Independence because Thomas Jefferson was a deist, as some charge? It must be remembered, too, that a great many writers who are charged with "infidelity," were infidels only in rejecting the superstitions, traditions and corruptions of an apostate church which they had unfortunately identified with Christianity.

The question, after all, is not what was the character of the men who started these investigations, nor what motives impelled them, but are these legitimate questions to investigate? and ought we, therefore, to grant full liberty to their investigation? We are compelled to answer these questions in the affirmative, and only those who would give them a negative answer have any issue with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as to our attitude toward higher criticism.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE FEETWASHING EPISODE.

We have been in the habit of teaching that Christ washing the disciples' feet was a lesson of humility. That may be incidentally involved in the performance, but it is not the primary lesson Christ had in view. Those who practice feetwashing as a church ordinance and base it upon this incident are still more egregiously mistaken. Christ did not intend to make it the business of the church to wash feet, but to wash souls. It is not a sacramental but a spiritual lesson that the Lord would impress upon his followers. It was not a fact about Christ that he wished to enforce, but a fact about the disciples, and a fact of the highest importance. What is the fact?

It is this: the act of washing his disciples' feet symbolized the fact that the outward life must be in harmony with the inward cleansing. "He that is bathed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit." Bathing the body was symbolical of inward cleansing, washing the feet was symbolical of outward cleansing. The first was the purification of character and the second was the purification of conduct. The first thing our Lord did, therefore, was to lay stress on the fundamental necessity of spiritual or inward cleansing. "If I wash thee not thou hast no part with me." "If I wash thee thou art clean every whit." He refers to the inward, spiritual washing of regeneration, represented by all the types and shadows of the law. When a priest went into the tabernacle to officiate at the altar of sacrifice, he had to undergo certain ablutions or washings of the body, and every evening and morning when he went in he was required to wash his hands and feet, not only to set forth the fact of a constant inward renewal of spiritual life, but to symbolize the need of keeping the outward conduct in line with the inward purification. That is the great lesson here. Let me state it in a single sentence: Bathing is a symbol of complete inward purification, and he that is inwardly purified needs only to live a clean outward life, symbolized by washing the feet.

Feet, in the Bible, stand for motion, for activity, for service, for doing. Walking, in Scripture, means active outward service in doing the will of God. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners." "Walk worthy of the high vocation wherewith ye are called." "Walk in wisdom toward them that are without, redeeming the time." "Walk humbly with thy God." Inward conviction and the profession of an inward change must be followed by outward conformity—regeneration by reformation. Words, deeds, life and conversation of a Christian must be in harmony with an inward, spiritual change. If a man professes sanctification, people say, Live up to it and and we will believe you have it. It is better to live it without professing it than to profess it without living it, for people will argue from the fact to the claim, but not from the claim to the fact. The regenerate life within must lead to reformation without. As John said to the Pharisees, make your lives consistent with your repentance. If a man professes regeneration, he must bring the spirit he manifests, the words he utters, the acts he performs into harmony with the claim that he has been inwardly cleansed by the Holy Spirit. His feet and hands, the instruments of action, must be clean as well as the body they are acting for. Conduct must and does tally with character. If there is one thing plain above another in the teaching of Jesus it is that men must live right to obtain his approval and save their souls. In defining the difference between the believer and the unbeliever he uses this language concerning the latter: "Their condemnation lies in this, that though the light has come into the world, men liked the darkness more than the light, because their actions are wicked. Indeed, all who are living wrongly hate the light and will not come to it for fear their actions should be exposed; but those who act up to the truth come to the light that their actions may be shown to have been done in reliance upon God." He makes everything turn on the way a man lives, on conduct as an index to character. He says: "For the time is coming when all who are in their graves will hear his voice and will come out—those that have acted rightly rising to life, and those that have lived wrongly rising for condemnation." The inward cleansing must be proved by the outward cleanliness.

I am glad we are coming more and more to this idea of Christianity. Eighteen years ago the Christian Endeavor Society was born, and no movement of modern times has been so useful in emphasizing ethical and practical Christianity. Its idea of consecrated service and of carrying Christ's redemption into the workaday world of every-day life, into society, politics and business, is helping us to preach and to practice a better gospel than we have known before. An organization that solemnly pledges all its members to do whatsoever Christ would like to have them do is bound to make a vital contribution to the Christ—idea of human life. If a minister ventured a few years ago to discuss such subjects as fewer working hours, or more humane treatment of girls and women, or the advantage to society of reforms which in all likelihood would diminish the dividends of certain corporations, he had to endure the running if not the consuming fire of the pews. As long as a preacher contented himself with vaporish and feathery generalities and with fluffy sentimentality, he was let alone; but whenever he has advocated specific measures of righteousness he has generally been treated as Howells declares Tolstoy has been regarded ever since he accepted Christ's method, as erratic or crazy, or as inclining dangerously toward the avenues of anarchy. At such times some pious bondholder has significantly whispered, "Preach the gospel;" and when the prophet of God in a modern pulpit has protested that railway men should not be despoiled of their rest day, or made to work fourteen and sixteen hours a day, and when they have rebuked the authorities for shooting helpless miners in the streets, or have raised their voices against lynching, or have pleaded for amore equal distribution of the good things of life, they have frequently been reminded that they should preach the gospel. Christian Endeavor and other God-inspired movements have taught us that these are the identical fruits that the gospel of Jesus Christ was intended to produce in human society. The program that Christ himself presented distinctly marks these and other things like them as the necessary outcome of his evangel. A professed inward regeneration that does not reform individual life and the world and make men better in character and outward conduct is not worth a fig to king nor country.

There is another vital lesson in this incident. The injunction to disciples to wash each other's feet symbolizes the obligation of mutual help to live consistent lives. I have made you clean and helped you to be better men, and that is what you are to do for each other. We cannot be good and we cannot be bad without the help of others. "Am I my brother's keeper?" No, Cain, but you are your brother's brother. The family of man is a brotherhood, and it is the part of a man to help his brother man toward goodness and happiness. We are influenced and molded by our associations. If our companions are all good we can scarcely be bad; if they are bad we can hardly be good. So much a long communion tends to make us what we are. If a bad man joins a good society one of three things will happen: he will become good, will instantly fire himself from the society, or he will play the hypocrite and pretend to be good. If every man, woman and child in St. Louis were good and pure and a bad man came into town at the south end, one of two things would happen when he got to the north end: he would be a good man himself or he would go on to Chicago and never set eyes on this place again. Every clean man helps others to be clean, and every moral church moralizes the atmosphere of the community in which it exists. Very few men can be good or bad without reference to the character of their felowmen. I heard a gentleman say last week, if a good boy came into the town where he lived the boys would guy him to death if he didn't go their way, and two or three young men have told me the same thing in reference to their class. Is it not a terrible thing that our boys have to choose between perdition and isolation? Yes, and we are to blame for this, because we do not live better lives and insist more strenuously that others shall behave themselves. Every young person has this choice to make—whether they will choose a few good people for associates, or run with the crowd to destruction. If boys grow up to be good men, and girls grow up to be pure, godly women, it will be because of the help we render them and the influence we bring to bear upon them. If the weak Christian reforms and leads a more consistent life, it will be for the same reason. It has been said that no man can get rich without his wife's consent. Can a man live a Christian life without his wife's consent? Is it not difficult for a man to live the Christian life without the help of his brethern?

A FINAL WORD.

When careful and deliberate plans are made by a commanding general just before entering upon a decisive battle he calls around him all his officers and men and speaks a final word. It is a final word to those who are interested. It is right to speak it. Much depends upon it. The scales of battle are sometimes turned by it. The responsibility of the occasion, how much depends upon winning, and the fact that the eyes of the nation whose battles these men have fought are upon them now, are all enforced. Other lesser and minor battles may have been fought without much planning, they may have been surprises in the way of engagements—mere skirmishes—but no decisive battle was ever entered into without careful planning or without a final word to those upon whose bravery and skill depends the victory.

On next Lord's day a victory is to be won for Church Extension. It must be a great spiritual and financial victory. If necessary to win, the battle must be waged all through September and not only upon the first Sunday. In fact, the forces may not all be engaged the first Sunday because the time may not be ripe to move. Let us have a final word together before this battle begins.

The pastors and elders of our churches are the commanding generals. They must get together on Sunday morning the day of the offering. They should take into their counsel the deacons and the whole official board should pray with their pastor and have a final word together. For the hour other things should be forgotten, and they should think only of making the offering for Church Extension a conspicuous success. The pastor and elders should agree to be examples of liberality, and the deacons, church clerk and treasurer should be not any the less liberal. The entire official board should decide to give as God has prospered them and make their giving an example. If this is done in the spirit of Christ and to prove that as officers they are interested in securing a large offering, the victory is assured. Under the inspiration of such a meeting of the board of officers, just before the services begin, the preacher can enter his pulpit that morning and, with the flush of victory on his face, he can preach the final words to his congregation that will win such a victory over avarice and selfishness that the congregation and the church at large will have reason to rejoice at the great Jubilee Convention. The 2,700 homeless missions will take on new life, and though they may not be present at Cincinnati at the Jubilee Convention, their hearts will be there and they can have a jubilee of their own.

On the first Sunday of September and on succeeding Sundays until the victory is won, there is opened up to us all a wide channel for the outflowing of our liberality in healing streams to bless the land and to send back a blessing to our own hearts. It is not less needed to save the church from the curse of unconsecrated wealth than to rescue weak and struggling bands of Disciples from discouragement and defeat.

Hour of Prayer.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF.

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Sept. 6th.)

(Phil. 4:15:19; 1 Cor. 9:7-14.)

(Concert of Prayer for Missions.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: It is according to the will of God that those who minister in spiritual things should have their temporal wants provided for by those to whom they minister or have ministered.

It was not only a beautiful and gracious act of brotherly love on the part of the church at Philippi to make up a box of good things to send by the hand of Epaphroditus to Paul while he was a prisoner in Rome, but in so doing the church was discharging a very solemn obligation which it was under to provide for the wants of one who had given himself so unselfishly to the spiritual enlightenment of themselves and others. It is very evident from Paul's acknowledgment of this gracious gift in the passage from the Philippian letter cited above, that he felt very deeply this token of their brotherly regard and that he derived great joy and satisfaction from it. And this, not simply from the fact that his wants had been relieved, but that these gifts were proof to him that their hearts were enlisted in the work and that this fellowship with him in his labors would redound to their own good. It is not difficult to imagine how the gloom and loneliness of his prison cell were dispelled by the coming of Epaphroditus with these tokens of love and good will from the brethren and sisters in Philippi. One can hardly resist the conviction that Lydia, "whose heart the Lord opened," was a leader in this good work. Nor can we doubt that the Philippian jailer and his family were eager and joyful participants in this blessed fellowship.

But have we no brethren to-day, aged servants of God, who having given their lives unstintedly to the work of the kingdom, are in their old age in prison cells of penury and want, dependent upon the lowly gifts of the churches for the very necessities of life? Have we no debts to discharge in the way of brightening the lives and lightening the burdens of these aged and infirm ministers of the Word? Be it known to the churches of the brotherhood that there are scores of such worthy patriarchs who are looking to them for the love-tokens that shall protect them from hunger and cheerlessness during the oncoming winter.

The principle which governs in this matter of caring for the ministry is stated in the second passage referred to above. The law of Moses which provided, "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the grain," only expresses a principle which is universal in its application and which has special significance, he tells us, in reference to the ministry. Putting it as a matter of equity, the apostle raises this question: "If we sowed unto you spiritual things, is it a great matter that we shall reap your carnal things?" Is there anything more than right and justice in this? If men who devote themselves to the spiritual welfare of their fellowmen are prevented thereby from providing for their temporal necessities in old age or in time of sickness or disability, are not their brethren under the most solemn obligations to see that these necessities are provided for? So Paul reasons.

Nor does this matter rest simply on apostolic authority. The apostle traces back the principle to Him who had "all authority in heaven and on earth." Referring to the custom under the law, that those who ministered about sacred things were permitted to eat of the things of the temple, he adds: "Even so did the Lord ordain that they who proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel." This ought to be sufficient for every one who regards Jesus Christ as the supreme authority in the church. It is his divine ordination or arrangement that the men who preach the gospel shall in that holy calling find their necessary support.

It is known to all who are familiar with our history that the pioneers in this Reformation, and many of those who were successors of the pioneers, were compelled to preach the gospel with little or no compensation, often doing so at their own charges in order that the truth might be spread abroad. There were no churches to support them. Their love for the cause was so much greater than their love of earthly gain that they reckoned not with the future old age or disability, but gave their strength freely to the work of the ministry. Some of these yet linger with us. We owe it to them, we owe it to ourselves, we owe it to the cause that they and we love, to see that they are not forgotten in their age and poverty, but that their hearts are cheered and their bodily needs provided for by their brethren who are reaping the harvests from their faithful sowing.

Let us remember these venerable and disabled servants of Jesus Christ, both in our prayers and in our gifts. Let us pray that God may fill their hearts with peace, and be their strength and their support as the shadows of the oncoming night gather about them. Let us pray, too, that we may be used of God in ministering to their comfort and cheer, as we are the recipients of spiritual benefits which have come through their ministry.

PRAYER.

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for that great Missionary whom Thou didst send into the world to minister to our spiritual needs. We thank Thee, too, that through Him Thou hast called into the fellowship of Thy service so many faithful men who have given themselves unstintedly to the proclamation of the gospel of Thy grace. Some of these have grown old and poor in preaching Thy Word. It is Thy will that we who have been favored with material blessings shall minister to their necessities. We pray Thee that Thy church may recognize more fully this divine obligation, and may we be more faithful in ministering to their temporal necessities, even as they were faithful in ministering to our eternal needs. So shall we who live to-day enter into blessed fellowship with those who have gone before us, and have borne the heat and burden of the day, that togeher we may share in the joys of Thy full salvation in the world to come, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

MACATAWA MUSINGS.

Cascade, Michigan, had a Rally Day on Lord's day, August 20. J. W. Allen and the editor of this paper had an engagement to preach on the occasion. Now Cascade is located on the bank of Thornapple River, a fine bass stream. It was decided to go a day ahead of time and enjoy a day's fishing on this clear, sparkling stream. Early Saturday morning found us wending our way up the east bank of the stream in two wagons, hauling two flat-bottomed boats, which were to be committed to the river at a bridge five or six miles above the town of Cascade, at which place we would land in the evening with more or less bass. Our party was five in number, including the guide and experienced punter, Mr. C. F. Holt, who is engaged in fish culture. The other two members of the party were Arthur Garrison and Dr. Seimaro Kubota, our Japanese brother, who had an engagement to lecture at Cascade Monday evening. In one of the boats we placed Bros. Allen and Kubota, directing them to a certain pool, near by, where they were to try their luck while the other members of the party in the other boat should go up the stream a little ways to test one or two favorite resorts of the wily bass. Oars are unknown to the boats that do business in Thornapple. A long pole to guide the direction of the boat and help to push it over the shallows is the substitute for oars. Now this mode of navigation was new to the aforesaid ex-Cleveland pastor and Japanese lecturer. We expected to overtake them in a little while and point out to them the most advantageous places for casting their lines. The last we saw of them the boat was headed downstream, while the representative of the chrysanthemum kingdom stood on the forward part, pole in hand, attempting to guide the boat from that disavantageous position. They soon disappeared from sight in one of the numerous bends of the river, and we saw them no more until we reached Cascade in the evening. By cross-questioning we drew from them sufficient information to indicate that they had had a picturesque voyage down Thornapple. It seems that they had lost control of the boat, partially, in shooting the rapids, had come very near capsizing once or twice, had lost their lunch in the stream and chased it in vain, and been out in the water wading and pulling the boat and had landed at the hotel, a little below Cascade, at two o'clock in the afternoon, hungry, wet and weary, bruised and battered, without a fish, or having had even a nibble. They reported, however, that they had seen large numbers of great fish, which refused to pay any attention to their bait. When our boat landed at Cascade at six o'clock in the evening, they met us at the shore, smiling, and looked on with open-eyed wonder as we threw on the bank, from the locker in our boat, fourteen beautiful tiger bass. They insisted, however, that they had had a great deal more fun than we had, and we do not doubt it.

The day was hot, but grateful was the shade of the trees which grew along the banks, and more grateful still was the cool springs along the shore whose clear, cold waters make small tributaries to the stream. By one of these springs we paused at noontide and ate our lunch. But most grateful of all was the occasional leap of a bass from the shade of some stone or log in the stream to take our minnow and find himself an unwilling captive on our hook. And then the thrill of the strong pull as we reel him in—what is there like it? An amateur photographer caught the editor in the act of landing a two-and-a-half-pound bass, and the snapshot gives a good idea of the style of boat used and of the picturesque stream which, in its crystal clearness, mirrors the trees on the bank and presents a forest below matching that above. It is pleasant to drop slowly down such a watercourse, watching the tribes of minnows darting hither and thither, and ever and anon pausing in the deeper pools, to take out a few game bass. The lights and shadows among the trees, the wild cry of the bittern as it flies along the stream, the swoop of the kingfisher as he dips into the water for a fish, and the graceful curves of the winding river make a panorama of sights and sounds which leaves no room for monotony. Our guide, Mr. Holt, who has lived beside the stream and fished in it for forty years, does not exactly have a pe sonal aquaintance with each bass, but he knows their habits and habitats, and can tell you where to cast with a good show of getting a "strike." When we fish in the Thornapple, commend us to Mr. Holt for a guide and a skillful manipulator of the boat.

Rally Day at Cascade was a success. It is the only church in the village, or the immediate neighborhood. William Chapple, the pastor, has only been there a few months, and having found a debt of $150, he took this method of raising the indebtedness and giving a new impetus to the church. There were three services—morning, afternoon and evening. These were all well attended. A free dinner was served in the Town Hall at noon. The entire amount of money called for was raised. The pastor was delighted and all the people seemed to rejoice with him. This has been a sort of mother church, from which have gone out many members who have become useful elsewhere. A number of members from Grand Rapids and other neighboring churches were present, to contribute to and participate in the enjoyment of the day. Among these visitors were L. C. Stow and family, of Grand Rapids. Bro. Stow confessed Christ in this church when he was sixteen years of age. Many who could not be present sent letters, which were read. It is believed that the day will mark a new epoch in the history of the church. It was a very enjoyable one to visiting preachers as well as to the congregation, and our thanks are tendered both the pastor and the brethren for their kindness to us.

We were, by invitation of a neighbor, having an enjoyable ride in his launch on Lake Michigan. There was a little breeze and the launch rose and fell gracefully as it passed over the billows. A bright little boy of five years in the party was noticed sitting very rigidly and holding on very tightly. In answer to an inquiry he said, in artless simplicity, "I'm holding the boat tight to keep it from rocking." It occurred to us a good illustration of what a great many older people are doing. There is many a man fretting all the day and lying awake of nights, for fear something will go wrong. He is holding the boat to keep it from rocking or overturning. He imagines that if he were to relax himself the particular enterprise about which he is anxious would go to pieces. Some good people are fearful that the church will be overturned by the waves of skepticism, and to prevent such a catastrophe they are holding on very rigidly to certain ancient theories and interpretations which they have come to believe are quite essential to the safety of the church. Others are deeply concerned about the fate of the Bible. They are continually making props to hold it up, or throwing up outer breastworks to protect it from the assaults of its enemies. It would contribute vastly to their peace of mind and serenity of soul if they could understand that whoever or whatever runs against the truth, or any divine institution or arrangement, is broken to pieces; that God has his church and his Word under his own care, and that he is not dependent on any artificial modes of defense for their protection. One of the great dailies of the country sometime ago advised a certain prominent lecturer who was dealing with all manner of problems from his rostrum, and solving all kinds of questions, and overthrowing all kinds of heterodoxy, to "take a month off for rest and allow God to run the universe!" The advice was wiser, perhaps, than the editor knew, for the lecturer referred to has been crushed by attempting to carry too heavy a burden. He was trying to keep both the ship of state and the ship of Zion from overturning. The great God, who "sitteth in the circuit of the heavens," holds this little ball which we call the earth, with all that is precious in it, in the hollow of his hand. Let us do what we can to make it a better world, but let us not worry. God reigns, and he is not going to let the devil upset the boat that is carrying its precious human freight to the divine haven.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE FOURTH PERIOD.

T. W. GRAFTON.

V. The Growth of a Progressive Spirit.

The "Louisville Plan" not only failed to conciliate the anti-society brethren, but, what was more disastrous to the cause of missions, it failed to bring financial relief to the embarrassed treasury of the missionary society. The plan was faultless as a theory. As a literary production it reflected credit upon those who drafted it. But when applied to existing conditions it would not work. Churches which had been indifferent under the old plan remained indifferent. Individuals who had been deaf to the appeals of an unsaved world were afflicted with deafness still. The opposition held aloof from it until it failed, and then excused themselves for refusing to cooperate on the ground that it was a failure.

The receipts of the society which, under the old constitution, had averaged about $10,000 a year during the previous decade, did not average $4,000 during the next ten years. The first year under the "Louisville Plan" the receipts, which had been $10,910 before they began meddling with the constitution, fell to $4,529, and the board was ultimately compelled to draw upon the resources from the hymn book fund to pay the salary of the corresponding secretary. It was no fault of the management of our missionary interests that failure confronted the new plan. If any man in the brotherhood could have worked it, Thomas Munnell, the corresponding secretary from 1868 to 1877, was that man. His talent and consecration, his pluck and energy, his wide experience and administrative ability fitted him for the position, but could not wring success from an impracticable system. Before the end of the first year it began to look like the days of our missionary activity were numbered. Good brethren became justly alarmed at the situation. In June, 1870, the editor of the Millennial Harbinger wrote:

> There is now a crisis before us in the General Missionary Society and it is with no ordinary interest we await the issue. Whatever that will be it will, at least for many years to come, so far as we can see, be decisive. . . . . Now the real test is to come, whether we are in heart and soul a missionary people, and can work together as one or not. If after a sufficient trial we now fail, then truly we have no further hope in that direction. The sad truth, sad beyond expression, will then break with all the force of unquestionable reality upon us that either we are not in convictions and feeling a missionary people, or that with all our grand plea for Christian unity and union we are altogether unable, as a body, to join our hands actually in an organized, permanent work. Every true friend of the mission cause and every one who has the interests and character of our brotherhood and cause deeply at heart should feel the full importance of this crisis and do his utmost with himself and others to bring about a good result.

In spite of the failures, for which the "Louisville Plan" and the anti-society leaders were responsible, the interest in the cause of missions among the Disciples survived and was soon to manifest itself in new forms of co-operation and over new fields of missionary activity. During this period of missionary doubt and despair the undercurrent of thought and feeling was setting strongly toward the adoption of more liberal and aggressive measures for the evangelization of the world.

The year 1870, the most hopeless in our missionary history, was also the seed time of influence which were shortly to awaken us to a sense of our responsibility. Through the dreary years of hopeless discussion over plans the conviction was deepening and spreading that, whatever the modus operandi, we must be a missionary people or die, that a poor plan was better than no plan at all, that work done after a faulty model was preferable to nothing done on the most approved apostolic basis.

This sentiment now began to find men bold enough to become its champions in the face of the brand of unsoundness which was sure to be inflicted upon them. We have seen how Isaac Errett, during the early portion of this period, contended almost alone in the columns of the Christian Standard for a more liberal and liberalizing policy. From 1869 on he found himself in company with a group of editors not less devoted than he to the cause of Christian missions. The Apostolic Times appeared early in the year, and though conservative in many respects it recognized the importance of aggressive missionary measures to the life and growth of the Current Reformation. About the same time appeared the Gospel Echo, with its young editor, J. H. Garrison, full of missionary enthusiasm, and the Christian, under the management of T. P. Haley, G. W. Longan, A Procter, A. B. Jones, B. H. Smith and George Plattenburg—the two papers soon to be merged into one and from St. Louis to sound forth a call to missionary co-operation. In Iowa the Evangelist, an obscure little monthly, about this time became a weekly and soon made strides toward metropolitan journalism, progressive and aggressive in its spirit at every step of the way. The influence of these papers is not to be overestimated in the work that was now being accomplished under the flag of truce and failure that floated above the "Louisville Plan."

Another factor not to be overlooked was the influence of our feeble but heroic young institutions of learning, which were springing up in various quarters, each one to become a liberalizing center. Too much cannot be said for the work done by these struggling, unendowed colleges in revealing to the Disciples their rightful attitude toward measures and expedients which were to insure enlargement, nor for the self-sacrificing men who filled their chairs without adequate support, that they might point a younger generation toward a surer path of conquest. Realizing the danger to come from this source the conservative forces now attacked an educated ministry, and the institutions that were sending them out, as they had previously attacked missionary organizations and modern expedients. As liberal views began to influence the professors of our colleges they came in for their share of conservative criticism. Even the sacred memory of Alexander Campbell and the hallowed associations of Bethany were no barriers to the iconoclasm of Mr. Franklin, who had become exceedingly mad at whatever fostered a progressive spirit.

> "We do not disguise the fact," he wrote in the Review of 1873, "that we are not working for Bethany College. We are taking no interest in it. We worked for it all the time til Bro. Campbell died. . . . But things have been occurring all along since to cut our affections off from it till we have no sympathy with it. We do not believe it is doing the cause any good. We are now measuring every word we write and know the measuring of every word. We can give reasons for what we are saying to any extent the reader may desire. We shall put down a very few things briefly here: 1. We have become perfectly satisfied that education in the popular sense is partly secular and is not a church matter. The church ought to be connected with no educational enterprise. We are in favor of no church college. This is a matter that may be discussed at length, but we enter into no discussion of it now. Still, this would not utterly cut off our sympathy with Bethany, other matters being equal. 2. One of the main pleas Alexander Campbell made for a college under the control of Christians was in view of the moral training that no man was educated in the true sense who was not cultivated in heart. This we hold to be as true as any principle yet uttered. To this end there should be sound professors to train students and there should be a sound church in the vicinity of the college maintaining the highest order of morality, order and discipline."

In spite of the failures that had attended our missionary movements, in spite of the protests of ultra-conservative leaders and editors, a liberal, progressive spirit now spread rapidly among the churches. The voice of the Master saying, "Go," was heard above the noise of unseemly strife about plans in the execution of the divine command. As our progressive leadership began to see more clearly and to feel more deeply the needs of the brotherhood they began to realize the inadequacy of efforts then being made and set about at once to devise more liberal things.

For lack of funds the earlier attempts of the American Christian Missionary Society to carry the gospel into all lands had been given up. Dr. Barclay who, for several years, hampered by inadequate support, had struggled to plant a mission in Jerusalem, was recalled at the beginning of the war by an empty treasury. J. O. Beardslee, who had been sent to establish a mission in Jamaica in 1858, after an encouraging success of several years on that island, was compelled at last to abandon the enterprise for want of means upon the part of the society to sustain it further. All the energy of a people now numbering nearly a half million were being expended upon the home field. Nowhere outside our own land was there a voice raised in defense of the primitive Christian faith. While other religious bodies were putting treasure and brain and blood into the work of carrying the gospel to pagan lands we, who were loudest in our professions of loyalty to the great commission, had utterly failed to respond to its marching orders.

The importance of a distinctively foreign mission work now began to be felt among our representative preachers. In the lead stood Isaac Errett. As he now studied the needs of the movement he began to feel that not only the salvation of the pagan, but the salvation of the church itself, demanded that we who claimed to be guided by the will of the Master, expressed in his written Word, should get in line with God in his revealed design of world-wide evangelization. He was sure that we would never take our rightful place among the religious forces of the age until we enlarged our plans of conquest so as to embrace all the nations of the earth. As early as 1873 Mr. Errett, in the columns of the Christian Standard, advocated the organization of a society that should turn its attention exclusively to the foreign field. At the General Christian Missionary Convention, which met in Indianapolis that year, the importance of this step was urged, but no action was then taken.

In the meanwhile, as men were meditating over this advanced step, and hesitating and wondering how it could be done, a few Christian women at a meeting in Indianapolis in the summer of 1874, proposed the organization of a society among the sisterhood of the church that should take up the neglected work of missions. Quickly responding, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions was organized, and at the General Convention, which met in Cincinnati in October, received the following recognition at the hands of the brethren:

Resolved, That this convention extend to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions recognition and hearty approval, assured that it opens a legitimate field of activity and usefulness in which Christian women may be active and successful co-operants of ours in the great work of sending the gospel into all the world. We pledge ourselves to "help these women" who propose to "labor with us in the Lord."

The climax of our missionary movement was reached the following year when the organization of the Foreign Christian Misisonary Society was effected. The General Convention met at Louisville. Mr. Errett, as president for that year, in his annual address again called the attention of his brethren to the subject that was on his heart, reminding them that "no people had ever been blessed in their home enterprises without a foreign missionary spirit and work." Others joined in urging forward the movement. An earnest brotherhood represented in the convention heartily responded, and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society was born. It was the beginning of a new era for the Disciples. Within the brief period embraced by the years 1866 and 1875, they had traveled all the way from "the bitterness and darkness and bondage to a narrow, opinionated legalism to the sweetness and light of the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free," and in their new-found liberty were enabled to so crystallize the energies of the church as to launch it upon an era of unprecedented prosperity and give to a people who had hitherto urged their plea in comparative obscurity a recognized place among the religious forces of the century.

ACTUAL AND FORMAL REMISSION OF SINS.

A. B. JONES.

No man who thinks and reasons about the divine government as if it were a state government can ever understand Christianity or be a safe interpreter of the Word of God. Law is not religion and religion is not law. I do not mean that there is no relation between law and religion. The Church of Christ is not a state, and the state is not the church; but I do not mean that there is no relation between the state and the church. There are points of resemblance, points of analogy in law and Christianity, and in human and divine governments. But the man who reasons about Christianity and the church, and about their ordinances and institutions, their elements and factors as if they were simply matters of law, will always have crotchets in his head—crotchets that will preclude the possibility of his seeing, understanding and enjoying the moral and spiritual phases of religion; crotchets that will prevent his being a safe interpreter and expounder of the Word of God.

The differences between human and divine governments are radical and vital. These differences are notable in the very terms employed with reference to them. Law books and lawyers and courts never speak of wrong-doing as sin, but as misdemeanors, felonies and crimes. They say acquittal or conviction, while the New Testament says justification or condemnation. The one says pardon, the other forgiveness or remission of sins. The one speaks of pains and penalties, the other of atonement and reconciliation. The one of statutes and constitutions, the other of grace and truth. The one of the legal, the other of spiritual forces of life, etc.

Thus, at a glance we see that the very literature of the two marks a chasm between human and divine governments. And yet there are men who seem to think and write and speak of religion as if the whole thing was a mere matter of law, of legal enactments, provisions and prescriptions, overlooking the personal elements of God the Father, and man the child, of parental and filial sympathy and affection. God is a being who thinks, feels and wills; and man thinks, feels and wills. While God is infinite and man is finite, yet there is much in common between them. "We love him because he first loved us." The love of the Father as revealed in Christ Jesus our Lord awakens a responsive chord in the sinner's heart. Actual forgiveness of sin is not a matter of law. Pardon of misdemeanors and crimes is a matter of law purely and involves only official action, and not personal feelings. Actual remission of sin is a personal affair between the Father and his child, and lies wholly in the moral sphere. It involves contrition, repentance and filial affection on the one side as a moral cause, and sympathy, compassion and parental affection on the other side as a moral effect.

These are the essential and fundamental points in my argument—points that have not yet been denied, but which must be met and set aside in successfully assailing my position. To nibble around the corners and ask questions and suggest difficulties will do for an inquirer after truth, but not for an opponent. It would be easy for me to meet my critics by the same mode of argument. I might ask them such questions as these: Do you think that God never actually forgives a sinner until he is baptized? Do you really believe that our Heavenly Father does not have compassion on the contrite soul that cries unto him for mercy? Do not the Scriptures teach that God so loved that sinner, even before his repentance, that he gave up his only begotten Son to die for him? Do you not believe that that love melts into forgiveness when the Father sees the poor prodigal returning home, and that he goes out to meet him, and forgives him—actually and gladly forgives him—without waiting for baptism? Do you believe that the all-merciful and loving Heavenly Father looked unforgivingly on Paul during the three days he was fasting in blindness and praying? Do you not actually, in your heart, forgive your child when you see that he is penitent and wants forgiveness? If you were to refuse to do so, would you not be looked upon by your neighbors as an unnatural father and be driven out of the pulpit by your church? Does not the Bible say, "If you being evil know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more your Heavenly Father?" Does it not say, "Even as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him?" Do you not know it to be a fact that you actually forgive your boy when he repents, and that any further condition you may name, in order to his forgiveness, is intended for the boy's own good or for effect on family discipline, and that this is only formal forgiveness? Do you not know these things to be so? Then, why shut your eyes to the truth and blindly walk over every fundamental principle of moral science, every principle of human nature as revealed in your own consciousness, and every principle of the divine nature as revealed to us in the Holy Scriptures? Why do you do these thing? Is it just to save what you regard as a party tenet?

Now let the critics who feel unable or unwilling to meet the issues and argue the fundamental principles of my position, which is the position as well of the best thinkers and writers of all Protestant bodies, and certainly the position of Alexander Campbell—let these critics answer these questions and remove the difficulties.

REPLY TO J. M. SHEPHERD.

Bro. Shepherd says:

1. "The contention of our brother is that baptism is for the formal remission of sins which were actually forgiven when the sinner truly purposed in his heart to return to the Father."

That is no contention of mine. It is only a "man of straw," set up by Bro. S. He is preaching that, training himself, I suppose, for a real conflict in the future with a live man. I said nothing about the sinner "purposing" to return to God; but spoke of his actually coming to the Father, in contrition and penitence, inspired by his faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. We speak of a man purposing to act on his convictions, but never of his purposing to have these convictions. To speak of a man purposing to believe or purposing to repent is absurd.

2. "If this be true, why these externals at all?"

I suppose Bro. S. means, if a man is actually forgiven on the ground of his being a penitent believer, then why baptize him? I answer, baptize him because God requires him to be baptized; baptize him "for the remission of sins"—for the formal remission of sins; baptize him that he may adjust himself to the divine government and thus "fulfill all righteousness;" baptize him that he may observe the law and thus find the "answer of a good conscience;" baptize him that he may keep the commandment and thus formally "wash away his sins;" baptize him that he may be "born of water" as well as of the Spirit; baptize him because "baptism doth also now save us."

Why baptize him, indeed! Are there no other reasons why a man should pray except to obtain the forgiveness of his sins? Are there no other possible reasons why a sinner should be baptized than for the impossibility of thereby enlightening God's mind and softening God's heart into a forgiving mood? It is not overt acts that touch the heart of God, but the moral conditions that underlie and inspire these acts.

3. "I ask again, what the use of these externals; and what the use of formal forgiveness?"

I thought this was amply explained in my first article. I will explain further. Externals do not enlighten God as to our true, inward, moral condition and fitness to receive his favor. But they bring to us God's blessing in some form. Every act of obedience we render to God brings to us a blessing. We know this in two ways: First, we learn it through his Word—"Blessed are they that do his commandments." Secondly, we learn it through our personal, conscious experience. Every step that we take, intelligently and conscientiously, in the line of obedience to God brings to us a measure of strength—moral and spiritual strength; brings to us an "assurance" from within and from without, from consciousness and from the revealed Word, which like "the path of the just, shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

4. "But suppose the sinner or the Christian purposes to do the things commanded, but fails to carry out the purpose—what then?"

I have already disposed of that word "purpose" as having no place in the present discussion. But I will apply the question to the subject in hand, and reply as follows: If a man fail to repent, he will fail of actual remission of sins. If he fail to be baptized, he will fail of formal remission. Baptism does not secure actual remission; repentance does not secure formal remission.

5. "If actual remission depends upon the unerring knowledge of God," etc.

But actual remission don't depend upon the "unerring knowledge of God." It depends on gospel repentance.

6. "Could not baptism be the assurance of actual remission the same as of formal remission?"

Faith, repentance and baptism all give us assurance. With our knowledge of our own moral condition as penitent believers, with our knowledge of human nature derived from experience and observation, with our knowledge of the divine nature as revealed to us in the divine Word, with express declarations in the Scriptures, such as "Whosoever believeth on Jesus shall not be ashamed"—shall receive remission of sins—from all these sources we are assured of actual remission before baptism. From our knowledge of our own honest purpose to obey God in the act of baptism and from the command, "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins," and other plain scriptural declarations showing a connection between baptism and the remission of sins, and from our knowledge of the subject in general, and of the nature of things involved—from all these sources we are assured that baptism is for the formal and not for the actual remission of sins.

In conclusion I will give an example illustrating the difference between the actual and the formal in transactions. Some years ago I contracted with a party for some property, valued at several thousand dollars. A written agreement was drawn up and signed by both parties, and I paid five hundred dollars on the contract. But before the deed was executed the party contracting with me died. What, now, was the status of the case? It was this: There was a clear agreement and understanding between us in regard to the property, and at his death I was the actual owner of that property and I took possession of it. Yet, I had no formal deed, did not formally own it. In winding up the dead man's estate the administrator was ordered by the court to execute to me a deed, which he did. The agreement between the party and myself was the ground of actual ownership, the deed when placed in my hands was the ground of formal ownership. The moral phase of this transaction lay in the agreement, the legal phase in the deed. So in the remission of sins, the moral phase lies in the agreement between God and the sinner. Contrition in the sinner and compassion in the Father secures the actual remission of sins as a moral transaction; baptism secures the formal, legal title to remission. When I received my deed I had an assurance of ownership that I did not have before, assurance in addition to that given in the agreement.

But now there is still another phase of this transaction that is important and which illustrates an important feature of baptism—a feature which I plainly noted in my first article on this subject, but which neither of my critics, so far, have noticed. It is this: My deed was not yet placed on record. There are other parties interested in this matter besides the dead man's heirs and myself. Deeds are filed in the recorder's office as public notice to other people of the status and ownership of property. The recording of deeds is useful and helpful to the public in many ways. So baptism on the part of a man serves notice on the world that the man is no longer of it. It also serves notice on the church that the man desires and is prepared for the fellowship of saints, for membership in the church. Hence, as stated in my first article, baptism is a governmental expediency, a legal form which follows and is related to a moral transaction, an argument between the Heavenly Father and the sinner, and, like the deed, is the sign, seal, pledge, declaration and assurance of the validity of the moral transaction and of the fulfillment of the legal requirements—of actual and formal remission of sins.

THE HIGHER CRITICISM.

G. F. ASSITER.

It is painful to differ from a friend, particularly when that friend is the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, a paper so loyal to the Lord Jesus Christ as to be incapable of knowingly propagating an error. Its editor we have learned to love for the sweetness and gentleness of his Christian character, and have no doubt as to his promptness to correct a demonstrative error that might creep into its pages. In the great controversy occasioned by the Higher Criticism many of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S staunchest friends feel that its position is a mistaken one. It has championed the cause of the critics with evident honesty of purpose; but none the less do some experience a sad disappointment at the absence of sympathy for the earnest souls whose heartfelt protests against what they believe to be destructive errors earns for them the term "hysterical."

This, however, is not very hurtful to any one's feelings, and is very mild compared to the "hysterical shrieking of theological grandmotherliness," which J. J. Haley hurls at the orthodox in the Christian Quarterly. He doubtless forgot that just before in lamblike spirit he deprecated "calling names" as not being "the best way to express confidence in our own side."

With respectful deference I would ask the reason for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST so sincerely championing the cause of the Higher Criticism? Its parentage is so shameful that it is hard to imagine the cause for enthusiastic support from any of our papers.

The fatherhood of Old Testament criticism "belongs to Astruc, a French physician," Bro. Haley informs us. But he did not add, as he might have done, that this man "was a Jesuit when it suited his purpose, a contemporary with Voltaire and Bolingbroke, rivaling them in profanity and obscenity, an avaricious and licentious scoundrel, the object of derision by drunkards on the streets."

Eichorn, who is bracketed with Astruc as entitled to share in the parentage of the Higher Criticism, was an avowed infidel. Truly, a noble ancestry! But it is not quite fair to other distinguished critics, contemporary with and antecedent to these men, that they should have all the credit of bringing to the birth this new canon of biblical investigation. Spinoza pursued much the same line of inquiry and arrived at somewhat similar conclusions. To the licentious Frenchman and the infidel German must be added this apostate Jew, the father of Pantheism, whose biblical criticism Voltaire so mercilessly ridiculed.

Wellhausen must be added to the list of parents and sponsors. It is true, he boldly proclaims himself a Polytheist, but an eminent Higher Critic among us says that "Jesus Christ was not so good a critic as Wellhausen."

Kuenen was a Rationalist of the extremest type, and according to his biographer "made it his purpose in life to strip Christianity of every shred of supernaturalism." No wonder that as a result of this man's teaching hundreds of churches in Holland are pastorless, whereas they were once centers of spiritual life and activity. Notwithstanding, I recently heard a budding critic in our ministry quote him approvingly as he sought to show that the doctrine of atonement was heathenish.

The fact is, the "devout and earnest students," as the Higher Critics are called by way of differentiating them from "grandmotherly hystericals," are men who have dug from the graves of these men almost every dogma that is loudly proclaimed as the results of modern research.

Dr. Howard Osgood has discovered in the writings of Tom Paine, the infidel, and Thomas Morgan, the deist, and also from Vol. VI. of Voltaire's works, all the objections to the credibility of the Scriptures that are now paraded before the world by the Higher Critics. Thus the "crucible of modern criticism" has strangely enough turned out nothing but the old clothes of European skeptics and rationalists, which ill-fitting garments smaller men of the 19th century are pleased to appropriate as their own personal property. Are the men I have named such instruments as the Holy Ghost would use to lead God's people into all truth? What progeny could be expected from such parentage?

This leads me to inquire as to the results of the Higher Criticism up to date. A good deal has been said about the light it has thrown upon the sacred writings, but when from general terms we descend to particulars, the light is not easy to distinguish from darkness. The critics have discredited the story of the fall; the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch; the historic accuracy of the Books of Judges, Ruth, Esther, Jonah and Daniel, and attribute the prophecies of Isaiah to a variety of authors numbering anwhere from two to ten.

On what grounds, it may be asked, do they reverse the traditions of the Jewish nation and the Church of Christ for more than 2,000 years? Have any new facts come to light to prove that the Jews ("to whom were committed the oracles of God"), with the almost superstitious reverence for even verbal accuracy, knew less about the authorship and dates of their own literature than Dr. Briggs, for instance? Certainly, Josephus was from every point of view more capable of judging of the authorship of Old Testament books than men who are 2,000 years further removed from Bible times than the acute and learned Jew. Yet, his testimony concerning the authorship and credibility of the sacred writings is entirely opposed to the assumptions of the Higher Critics. Yet, a worthless Frenchman, after 2,400 years of universal testimony to the undivided authorship of Isaiah, conceives the idea of another hand in the book, and lo, without a single historical fact to warrant them, theologians meekly follow in the procession that he leads!

Isn't it rather late to stop a train an hour after it has gone by? Assumption and presupposition is not scholarship. Yet, a body of men whose criticisms are largely based upon them make their demands upon us on the ground of their superior learning. Prof. Sayce, whose vast knowledge of Bible lore gathered from the field of archæology (in which he has no peer), has recently washed his hands of Higher Criticism, as he finds that every turn of the spade in the East is vindicating the old conservative faith to the discomfiture of its opponents. Yet he was one of the liberal school for 14 years.

I venture to say that the method of investigation adopted by this school is untrustworthy in the extreme. Reasoning on their lines, Chas. Dickens was certain that the author of George Eliot's novels was a man, and the critics were quite as sure that no woman could possibly have written Jane Eyre. Yet, the profound literary masters were in both cases mistaken.

Underlying such reasoning, however, in the present case, is the fact that the trend of Higher Criticism is to get rid of the supernatural in God's Word. Instead of it being the fact that "holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" it is now declared that Moses kept a diary and jotted down such things as he thought worth recording. Hence the objection to the prophet's reference to Cyrus in Isaiah 40:3, and the "highly improbable" story of the temptation and fall in Eden whereby that awful tragedy is reduced to the level of an Eastern poem. If there were something approaching to agreement among these censors of Holy Writ a different complexion might be given to their stories. But there is none beyond a few points. For instance, a dozen German theologians attribute the authorship of one psalm to as many different persons. The New Testament ascribes it to David! What result can such rash speculations have but the unsettling of faith? I have in my mind now four cases of recent occurrence wherein preachers lost their moorings, gave up prayer and relapsed into practical infidelity. The sad apostasy of a once noted evangelist from the same cause is also recent history.

With these facts in mind, and with knowledge from various sources as to the sad ravages being made among young students for the ministry, with all deference and much respect I submit this hastily penned protest against a form of criticism that treats the Bible as a human document and denies to Jesus Christ and the Holy Ghost the right to testify in its behalf.

"THE GENUINENESS OF THE BOOK OF DANIEL."

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

In the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of August 10, Bro. J. B. Briney calls attention to certain statements made regarding the Book of Daniel in the Sunday-school notes of a former issue, and argues against the positions there taken, and in favor of the early or Babylonian date of the book. The authorities which he cites, the Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia and the Pulpit Commentary, might have been reinforced by many others of weight, for up to a comparatively few years ago the vast body of scholarship was upon that side of the question. The early doubts regarding the date of the book were so ably met and answered by Hengsenberg, the German, and by Dr. Pusey, who closely followed the same line of defence, that it was felt a complete vindication of the genuineness and historicity of the book had been established. To the present hour it must be said that no abler or more scholarly presentation of the conservative argument is to be found than that contained in Pusey's volume on Daniel.

The change of attitude observed in present biblical scholarship regarding the book may be traced to the increased light thrown by history and archaeological research upon the times of which it speaks, the far greater knowledge of the Aramaic dialects than was possessed in Pusey's day, and the study of biblical apocalyptics, a department of investigation differing from prophecy in essential characteristics, but too often confused with it. It is impossible even to enumerate the list of facts which lie upon the surface of the book, and indicate a date subsequent to the Babylonian period, much less would it be possible to show here the force which these facts gather from their combination, as they are considered by the careful student. The briefest suggestions must suffice:

1. The book was placed by the Jews themselves, not among the prophets, but in the third or miscellaneous section of the Scriptures, known as the Hagiographa.

2. The writer of the book had a general knowledge of Babylonian history, which afforded him a sufficiently exact framework for his narratives of the past; but at many points he reveals the limitations of his knowledge regarding matters with which the modern student is made familiar through recently found memorials of that age. Every apologist for the book has been at pains to suggest various methods by means of which the author's knowledge of the facts might be vindicated; but the disagreements of the book with the ascertained facts of Babylonian and Persian history form a list sufficiently long to convince the great majority of present-day scholars that it is needless to pursue the older method of apologetics.

3. The language of the book presents an unanswerable argument against the Babylonian hypothesis. Not only does it contain numerous Persian and Greek words, which argue a date as late as the period of Alexander the Great, but the Aramaic of the book is of a Western type, spoken in Palestine, and not the dialect of Aramaic in use among the exiles in Babylonia. Moreover, the Hebrew sections of Daniel show a close linguistic resemblance to the language of the later books of the Old Testament.

4. The apocalyptic elements in Daniel are evident to every reader, and differentiate it strikingly from the prophetic books, which move upon an entirely different level.

5. The author's point of view throughout is the period of the Maccabean persecution. This is apparent particularly in the second section (chapts. 7-12), where the various visions have their culmination in each case with the figure of Antiochus Epiphanes, the persecutor of Judah in the years 170-165 B. C., whose overthrow the writer foresees will be followed by the age of Messianic blessing. Thus in chapter 7, among the kings (horns) of the fourth (Greek or Macedonian) kingdom, Antiochus is referred to as the "little horn" (vs. 8; cf. vs. 24). The same figure is used in chapter 8. Here the ram (the Medo-Persian Empire) with its two horns (Cyrus and Darius, called "kings of Media and Persia," vs. 20) is overthrown by the he-goat (Greece) with its horn (Alexander), and from among the successors of the latter appears the same "little horn" (vs. 9), whose outrageous conduct against the sanctuary is described in the following verses. Again, in chapter 9 he is described as the prince whose people destroy the city and the sanctuary (vs. 26, 27), and finally in chapter 11, after a most minute and detailed recital of the conflicts of Syria and Egypt in the days following the dissolution of Alexander's empire, Antiochus appears once more (vs. 21) and his various campaigns are described in the remainder of the chapter, which closes with his destruction, of which the writer felt assured. Thus, throughout the series of visions the attention is directed to one fixed point, and the author finds his motive in the assurance which he brings to his persecuted countrymen that their oppressor shall fall in a short time (three years and a half—half a week—time, times and half a time, 1150 or 1290 or 1335 days, all apocalyptic measures of limited time. See the same usage in Revelation). These indications, set forth at much greater length, will be found in nearly all the recent discussions of the book, e. g., Driver, Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament, 6th Ed., 1897; Encyclopedia Britannica, 9th Ed., Hastings, Dictionary of the Bible, 1898; Schuerer, The Jewish People; Farrar, Daniel, in the Expositor's Bible; Beven, Commentor on Daniel; Terry, Biblical Apocalyptics, etc. The names of Ewald, Delitzsch, Meinhold, Westcott, Sayce, Wright, Dillmann, Strack, Briggs, Zahn belong to a list which might be almost indefinitely extended, and all hold the book to be later than the Babylonian age. Nor are these men all radicals in criticism. Delitzsch went over to the later view only after many years, and under the compulsion of what seemed to him unanswerable arguments. Sayce was commissioned by the London Tract Committee to write a book in reply to the critical arguments advanced regarding certain books in the Old Testament, yet candor compelled him to acknowledge that the facts, both linguistic, historical and archaological, in favor of the latter date for the book of Daniel were overwhelming. Zahn is regarded as the leader of the traditional view in Germany, and is quoted with approval by every follower of that school; yet he concedes the Maccabean date of Daniel. With the possible exception of Professor Green, of Princeton, not one of the leading Semitic scholars of America holds to the early date of the book.

In view of these facts, such opinions as those quoted by Bro. Briney, to the effect that if not written by Daniel the book is an imposture and worthless, fall singularly short of meeting the case. The facts are that the book is in the canon of Holy Scripture, and that a large and increasing company of Christian scholars regard it as belonging to the class of works called Pseudographs. This opinion has been reached by precisely the critical processes which have proved the trustworthiness of the gospels, the writings of Paul, of John, of Isaiah, Amos, Hosea and a long list of the biblical writers. If this verdict should ever be reversed, it will be because the application of the same critical methods demands that reversal, not because one prefers to hold to one theory rather than another. Above all it will not be because any theory can bring danger to the Word of God. The literary device of putting one's message into the mouth of another whose name was well known was a common one. Are we permitted to believe that a biblical writer could employ a method so freely used, and for the highest purposes, by others? It is a question of fact, not to be prejudged in accordance with the opinions and literary standards of another age.

It only remains to be said that an argument as to the authorship of this or any other book can be based on the words of Jesus only by those who overlook his constant use of the principle of accommodation to the popular ideas of his time. To have raised issues with the Jewish traditions or with the common opinions of the age in matters not vital to his teaching would have diverted attention from the very truths he was seeking to impress. Did Jesus always use the language of absolute fact? Must one suppose that he was mistaken concerning the laws of nature because he accommodated himself to popular speech when he said that the Father "maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good?" and did he subscribe to the cubical or the flat theory of the earth when he asserted that "the Queen of Sheba came from the ends of the earth?" These were the popular ideas of the age. He used them as one who understood that first principle of a great teacher—the law of accommodation.

MYSTERY IN SALVATION.

C. H. WETHERBE.

If the many Christians who attempt to explain the plan and process of personal salvation would recognize the fact that there is a deep mystery in salvation which no human being can accurately solve they would be likely to see the folly of some of their explanations. One would suppose, judging from the explanations which many make, that they do not regard salvation as having any mystery connected with it. Some of these people are very minute in describing the process of salvation. They tell us that after a person has been converted the next thing that is absolutely necessary to be acoomplished in him is the complete extirpation of his fleshly nature, so that he shall have no tendency in him to commit any sin; then, and not until them, is he fitted for heaven. These people argue that as nothing unholy can enter heaven the Christian must be completely holy in this life; hence the need of "a second work of grace," by which all carnality shall be removed. This sounds like a strong and conclusive argument. Of course, no unholy person can enter heaven. But can we be sure that we understand the divine process by which a believer is prepared for heaven? How do we know that a believer is fitted for heaven in the manner to which I have referred? I find no Bible authority for it. Some tell us that the sanctification which is requisite to prepare the believer for glory is a process which begins at conversion and ends at the believer's death. But I find no such teaching in the Bible. It certainly cannot be absolutely necessary that the believer should be the subject of such a lengthy process, for it is true that very many persons right away after their conversion have died. The saved thief on the cross was such an one. There was no process involving the time-element by which that believer's carnality was removed, nor was he the subject of "a second work of grace." Why not, then, frankly acknowledge that there is a great mystery in personal salvation, both in respect to its beginning and completion? Paul says: "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Behold, I tell you a mystery: We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of a eye." Who can explain that mystery which refers to the believer's body? And why should not the believer's imperfect soul be at last changed into perfection "in a moment?"

Current Religious Thought

The Oakland Enquirer, Cal., Aug. 7th, contains a lecture delivered to a large audience by Henry Weinstock, of the firm of Weinstock & Lubin, of San Francisco and Sacramento, in which are some sayings remarkable for their breadth, liberality, clearness and fraternal spirit. An idea of his view of past and present history may be obtained from the following summary presented in his lecture:

Had there been no Abraham there would have been no Moses.

Had there been no Moses there would have been no Jesus.

Had there been no Jesus there would have been no Paul.

Had there been no Paul, there would have been no Christianity.

Had there been no Christianity, there would have been no Luther.

Had there been no Luther, there would have been no Pilgrim Fathers to land on these shores with the Jewish Bible under their arms.

Had there been no Pilgrim Fathers, there would have been no civil or religious liberty, tyranny and despotism would still rule the earth and the human family would still live in mental, moral and physical bondage.

Had there been no Jesus and no Paul, the God of Israel would still be the God of a handful, the God of a petty, obscure and insignificant tribe of Jews.

Had there been no Jesus and no Paul, the magnificent moral teachings of Moses would still be confined to the thinly scattered believers in Judaism, and the great world of men and women would have been left so much the poorer because of their ignorance of these benign teachings.

On the relation of Judaism and Christianity and the mission of the Jew to-day, Mr. Weinstock, in his lecture, said:

Christianity and Judaism are supplemental to each other. Had there been no Judaism there could have been no Christianity. Had there been no Christianity, the message of Judaism could not have become so speedily universalized. There is ample room in this broad world for the followers of both beliefs to accomplish, side by side, a most heroic religious and moral work. A difference in matters of theology need in no way interfere with Jew and Christian preaching and teaching the Fatherhood of God and living in the spirit of the brotherhood of man. So to teach and so to live, whether born under the influence of church or synagogue, whether looking upon the Nazarene as man or God, is to win moral happiness in this world and in the world hereafter.

It is not necessary that Jew shall become Christian nor that Christian shall become Jew; each in his own way can be true to his faith and continue to observe the laws of God as he understands them, to worship his Creator in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience. Both may continue to live side by side in peace and in harmony, respecting each other's beliefs, manifesting the fullest tolerance for each other's religious opinions, giving each other credit for good intentions, loving each other for their virtues and casting the mantle of charity over each other's failings.

Mr. Weinstock's good will toward Christianity is expressed in the following concluding words of his address:

May the Christian, in accordance with the dictates of his conscience, continue to preach Jesus as "the divine man who lived humanly," and may the few learn to look upon him as "the human man who lived divinely." May Jesus, instead of being the dividing line between Jew and Christian, thus become the connecting link between the divine mother religion, Judaism, and her noble daughter, Christianity. May we, as Jews, and you as Christians, in this spirit learn to truly love our neighbors as ourselves, and, by example as well as by precept, become nations of priests and a blessing to the human family.

Our Budget.

—There are 2,700 houseless Churches of Christ in the United States.

—Church Extension was organized to help these homeless congregations.

—There is now $194,000 in the Church Extension Fund. There should be $250,000 by Sept. 1st, 1900.

—At least $15,000 should be raised in September for the Church Extension work. It can be done.

—Use the small envelopes sent out for Church Extension offering. See that at least one envelope gets to every family before the offering.

—Out of more than 1,800 appeals to the Board of Church Extension in the last 10 years it could respond to but 430 with loans. Enlarge the fund and more churches can be aided.

—Thousands or preachers have testified to the wisdom of Church Extension and declared their intention to do all in their power for it in September.

—Church Extension collections begins on the first Sunday in September.

—If you cannot take an offering on the first Sunday use the second or third or fourth.

—Select the most favorable Sunday in September, suited to your local conditions, and raise a collection for Church Extension.

—If for any reason the offering can not be made the first Sunday in September, choose another Lord's day in the month, and secure an offering. The important thing is to send an offering from every church.

—Where money cannot be obtained at sight take pledges payable in 10, 20 or 30 days. This method has been successfully used and will add materially to the offering before the month closes.

—It would require many pages of this paper to print the names of all the preachers and churches that have declared allegiance to the cause of Church Extension and their purpose of a liberal offering in September.

—With September comes renewed activities in most of the churches. August practically closes the vacation season, and pastors and members away on a journey or a vacation are back at their posts of duty by September and ready for greater work and greater sacrifices for the Master.

—Our brethren in Missouri are requested to note in particular Brother Pinkerton's invitation to attend the Missouri state convention, to be held at Jefferson City this fall. A good, old-fashioned Missouri convention ought to be a great help to the church at the capital of the state.

—In this paper our readers interested pro and con in the questions of Higher Criticism will be interested in Prof. Willett's article. Indirectly it is a reply to Bro. Briney's criticism of Prof. Willett's view of the Book of Daniel. In this article Prof. Willett certainly speaks in the spirit of fairness and shows that he with others is not without reason for the things he has said on this subject. We do not presume to say that what he presents will be conclusive to all minds,but what is said is certainly worthy of respectful hearing. For the attitude of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on these things see our editorial this week.

—A. B. Jones, of Liberty, Mo., has now replied to his critics, brethren Briney and Shepherd, on the "Actual and Formal Remission of Sins." The reply to Bro. Shepherd will be found in this paper. We received other criticisms of Bro. Jones' first article on this subject, but the two printed seemed to most fully cover the ground taken, and to these Bro. Jones has now replied and the case is with the jury. In such a discussion there is danger of giving undue prominence to legalism on the one hand and to mysticism on the other, and in reaching a verdict the reader will have to contend against the same dangers. Actual and formal remission are closely related, but there is a distinction which with its importance, it seems to us, has been clearly defined in the discussion.

—The large number of interesting letters in our Correspondence department this paper will afford both delightful and profitable reading to our readers.

—In this paper we publish the program of the Orphan's Home Convention, to be held in the Richmond Street Church, Cincinnati, Ohio., October 19th. This will certainly be one of the important and profitable conventions of the many conventions to be held in Cincinnati, Oct. 13 20.

—The Observer, this city, in an editorial on the Protestantism of France, says:

It is a fact not generally understood that in France the greatest leaders in policits, in science, in art and in literature are either Protestants or else open enemies of the Roman Catholic tyranny. The Dreyfus scandal has been fostered and directed by the Jesuits, who have sought to destroy the Jews. The men who have stood by Dreyfus and fought for justice and humanity are Protestants or sympathizers with the enemies of Rome. There is nothing the French people so much resent as clericalism. From the days of Gambetta the upper French clergy have been objects of suspicion and dread. We believe the recent struggles for righteousness will hasten the separation of church and state in France.

—Only a little more than a month remains until the time of the Jubilee Convention, at Cincinnati, and what preparatory work yet remains must be done quickly. Those having charge of excursion trains or parties should have your name at once lest in the rush at the last moment you will be left out. There remains no longer a question about the success of the convention. It will be the largest in our history, so far, and an event never to be forgotten by those who shall be there. The enthusiasm over reports, the infilling of the Holy Spirit, the great assembly and the future outlook for a purer Christianity will be some of the glorious features of the convention.

—If there had been any doubt in our mind as to how a large number of our ministers and business men feel on the subject of the unification of our missionary societies, the number of letters we have received, of which the following is a sample, would have removed such doubt:

You will be glad to know that we are prospering here in this beloved congregation, which is my child, and that the debt which has been hanging over it and hampering its work is rapidly disappearing. I want to thank you particularly for the editorial on the unification of our missionary enterprises. For some years I have felt that something ought to be done. I was asked to take twenty-seven special offerings in this church last year! I call for four only—Foreign, Home, State and Church Extension. We will quadruple our offerings this year over last. But I believe I could have done better with one thorough appeal, with a canvass of the church before the time of offering. I cannot and will not take all the offerings I am asked to take. I hope something may be suggested at the Jubilee Convention that will give us a relief from so many appeals, without subjecting ourselves to the charge that we are "taking a backward step," or "not interested in missions," "selfish," etc, unless we do take all asked for.

W. S. PRIEST.

Atchison, Kas., Aug. 4.

—With the present number the New Voice, heretofore published by Funk & Wagnals, New York, passes into the hands of Samuel Dickie and John G. Woolley, and will hereafter issue from the Temple, Chicago, Ill. The New Voice and the Lever will be combined under the name of the former paper, the New Voice. If John G. Woolley proves as popular as an editor as he is lecturer, the New Voice evidently will not suffer by the change, at least as an anti saloon organ. Mr. Dickie's ability as a defender of prohibition principles are also widely known, and the expectation of the prohibitionists of the country for a stronger anti-saloon organ in the combination of these two strongest prohibition papers will hardly fail of recognition.

—Among the numerous articles held over from last week was the letter of Mrs. Alice Williams to the C. W. B. M. of Missouri, which appears in this paper, in which she announces her resignation as state president, on account of her health.

—As we are now under the shadow of the great Jubilee Convention, with its grasp upon the mighty events of the past 50 years, from which a great people have arisen in the land, bearing aloft the banner of a still greater plea, it will be in order to present the picture of one of the men to whom, next to Alexander Campbell, the Restoration movement is indebted for its existence—Walter Scott. Like Alexander Campbell, Walter Scott was of Scotch ancestry, and his early religious training that of the Presbyterian Church. Walter Scott was born October 31, 1796 in Moffat, Dunfriesshire, Scotland, educated in the University of Edinburgh and came to America in July, 1818. The next year he made the journey from New York to Pittsburg on foot. Here, under the teaching of George Forrester, he renounced all human authority in religion for Christ's and was immersed in his name. Soon after this he met Alexander Campbell under whose influence he turned his attention to the ministry of the gospel and became one of the most illustrious preachers of the Reformation. Neither was he without reputation as a writer. But what has been called the unfortunate feature of his work as a preacher of the gospel was his opposition to co-operative work. This may, however, be attributed to his supreme contempt for ecclesiasticism as a hindrance to Christian unity and to the triumph of primitive Christianity. Yet, notwithstanding this, even the Jubilee Convention will not be without debt to Walter Scott for its existence and its success. For a more complete account of the life, character and labors of this famous preacher we must refer the reader to "Men of Yesterday," a most excellent book by Thos. W. Grafton, recently from the press of the Christian Publishing Company. Walter Scott died at his home near Mayslick, Ky., April 23, 1861.

—The American National Red Cross, Washington, D. C., has made a new and strong appeal to the people of the United States through its president, Clara Barton, for funds for the reconcentrado orphans of Cuba. The impartial ministry of the Red Cross has won for it the confidence of the people of the United States and their appeal for funds will not go unheeded. The appeal concludes with these words:

The war is ended, but the Red Cross still stands in its tracks with the fifty thousand reconcentrado orphans on its hands. Its agents work faithfully on, gathering them up out of pollution and death. Its source of supplies is the American people only. We believe that with as many dollars as there are estimated children, aided by the Cuban people themselves, these children can all be taken up as shown, placed in their little home asylums, learn to work and become healthful adjuncts of a community rather than a pest. A very few months would accomplish this and the Red Cross, longer in the field than all others, more hard worked and weary than all, would rejoice, close its work and come home.

—We invite the reader's special attention to the Kansas City Letter in this paper. The turning from the ministry of the gospel to secular callings therein alluded to is indeed a serious matter. We saw a similar statement in one of our exchanges sometime ago showing a similar tendency in other religious bodies. The influence of such a movement cannot be confined to localities. It will have its bearing upon the future of young men, upon churches and upon Christianity. If simply incompetent men were leaving a calling in which they can never succeed the case would be different. As it is, some of our best preachers are being seriously affected by prevailing conditions and the situation is worthy of prayerful attention.

—The unification of our missionary interests is agitating the minds of the brotherhood and receiving considerable attention from editors and scribes in various sections. When Our Young Folks first urged the desirability of this and the consolidation of our missionary boards, a few years ago, more than one vigorous protest reached us through the mails, some intended for publication and others for our own private enlightenment. We are much pleased to notice the drift of sentiment in the right direction. Some are urging that definite action be taken at the Jubilee Convention. The editor of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST suggests that a committee of seven competent brethren be appointed at the convention to take the question under advisement and report a year hence. This suggestion is wise and ought to be acted upon. It will, however, undoubtedly meet with opposition in "influential quarters."—Our Young Folks.

PERSONAL MENTION.

George T. Smith, late of Albia, Ia., has located at Winfield, Kan.

Eli Walker, of Lansing, Kansas, will attend the Drake University Bible College.

A. M. Haggard, of Drake University, preached twice at the Jasper County, Iowa, grove meeting.

J. K. Cornell, of Murry, Ia., has recently moved to University Place, Des Moines, Ia. He is one of Iowa's pioneers.

Allen Hickey, another Iowa pioneer preacher, assisted Pastor McCash in the funeral services of Fred P. Williams.

P. M. Casady, so long a standby at Rock Rapids, Iowa, has decided to move his residence and business to Sioux City.

Miss Annette Newcombe, of Iowa C. W. B. M. fame, is this week in Minnesota attending the state convention.

J. B. White of Adel, Ia., with his helpers, is preparing a fine programme for county convention.

Prof. Edward S. Ames, of Butler College, is in Iowa and will speak at the Dallas County convention.

Pastor H. O. Breeden is the president of the Iowa Christian convention and will deliver his address on Sept. 6th at 8:00, P. M.

Mrs. Alice Williams, Cameron, Mo., will deliver the C. W. B. M. address on Sept. 5th, at 8:00 P. M. at University Place Church.

Secretary B. S. Denny, of Iowa, is in N. W. Missouri. The serious sickness of their little daughter detains him. Many prayers ascend for her recovery.

Frank O. Fannon, of St. Louis, Mo., will deliver the opening address for Iowa Christian convention at University Place Christian Church on Monday, Sept. 4th.

C. A. Lockhart has resigned at Waterloo, Ia. He will hold some meetings before locating. His first meeting will probably be in Illinois.

L. C. Swan has been spending his summer vacation in Kearney, Mo. Cherokee, Iowa, may call him. It would be a good choice on their part.

L. P. Kopp is in Waukegan, Ill., planning for a meeting. Drake University will probably be his residence during the school year, beginning Sept. 12th.

Frank A. Sword, of Monticello, Iowa, is liable to change his field soon. An Iowa church and an Illinois church are in correspondence with him.

O. H. King, of Colfax, Ia., has been called a fifth year, and has accepted with the understanding that either party may terminate the engagement by a month's notice.

J. S. Hanna, of Newton, Ia., is proving himself the right man for the place. He modestly declares that he is reaping the fruits of the pastors who preceded him.

W. H. Matlock, whose letters from foreign lands have delighted the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for two years or more, has been elected to a professorship in Drake University. He is also to preach at Perry, Ia., for the coming year.

Pastor Collins, of Kellogg, Ia., on Sunday, Aug. 20th, preached the opening sermon before the Jasper County grove meeting in Newton. The churches were well represented. A basket dinner was served in the basement of the church house.

S. M. Martin began a protracted meeting at Plattsburg, Mo., Aug. 27th.

W. H. Scott has resigned at Ravenna, O., and taken the work at Marshalltown, Ia. He began the work there the first of August.

J. A. Longston, now three years pastor of the church in Oswego, Kan., being in this city last week gave us a call. Bro. Longston's report of the work in Oswego is encouraging.

C. A. Hicks, of Plato, Mo., called at this office last Sunday on his way to Canton, Mo. Bro. Hicks is going to take a course of study in Christian University.

Fred P. Williams, son of J. Madison Williams, Des Moines, Ia., was drowned on Aug. 22nd. No young minister about Des Moines could be more universally mourned.

Dr. E. M. Haggard, of Indianapolis, Ind., with family visited Oskaloosa, DeSoto and Indianapolis, Iowa, during August. He is now with Dr. George D. Haggard, Minneapolis, Minn.

Chancellor W. B. Craig will conduct the educational department of the Iowa convention, Sept. 4th to 8th. And on Sept. 12th he will preside at the opening of the full term of Drake University.

D. A. Wickizer is in a good meeting at Ft. Dodge, Ia. His tent blew down and he is now erecting a permanent tabernacle. Many in Iowa are sorry that Bro. W. has engaged to go to Beatrice, Neb., for the coming year.

Prof. O. T. Morgan has been called to Chicago by the University to take charge of the Hebrew taught by correspondence. This line of work is at present not heavy. He is expected to make it voluminous and widespraad.

W. R Hunt, who has been spending the summer in London, sailed for China per S. S. Himalaya on the 25th of the present month. His address in the future will be Nanking, China, care Imperial Chinese Post.

J. F. Sloan, having returned to Topeka, Kan., would be pleased to correspond with churches within reach of that place with a view to regular preaching. Address 629 Tyler St., Topeka, Kan.

J. M. Hoffmann, of Boone, Ia., is an untiring worker. His resourcefulness knows no bounds. He is now planning a lecture course, the proceeds of which he expects to net $1,000 on a new lot for a church. If any man in Iowa can win out on that deal, he is the one.

Notice of the life and death of G. P. Slade will be found in our obituary column this week. This memorial was in type last week, but had not the room on our obituary page for it. The tribute is written by S. S. Jones, of Danville, Ill.

G. O. Nations, of Crystal City, Mo., paid his respects to this office on last Friday. Bro. Nations is one of the efficient educators of the great state of Missouri, having been the principal of the Crystal City schools for eight years. Bro. Nations ought to be in one of our college faculties.

Evangelist Chas. Reign Scoville reports 1070 additions so far during the Jubilee Year. He will begin a meeting with Geo. Snively at Jacksonville, Ill., Sept. 10, and will assist W. J. Lhamon in January. Bro. Scoville is working for Hiram College endowment and raised over $1,000 recently at Warren, where Bro. J. M. Vanhorn ministers.

John Monro, having accepted the appointment to the professorship in natural sciences in Bethany College, closes a five years' pastorate with the church at Portage la Prairie, Man., Sept. 3rd. The congregation desires to communicate with a suitable successor. There is a parsonage, the town has a population of 4,000 and is located in the most fertile part of Manitoba. Address Henry Ogletree, Portage la Prairie, Man.

Jesse B. Haston will not accept the call to the principalship of the Curtner Seminary at Irvington, California, which he has recently received. He prefers to remain with the church at Galveston, Texas. He will, however, respond to some calls to do Bible teaching. The church at Galveston is trying to build a house of worship.

Prof. Oscar B. Fallis, Ph. D., who has recently been called to the chair of classical Greek in Christian University, is a Kentuckian by birth, was graduated in Eminence College, took the A. B. degree in Kentucky University, also taught in Kirksville College and then went to Europe where he took the highest degree conferred by the University of Munich, Germany, Ph. D. He spent a year in Greece, specially studying the antiquities at Athens, traveled over all of Italy and other parts of Europe. He is said to be a plain, sensible man, a great student, a natural teacher, devoid of vanity or hypocrisy.

Vernon J. Rose, of Salisbury, Mo., has resigned and will enter the evangelistic field Oct. 1st. Churches wishing him for meetings can address him at Newton, Kansas.

W. L. Post from Laclede, R. N. Linville from Kirksville, J. G. Bell from Moberly, and Prof. John Kenyon from Mayfield, Ky., all newly married, have just moved into their new homes at Canton to enter the university.

Any church that desires a most excellent preacher and a successful pastor will be put in correspondence with one of our best preachers, who is now open for an engagement, by addressing W. J. Russell, pastor of the Main Street Christian Church, Rushville, Ind.

J. H. Fuller, of Burlington, Ia., writes: "I expect to have this field of labor soon. I have not been idle a week for 20 years, except in case of sickness, and I hope some church is ready to put me to work. A place where I can do good is the first consideration now."

C. H. Berry, of Metcalfe, Ill., has closed his work at Sidney and Metcalfe to accept the call of state evangelist, district No. 6. He writes that he has been instrumental in adding to the one body of Christ, last year, 80 souls. Any congregation needing a meeting in that district is requested to write him at once at Metcalfe, Ill. He begins a meeting at Maple Grove, August 29.

The church at Lafayette, Ind., being unable to continue the support promised their pastor, S. S. Lappin, have released him that he may accept a call to become state evangelist in the fourth district of Illinois. There was not the least friction between church and pastor; the change is by mutual agreement in the face of necessity. They will pay $800 to a good man next year.

G. L. Brokaw, editor of the Christian Index, is rejoicing in the presence of his daughter, Dura and her husband, E. R. Cockerill, recently of Montana. Their home henceforth will be at Add-Ran, Texas. She will teach French and art work. Mr. Cockerill is professor-elect of history and economics. He graduated from the Drake University law school in 1897 and his wife is of the college class of 1896.

J. B. Briney, of Moberly, Mo., says: "Please allow me to say through your paper that I expect to hold meetings for several months and I invite correspondence looking to that end. I ask no contract beforehand as to compensation, and will go wherever my services may be desired." Here is certainly a rare opportunity for any church in need of either the sincere milk or the strong meat of the Word of God, to be properly and amply supplied. We are just thinking how glad we are that we are not the private secretary of the man making this proposition.

Joel Brown, field agent for the Christian Orphans' Home, will visit the Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska state conventions in the interest of the Home. The following persons in Iowa took life membership, $25 each, in the Benevolent Association, under his solicitation, during the month of July: John Potter, Prairie City; Mrs Guy Wingate, Rose Hill; Mrs. Mary S. Hawley, Rose Hill; Mrs. Laurena Longnecker, Keota; H. Allender, Keota; Y. P. S. C. E., Keota, and Miss Bessie Blanchard, Wapella. Also the following persons in Illinois: Mrs. Dr. J. I. Doss, Milton; C. E. Balin, Milton; J. W. Underwood, Belle Plain.

The Bible Institute, at Canton, Mo., at the opening of Christian University, will be a very attractive occasion. The preacher of the institute, L. H. Stine, is one of the most finished literaray scholars among us. The educational address will be delivered by W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City. "The Elements of Paul's Greatness," discussed by D. R. Dungan, of St. Louis. "The Culture of Spiritual Meditation," by Chas. A. Lockhart, of Iowa. An address on Palestine and the Bible, by Levi Marshall, who traveled in that land. "Paul on Mars' Hill," by Dr. O. B. Fallis, after a year's study of the excavations in Athens. "The Trustworthiness of the Old Testament Records," by Pres. Clinton Lockhart. An address by L. D. Goodwin, Ph. D., a very fine scholar, recently come to our people from the Baptists. These are a few of the special features.

CHANGES.

"A Word of Caution."

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—In your issue of August 24th you have "A Word of Cnution" in regard to Suggestive Therapeutics, in which you use these words: "Suggestive therapeutics is a branch of hypnotism, and hypnotism is a name for a force or law which, as we have said, is yet very imperfectly understood."

May I suggest that this statement may be improved by a stricter conformity to the facts in the case? Therapeutics relates to curing the sick, and suggestive therapeutics is curing the sick by suggestion, and not by hypnotism. Hypnotism cures nobody. Hypnotism is sleep, induced sleep, and differs from natural sleep only in the method of bringing it on. Every ten patients out of twelve healed by suggestion are cured in a perfectly waking state, wide awake, clothed and in their right mind, without any hypnotism being employed. In the two cases out of twelve, where hypnotism is employed, it is used simply to put the patient in a more receptive condition, so that the suggestions will be more readily received by the patient. But hypnotism is not necessary to a cure in any case. It is useful in surgery as a means of producing anesthesia without chloroform or ether. Surgeons and dentists use it for this purpose. But suggestion is a wholly different thing from hypnotism.

I am a graduate of Dr. Pitzer's School of Suggestive Therapeutics, and here is his definition of suggestion: "By suggestion in the cure of disease we mean the presentation of ideas to the mind of the patient, under conditions and in a manner that will correct any morbid tendency of the thoughts, excite lively processes of mentation in a proper direction, and result in a complete restoration to healthy conditions of every organ and function of his body."

There is no hypnotism here. Suggestion is a process of education, and it is effected for the most part while the patient is wide awake. The same education may be given, specially to children, in their natural sleep, and certain physical and moral vices corrected thereby. Mothers can easily do this when their children are in natural sleep at night, when they are taught how. Suggestion is the very best means for entirely eradicating the liquor habit, the tobacco and the cigarette habit, and is most frequently done when the patient is wide awake, and without hypnotism. I can teach any intelligent person how to do these things.

You speak of hypnotism as a force "that may be used for either good or evil purposes." True. So also is a religious newspaper a force that may be used for either good or evil purposes. Shall we suppress newspapers? Well, hardly. It is well, however, for people who write in them to know what they write about lest they do harm. J. L. PARSONS.

Indianapolis, Ind.

[Does'nt Dr. Parsons think "A Word of Caution" might well be given to men contemplating the publication of a religious newspaper, especially if this tendency should threaten to become epidemic? Does he not think it well for men to be cautious about adopting any scheme of healing which, by a short and easy method, promises to heal most diseases to which flesh is heir? We have said nothing against "therapeutic suggestion" nor the men who have adopted this method of healing; but we do insist that there is great need of caution lest whatever virtue there may be in the system may be neutralized by the malpractice of quacks and charlatans. We are not concerned with Bro. P.'s definitions, specially, but we believe what we said about "therapeutic suggestion" to be substantially true.—EDITOR.]

School of Pastoral Helpers and Christian Workers.

Several of our leaders in Christian work have urged me to tell of the service being rendered by my lady helper. I do not care at this time to say more than that she has been an efficient helper in all lines of the pastoral work, and sometimes preaches to the children. What I wish to emphasize in this article is that with our changed civilization it is impossible for the pastor of a large city church to do all that is necessary to be done without helpers.

Male assistants have been tried with success in many churches. Women have served in the past, in special fields, as "Bible readers," nurses, Sunday-school visitors, etc., but our success in the Central proves that they are fitted for the broader field of "assistant pastor," serving with rich and poor, sick and well, young and old. After three years and more pastor and church would unanimously commend this scheme to others.

In the past two years several of our leading city pastors have applied to me to recommend to them some one who would do work similar to that of Miss Nichol. I did not know whom to recommend.

I believe the time has come when, for the highest success of our city work, one must have trained helpers. If there is sufficient demand I am willing for the present need to arrange for a twelve weeks' term, beginning November 1st, for young men and women for the study of city life and successful church methods. I am able to secure the very best talent for Bible teaching. My idea is to give the "clinics" along with the theory; to first give the theory and then lead them into the actual work itself. We would study human life in all its phases, from the palaces of the rich to the hovels of the poor; from the homes where beauty and grace abound, as the result of the Master's presence, to the dens of vice where Satan does his unholy work. Rescue missions, jails, houses of correction, police courts, children's homes, social settlements, street preaching, etc., etc., will be visited and considered in relation to Christ's desire to save the cities. Certainly, pastors and those who expect to be pastors might be profited in such a school, as well as helpers to pastors. Some who expect to earn their living some other way, yet would serve their Master as he leads them, would find this helpful training. Those who come would be required to possess the elements of an English education and an acceptable recommendation from their pastor or church officers as to their character and interest in the work of our Lord.

I am anxious that those who read this, and especially our city pastors, speak out and tell me what they think of it. Let any who desire to enter such a school address me for information as to teachers, course of study, expense, etc. A. M. HARVOUT, Pastor Central Christian Church.

Above we give our readers the program of the Conference on Benevolences, or, "Orphans' Homes and Kindred Benevolences," as it is styled in the Jubilee Bulletins.

The names of some of the ablest men and women in our ranks will be found on it, and others have promised to attend and take part in the general discussions.

The relation of the Benevolent Association to the missionary enterprises of the church, and how such an Association should be maintained, are questions that should be thoroughly discussed. Our thinking men and women should give some time to this matter. It cannot, with honor to the church, love and mercy to the helpless, and obedience to the Master, be put aside till a more "convenient season" any longer. For some years some of our prominent men have been saying, "Yes, it is a good work, one we must do, but the church is not ready for it yet." Not ready at any and all times to do the Lord's biddings! To follow the examples he gave us! Would we be willing to tell him that should he ask us to-night? What is needed to make us ready? Brethren, think of the matter and get yourselves ready to help us in this conference to reach the best conclusions as to how the work shall be done—not when. Now is the accepted time.

Wheeling Through Europe.—IV.

THE BLACK FOREST.

After leaving the picturesque part of the Rhine at Mayence, one is continually striking the river again as he journeys south, but it is no longer a special attraction, but only a plain river which must be crossed now and then. At Worms one scarcely notices the presence of the Rhine, and at Mannheim it is of note chiefly on account of the great bridge which spans it. Leaving the stream here and proceeding a few miles along the bank of its tributary, the Neckar, the city of Heidelberg is reached just at the point where the narrow valley of the Neckar opens into the broad and level valley of the Rhine. High, wooded hills rise abruptly on both sides and through this gateway one enters Heidelberg. A long, commonplace street, which allows no view of anything but itself, conducts one into the heart of the town, but the cyc ist is soon halted by a notice that bicycle riding on that street is forbidden. We tried not to learn the meaning of these signs, but they are too numerous and too obvious to be ignored. Besides, failure to see or to understand the printed notices is really no excuse for disobeying them, for a glance at the faces of the passers-by is enough to assure any one that he is a lawbreaker. They appear so naively horror-stricken at the idea that any one should ignore a police regulation, and look at the culprit with such mingled indignation, pity and apprehension, as if they expected the next minute to see him imprisoned for life, that a heart of adamant could not remain untouched. So we walked up this commonplace street and the walk deepened the conviction of its commonplaceness. We wondered why people rave so over the beauties of Heidelberg.

But the beauties are there, nevertheless, and they are well worth raving over. The old part of the town is gratifyingly antique, but the charm lies not so much in the town as in its location—wedged in the mouth of a narrow valley and hung up on the side of a hill—and in the university atmosphere which pervades it. Everywhere the students are in evidence, more or less in the class rooms, I suppose, but especially in the cafes. You can tell them by their general make-up and demeanor, as you can in New Haven or Cambridge, by their gaily colored caps, representing their corps or student societies, and by their scars. No one can look upon a crowd of Heidelberg students, see the scars which they proudly bear on face and head (hair cut short to show them if necessary), with occasionally the wound of a recent sword-cut, and doubt the truth of all the stories he has ever heard about student dueling at Heidelberg. A kind friend sent me word how and when I could see one of their duels, but as the information did not reach me until after the date of the fight I missed the pleasant spectacle.

Besides wearing scars, the German student tries to wear a mustache. He begins when he is about sixteen years old and works at it assiduously. His chief ambition is to duplicate the hirsute adornment of Kaiser William, which consists of a pair of large mustaches spread out at the ends like the spray from a garden hose, and violently upturned toward the outer corners of the eyes. This is supposed to impart a ferocious and martial aspect to the countenance, but it generally fails to achieve this end, especially if the mustache be short, thin and blonde. At any rate, the tonsorial ideals of the young men in Germany are in striking contrast with those of the youth of Holland, where the very young men prevailingly affect side whiskers, generally of a fuzzy sort, suggestive of new-mown peaches.

Even the enthusiasm of the guidebook, which is usually good ground for suspicion, could not kill my enthusiasm for Heidelberg Castle. It is a noble ruin, nobly situated, but its present condition detracted from its impressiveness. A thorough restoration is being carried out, and the total effect of piles of rubbish and building materials, new walls, scaffolding and ancient masonry was not pleasing.

All this, of course, has nothing to do with the Black Forest, for the northern end of that mountainous region is nearly fifty miles south of Heidelberg. Riding on south by way of Speyer, it fell to our lot to stop one night at a village in the Rhine valley, though not on the river, and there I gained my first insight into the workings of the German country inn. It should be said by way of preface that the German inn ("Gasthaus" or "Wirtschaft"), like its English counterpart, is primarily a saloon, and that the tap-room is the center from which all its activities radiate. The villagers drop in in the evening, drink a couple of glasses of beer, and talk long, loud and all together. The advent of a traveler who wishes to eat and sleep, but does not care to drink or talk, is a surprise. Many inns make no provision whatever for such an improbable emergency, but most of them are prepared to make some sort of an attempt to satisfy the traveler's needs. The evening meal may be served in the tap room, where the traveler and the habitual patron can mutually observe each other's manners and customs; more likely it will be served in the comparative privacy of a small room opening from the tap-room. The barmaid, who will probably be the proprietress of the establishment, will make an honest effort to understand your wants, and whatever you get to eat will be good—especially if you have been riding a bicycle all day. But when it comes to sleeping—that is a chapter by itself. The German bed is fearfully and wonderfully made, and the one I found that night was by far the most fearful I had ever seen up to that time. First, a good mattress, to mention its virtue first. On this an immense wedge-shaped affair like an adamantine pillow half the length of the bed, which makes possible only a semi-recumbent attitude. Then one sheet, topped off with several pillows and a feather bed about four feet square. That was all. The reader will guess at once what I discovered after experiment, that the feather bed was intended as covering. This was in July. Not to dwell upon particulars, it was a hard night, and I suppose I remade that bed in the dark a dozen times in as many different combinations as the small number of its elements admitted. Just try to sleep under a large feather pillow some night and no further description will be necessary. By the time the mosquitoes were pacified (and it took a good deal to satisfy them), the dog got nervous and howled under the window for an hour by the village clock. That woke the pigs, and the pigs woke the geese, and the geese woke all the rest of the poultry. Of course the bed was not to blame for that ill-timed barnyard concert, but it all enters into my impression of that inn. And the cost of that varied entertainment was the equivalent of twenty-five cents, for supper, bed, concert and breakfast. Since then we have stopped at many inns, but never at one in which the characteristic features, viz., cheapness, feather beds for covers and high pillows, were present in a more marked degree.

Leaving Karlsruhe, the mountains are almost immediately in sight and the road runs for many miles at the edge of the hills. Here one sees some of the most interesting and characteristic features of German agricultural life. The fact that almost all of the farmers live in villages and that there are few isolated farm houses; that women largely outnumber men in the fields; that many of these same women are good-looking and, in this district, wear broad-brimmed straw hats of picturesque form, with black velvet ribbons, like the milkmaids and haymakers you read about in storybooks; that cows are used as beasts of burden, and that a cow and a horse are often hitched together as a team with no apparent consciousness of incongruity on the part of cow or driver (though I have imagined sometimes that the horse seemed a little ashamed of the arrangement); that when a vehicle is drawn by one animal the beast is hitched on one side of the tongue—these are only a few of the many queer things that are observed. The peasants are cordial and courteous, and seldom fail to give a friendly "All' Heil!" as we go past. In fact, every one who travels through Germany by road receives a continuous chorus of "Heils" from one end of the country to the other. As we go through the villages, the children race after us, shouting, "Heil! All' Heil!" Wheelmen whom we meet on the road touch the cap and give a ringing "Heil!" and farmers and teamsters, soldiers and shopkeepers give the same hearty greeting. In this connection it may be remarked that for the traveler in a foreign land no words are so necessary as the words of courtesy, the greetings, the thank-yous and the if-you-pleases, the little phrases which don't mean anything in particular, except that you are a civilized man and that you are trying to treat others like civilized men. Pointing and pantomime will serve well enough for getting the necessities of life, but when a peasant by the roadside wishes you good morning you must answer him or appear to be less of a gentleman than he is.

In general it may be said that the road from Karlsruhe to Freiburg runs at the edge of the Black Forest. Baden, generally called Baden-Baden, lies three or four miles back in the Forest, a beautifully situated and handsomely built little city, a thorough "resort," but as free as possible from the unpleasant characteristics which that term generally denotes. Another and longer diversion from the main road took us over to Strassburg, which was a German city for several hundred years, a French city for two centuries, and is now both French and German. Riding on south, one is more and more struck by the evidences that he is in a Catholic country. The most constant reminder of this fact is the presence of wayside crucifixes and shrines. Some are small and some are large; most of them are more or less rude; but of one kind or another they are there, in every village and often by the roadside.

At Freiburg, where we stopped over Sunday, there is a cathedral which is counted among the gems of Gothic architecture. I strolled in to look at the building in the morning before going to the English church. To my surprise, the cathedral was crowded full, every seat taken and all available standing room occupied. It was a feast day and high mass was in progress. The music filled the great church—pipe organ, full orchestra and large choir together rendering a magnificent mass. The incense ascended in clouds and, at the tinkle of the bell, the vast throng rose and sank like a wave of the sea. Nothing bearing the name of Christian has ever appealed to me as at once so magnificent, so impressive to the senses, and so pagan.

Leaving Freiburg, we rode straight east into the Black Forest, following the valley of the Dreisam. It was a pretty ride, not grand enough to keep one's nerves at high tension, but pretty and satisfying. A late breakfast and a late start had prepared us for a late dinner and it was long after the ordinary dinner hour when we halted before a little inn where there was a wide-spreading tree by the stream and a table in the shade. I asked for dinner, using the word which, freely translated, means "everything you have in the house." The woman in charge calmly assented and in ten minutes spread the cloth on the out-of-door table and began to serve us a six course dinner. How she conjured it up I can't imagine, but there must have been something miraculous about it. She couldn't have been expecting anybody at that hour, and in that location a week might have gone by without any one coming for dinner. We suspected her of practicing the black art, but decided to assume any risk which might be involved in eating the dinner. It will be observed that there are several kinds of inns in Germany; but this was in the Black Forest, where all inns are said to be good. This fact, together with the natural attractiveness of the country, makes it a pleasant region for rambling journeys on foot or on wheel. For the cyclist it is a long series of climbs and coasts. We finished by a thirteen-mile coast from a mountain top down to the valley of the Rhine above Weldshut. There we turned east again toward Schaffhausen and soon crossed the boundary from Germany to Switzerland. W. E. GARRISON.

THE GRAND OLD MAN OF CANTERBURY.

When the Queen as the temporal head of the Established Church appointed Dr. Frederick Temple, then Bishop of London, to be the spiritual head of that extraordinary comunion, as Archbishop of Canterbury, everybody without any exception was amazed, because he was then 76 years of age, and was supposed to be naturally growing somewhat senile and infirm. It was surmised that the Queen had it in mind to make a warming-pan of the old Bishop of London, in order to give time to her prime favorite among the prelates, the Bishop of Rochester, to grow old enough to be created Primate of all England in a few years. That bishop is the youngest on the episcopal bench, and he could hardly have been promoted over the heads of all the Right Reverend Fathers in God who are so much his seniors. But the Archbishop of Canterbury has astounded the whole nation by his marvelous tenacity of life, his recuperative physical power, his positive rejunevescence in every intellectual faculty, his streams of caustic wit, his endless sermons, his speeches at all sorts of public functions, his political and ecclesiastical deliverances in the House of Lords and in Convocation, and his activity in walking and riding anywhere and everywhere, far and wide. He was said to be threatened with blindness, and also his legs were said to be failing him. But a few days ago he read fluently and easily a long decision which he had drawn up in the new Ritualistic case, which is likely to be famous. On this recent occasion, in his court at Lambeth, he got on his judicial rostrum with the activity of a boy. He instantly offered prayer, then without a moment's pause plunged into his elaborate and lengthy decision, a document which only a very powerful intellect could have drawn up, and at the end of it quickly descended and left the court without giving any one a moment's opportunity to interrupt or to interpose a question or protest.

THE TEETOTAL PRIMATE.

There is a simple secret at the bottom of the fine old Archbishop's inexhaustible vitality. He has for many years been a total abstainer and has probably done more than any living man to stimulate the temperance movement in this country. He is the president of the National Temperance League, and has brought many hundreds of the clergy and thousands of the laity in the membership of the Church of England to join the teetotal ranks. All honor to Dr. Temple! As everybody understands who knows England well, a bishop here is a social idol, and an archbishop is a demigod, and the Primate of all England is recognized as occupying the very next place in rank to royalty. Therefore the example of Dr. Temple must be potent. But this principle of abstinence reacts on the man himself. He ascribes his wonderful vigor, now that he is approaching the age of fourscore, to two causes. One reaches far back, but it is worth noting. When he was a boy his parents were at one time very poor, and he actually labored with his hands on the farm. That made him a robust youngster and helped him through years of study. He became one of England's foremost classical scholars and took the highest possible academic rank, following this up by becoming headmaster of Rugby, the most famous school in the land, made so by the luster of Arnold's regime. The second cause is his firm adhesion, year after year, to the principle of total abstinence from alcoholic beverages. He has all the elasticity of a young man. Contrast with this splendid longevity the sad premature death of the very greatest surgeon of our time belonging to any nation in the world, the beloved and honored Dr. Lawson Tait, who was snatched away a few weeks ago, after a very brief illness, in the prime of his life and powers. I was not surprised at this tragedy when I read that this famous man possessed a large cellar of costly wines, of which he was a first-rate judge. Thus we have in the instances of the Archbishop and the Doctor of Medicine two notable object-lessons which ought to be taken universally to heart.

THE LATEST ECCLESIASTICAL FARCE.

I now come to the greatest religious drama of the year. I call it by this theatrical term quite advisedly, for it is a truly dramatical and sensational performance. In it the chief actor was the same dignitary of whom I have been writing. The Archbishop of Canterbury has once more shown himself an astute statesman. He knows his business as an Erastian leader. For it is not his business to act as a simple follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, and to say to others as Paul did, "Be ye followers of me, as I am of Christ." That sort of injunction would only be possible to one who cared for nothing but the ancient hallowed gospel, which I fear is about the last thing for which our modern sectarians have any regard. In May last the Archbishops of Canterbury and York arranged a Consistory Court at Lambeth Palace, where the primate resides when in London. This court proceeded to try the cases of two clergymen—the Rev. Mr. Westall, of London, and the Rev. Mr. Ram, of Norwhich, both of whom were accused of illegally practicing popish performances, especially incense-burning in worship, and the carrying of lighted candles in processions in church. The Archbishop has now given his judgment, after most people had nearly forgotten all about the matter heard in May. The decision of Dr. Temple is a great blow for the proud, pertinacious and growing High Church party, for it declares that both these practices are illegal in a certain sense, as not being enjoined by the Prayer Book. Immense numbers of people are now wondering what the High Church clergy will do. The important side of the matter is this, that the more serious and astute of the Ritualists do not specially care about these two petty and trifling ceremonials. Incense and candles are minor accessories. What the Ritualists would endure martyrdom to maintain are the mass and the confessional. And the Archbishop knows what he is about. He knows that he must fling a sop to the Puritan watchdogs who are baying loudely on the war-path, and he artfully confines his declarations to the minimum demand of the Protestant party. But the arrogance of the High Churchmen will only be encouraged by this nibbling and meddling. We shall probably reach a crisis in a year or two, after the masses of the people have begun to realize the true nature of the popish conspiracy. The drift of public sentiment will soon be towards disestablishment. There has hitherto been no preponderance of opinion in that regard, but the conduct of the "High" party has done very much to make Englishmen think more carefully than before. Great reforms never come till great abuses precipitate them. Liberty is only fought for when slavery has become intolerable.

PARLIAMENT IS OVER.

The palladium of our British liberties is once more dismantled. The two Houses of Parliament have broken up for the rest of the year unless some great necessity should constrain the government to convene an autumn session, which is not a very probable contingency. This session of our Parliament has not been one to be very proud of. It has been a season of the pettiest possible enactments. What will chiefly be remembered is the policy of this Tory Government under Lord Salisbury in still muddling the affairs of the nation with its religion. Unfortunately, as long as we have a particular form of sectarian Christianity protected, patronized and pampered by the state, so long will Parliament be called on to waste its precious time and energy in interfering with church law and order only to fling the church into hopeless chaos. The Clergy Relief Bill, which I have somewhat fully explained in a former letter, has handed over a sum of nearly 100,000 pounds a year to the ministrs of the Established Church for the payment of their taxes, out of the pockets of the community at large. This unjust and dishonest bribe to a favored class has done more to injured Lord Salisbury's reputation than anything which he has countenanced, partial and partisan though his whole policy has been from the beginning. The effect of it will be to make the clergy as a class exceedingly unpopular. The particular form of corrupt Christianity embodied in our national religion, established and enriched by law, will now be looked on with great odium by thousands of the people who had hitherto not much concerned themselves with the distinctive principles of church and state. Disestablishment is slowly looming into view.

AMERICANS IN LONDON.

The annual influx of our American cousins is reported to be far greater than ever it has been in any former year. One of our weeklies, the Illustrated Mail, contains a humorous cartoon, representing a procession of Yankees stretching right across the Atlantic from New York to Liverpool. We are delighted to welcome the stream. Let them come, and may more follow! England never looked lovelier than it is this summer. I see that some exaggerated notion has crept into the American papers about the heat here. We are having a delicious time. It is not true that horses are falling dead through the intense heat in nearly all our streets. One or two such incidents happen each week in the height of summer. Of course the great omnibus and tramcar companies lose a number of their animals through the effect of the hard work which has to be done in the heat. But we never have any long spell of severe warmth. Our churches do not close for an hour. They remain open for all the regular services all through the year. We have no extremes of climate, but breathe an atmosphere which preserves the golden mean. In England existence glides evenly along. Our climate is coquettish and and fickle, I admit, but it is therefore happily deficient in monotony.

Chicago Letter.

We often hear the pessimistic saying, "Every man has his price." Certainly a study of Chicago taxes makes one feel that many men will sell their honor for "filthy lucre." The most discouraging feature, perhaps, is the fact that the large giver to public enterprises and Christian philanthropies are are the greatest delinquents in paying taxes. The new law is making some radical changes. The first person to give an honest return of her personal property was a woman. The second person was a woman. The third person was a woman. The amount of lying in regard to taxes in Chicago may be guessed at by the fact that the assessed valuation of real estate in Chicago was less in 1898 than in 1873. Every one knows the real value of realty has increased many fold. Chicago has the smallest debt of any great city in the union, and if her citizens can be compelled to be partially honest in paying their taxes Chicago can wipe out her debt of seventeen millions and make many public improvements in the near future.

Quite a number of earnest, scholarly men in our ranks were brought together the first week in August in Chicago. The purpose of this meeting was to consider some of the vital problems of present-day thought and life. The writer was only permitted to attend two sessions of the institute, both of which was well attended. Prof. Peckham, of Hiram College, read a paper on "Sacrifice Among the Ancient Hebrews." A careful study of such Hebrew words as Zabach Minchah, etc., led to the conclusion that the prominent feature in the ancient sacrifice was a joyous meal at which the deity was a welcome guest. The paper by Dr. Willett on the present status of the historical and literary criticism of the Bible was a careful resume of the results of both the "lower" or textual and "higher" or literary criticism of the Bible. The lecturer urged his hearers to remember that all questions of criticism were subordinate to a true biblical theology, and that most important of all was a firm faith in God and a positive life-loyalty to Christ.

The Chicago Letter writer is still a young man, yet he distinctly remembers when a woman's club was a novelty. (The reader must not consider "club" the synonym of broomstick.) The Woman's Club in Atlanta, consisting of four or five hundred members, is a fine body of women. Those who are not posted on the rapid growth and great influence of these organizations may be surprised to learn that one of the most notable meetings in Chicago for sometime has been the National Convention of Colored Women, representing the clubs of colored women in the United States. The papers read reveal a marvelous grasp of the social, political and industrial condition of the ten million negroes in the United States. One who sympathizes with the South in its great problems could not help contrasting the bitter wrangling which marred the last convention of woman's clubs in Denver with the dignity and earnestness of this national convention of negro women. When some feeling was aroused over the election of a new president, the last president left the chair, and asking that all personal feeling over the matter be obliterated, declined to be re-elected.

That the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST readers may partially realize the extraordinary development of the negro, I shall give you a few paragraphs from what was probably the most popular address by a negro woman before this convention of negro women. It was delivered by Mrs. Josephine Bruce, widow of B. K. Bruce, former U. S. senator. The subject was "One Phase of the Labor Problem." Reader, note the thought as well as the language: "Before this splendid organization of women and at this time it is eminently fitting that attention be called to the position of the negro workman in the world of industry. For the last thirty-five years the problem of negro suffrage has, unfortunately, overshadowed the labor question in importance, but since the possibility of negro political supremacy has become a thing of the past, the labor question has begun to assume due importance. The special phase to which I shall call your attention is in large part due to the formation of numerous and powerful combinations of labor, primarily to maintain a reasonable standard of wages. Such an object is praiseworthy, but with it there exists the dangerous principle of exclusion. With the downfall of the old regime there began to be manifest a tendency towards congestion in large centers of population. . . In the wake of free industry comes the trade union. But here comes into play the race feeling. At the South the union absolutely excludes the black laborer. . . Discouraged at the prospects of industry, ambitious negroes have entered the learned professions in disproportionate numbers. Many have failed for two reasons: first, distrust among all classes of the ability of the professional negro and second, the financial condition of clients. From the economic standpoint the importance of a great class of artisans is too clear to need elaboration. I do not belittle the literary education, but I remember that the supreme need of the preacher, the lawyer and the doctor is a great industrial class upon which to base their professional activity." Gentle reader, if you are a Southern woman think of a national convention of negro women listening for nearly an hour with wrapped attention, broken only by enthusiastic applause, to a negro woman discussing in the above strain the social, industrial and ethical importance of training an artisan class of negroes and you will close your reverie with the words in which this intelligent negro woman closed her address: "We who have a firm and abiding faith in democracy may await the future in confidence."

After several months of hard but most profitable study in Chicago I resume my work of teaching the Bible to the students of a State University. Sister Columbia H. Cary and her children have added to the influence of the noble life of Col. John B. Cary by endowing a Bible Lectureship at the University of Virginia. The C. W. B. M. has appointed me to take charge of this work and the board of visitors have elected me a member of the faculty of the University of Virginia in the capacity of instructor in Hebrew. I hope to remain in Virginia at least until our Lectureship has grown to a Bible Chair. Mrs. Young, Helen and I bade adieu to Mrs. Mabel Wakeley, our hostess, and other Christian friends in Chicago, Wednesday, August the 15th, and after a delightful trip over the Big Four and C. & O. reached Charlottesville at noon the following day. Next week I shall hold an old-time August meeting at the Macedonia Church with Bro. Richard Bagby, of Louisa, Va. And now, dear reader, as the writer of the Chicago Letter I bid you adieu.

"If I were sick and wanted to get well, I'd find out how some one else got well who had the same sort of sickness as mine."

If your sickness is like hers, Mrs. Jacobs' story will interest you.

"I was very sick indeed," writes Mrs. Mollie Jacobs, of Felton, Kent Co., Delaware, "and our family doctor said I had consumption. I thought I must die soon for I felt so awful bad. Had a bad cough, spit blood, was very short of breath, had pains in my chest and right lung, and also had dyspepsia. Before I took your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Pellets' I was so weak I could not sweep a room, and now I can do a small washing, and I feel like a new person. I believe that the Lord and your medicine have saved my life. I was sick over two years. I took 13 bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and four vials of Dr. Pierce's Pellets."

Are you sick? Are your lungs "weak?" Have you obstinate lingering cough, with bleeding lungs, weakness and emaciation? Thousands in just your case have been cured by the use of

DR. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

It always helps. It almost always cures. Sick persons are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter absolutely without fee or charge. All correspondence is strictly private. Write and get a specialist's opinion on your case, free. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

New York Letter.

The Sing Sing Campmeeting Association has just closed one of the most prosperous series of meetings held here in many years. These meetings are perhaps the best exponent of old-fashioned Methodism in all this section of the country, for the brethren and sisters have "a glory hallelujah time" from first to last, shouting, singing and jumping for joy. The attendance was large, the interest deep, the singing spirited, the prayers fervent, the shouting loud and plenteous, the preaching good, bad and indifferent, and the "seekers in the straw," or at the mourners' bench, few. The series began on Aug. 10th and lasted ten days, there being ten meetings each day except on Sunday, when they far exceeded that number. The services began each morning at six o'clock and closed in the evening about eleven. Three features of the camp, "Old Folks' Day," "Children's Day" and "Marching Around Zion," deserve special mention. Old Folks' Day is the time for the reunion of all the old-time campers, the singing of the oldest Methodist hymns and the old-fashioned love feast. This year Mrs. Maggie Van Cott (whose voice is not unlike that of the bulls of Bashan) conducted the love feast in her independent and unique style. It was truly a great day at the camp. The Children's Day consisted of well rendered children's services, marred, however, by what is falsely called infant baptism. This performance ruined the whole day for me. Marching Around Zion is a peculiar, time-honored closing service, when the campers, both American and Swede, meet at "the circle" about eleven o'clock at night and march all about the grounds singing hymns, waving flags, banners and handkerchiefs and shouting. This over, all reassemble at the preacher's stand and join in specific and general expressions of thanks and well wishes. Thus the camp meetings are brought to a close amid the greatest jubilation and gladness.

Such services as these through which we have just passed do us much good; not because they are always instructive or edifying in themselves, but because they lead one to think along new lines, and by contrast or deduction one comes to realize the weakness and the strength of the customs and methods and even the doctrines he has always been used to. I can see to-day better than I did ten days ago the granitelike foundations of the position of the Disciples of Christ, especially in the matter of teaching the sinner the way of salvation. I listened in vain to hear them tell those "seeking" what they should believe, do and be in order to salvation. I was convinced more and more of the fact that the Disciples of Christ have a great mission in the religious world. Further, I am persuaded that these good people depend almost exclusively on the emotional in men for success. Sentiment is necessary to a strong, well-rounded Christian, and I fear sometimes that the Disciples, in their just and well directed efforts to be clear in the presentation of the gospel to the intellect have failed in a measure to develop properly the religious sentiments. If we could inspire our knowledge of the gospel with some of the Methodist zeal and enthusiasm, there is no question that it would make an irresistable combination in evangelism. One of the weakest means employed in these meetings is the mourners' bench, and the utter lack of judgment in the use made of it increases its weakness among thoughtful people. One evening, at an after-meeting, I was accosted, with another Disciple alongside me, and asked to come at once and give my heart to God, being assured that it would be the happiest day of my life if only I would do so. When I told the evangelist I had been preaching the gospel for fifteen years he expressed surprise and went on to others. The minister should be "in season, out of season," but he should have some common sense, too. Taken altogether, these services lead one to a fuller appreciation of the simplicity, beauty and all-sufficiency of the gospel of Christ.

There are two preachers of the cross recently come into this state who should be employed and kept constantly at work. One is Bro. S. C. Humphries, of Buffalo, who, after several years of successful work in Ohio and Pennsylvania, has returned to the western part of the state to make it his home, but is open for engagements to work for the Master. He is a good man, with much experience in Christian labor, and is able to do excellent service. It is to be hoped that he may be kept busy in the vineyard of our Lord. The other brother to whom I refer is the Rev. C. B. Carlisle, stopping at present at Jordan, N. Y. He was for some years a minister of the Congregational Church, laboring in the West, but becoming convinced that the Disciples of Christ occupied more thoroughly scriptural ground than that held by the Congregationalists, he identified himself with our people and now preaches the faith held by us. For several months he has been serving as chaplain in the American army in Cuba, but recently returned to locate in pastoral work somewhere in this country. Evidently he is a man of ability, and no doubt there is a field for him among us. The needs of the field are so great, the harvest is so white for the harvesting, that no reaper should be allowed to stand idle for a single day. S. T. WILLIS.

Kansas City Letter.

The Register-Review of Aug. 17th contains on editorial in which I find the following words: "Fifteen of the most capable preachers in the state of Missouri have during the last five years gone into secular callings. Five have gone to farming or fruit raising. Five have gone to merchandising, three to teaching, one to law and one to the practice of medicine. If we were to name these men, you would say that they were among the best, most scholarly and most capable men in Missouri. They were compelled to give up the ministry because they must provide for their families." The whole editorial is strong and timely, while some of its statements of fact are startling. If other states are losing their strong men from the ministry in a like proportion, there is a serious crisis approaching for our cause. We have ever accepted as a necessity the preaching of the gospel as the only means of bringing the world to faith in Christ. Young men are encouraged to enter the ministry by the strong plea of the world's great need of hearing the Word of God proclaimed, and the church's loud call for more laborers to enter the harvest fields. Are we asking them to begin a ministry that they can never complete, and from which they must retire in the very vigor of middle life, to follow some calling for which they have neither desire nor preparation? With the hundreds of pastorless churches among us, are we going to allow good, intelligent and consecrated ministers of the gospel to stand idly by the gate of the Lord's vineyard, because no one will employ them? But you say, "Why should they stand idle? Let them go to work somewhere, and they can soon develop a field that will support them." That is true as regards a young and single man. He can find some place to preach where food and shelter will be gladly given him, and an earnest and patient ministry will rally enough to his side to give him a generous living. The same would be true of many young married couples. But what of the man of middle age, with a family which he must support, or bring upon him the reproach of the world, the church and the Lord? He cannot go to an uncultivated field, for he has no means of supporting his family till a church is built up. He must receive a support at once, or he and his will suffer. In such a condition of affairs it is cruel for the churches to use him in "trial sermons" without remuneration. He goes from church to church, entering each pulpit with fear and trembling, hoping that the message he faithfully bears to the people may be so acceptable as to result in a call, yet doomed to experience that long deferring of hope that maketh the heart sick, and perhaps grow desperate under the strain of financial embarrassment. I only wonder that more of these good men do not leave the ministry. Only the consuming desire to preach Christ to a lost world could drive men forward in search for a place to spend and be spent in the Master's service.

I am aware that some of the unemployed preachers are unworthy of support by the churches. Some are bad men, others are lazy, others are ignorant. But alas! not all the good, industrious and intelligent are kept at work by the churches. I know now of a splendid preacher, a graduate of one of our best colleges, a successful pastor, a cultured man, a Christian of spotless reputation, who has been for months without a pastorate, and who is becoming discouraged, and is looking toward some secular calling for a support. He has visited churches without being paid more than a bare pittance, until he has no money to go longer, and is waiting a little longer to see if a way will not open for him to continue the work which he has so faithfully pursued for many years. He is in the very prime of life, able to do the best work he has ever done. This is not an isolated case. There are many such among us. What is the remedy? I see but one. We must secure a closer fellowship among our churches and preachers, whereby all shall be interested in the welfare of each, and each shall be subject to the judgment of all. We have hundreds of preachers idle among us who, if they belonged to the Methodist Church, would be doing excellent work as pastors. That church uses all its worthy preachers, and has no pastorless churches. We must do something of the kind, through some form of closer co-operation than now prevails, or our losses will grow larger, and the shame of our dead and dying churches will increase. Shall we have grace sufficient to face these facts and prayerfully seek a way out of the difficulty? I believe we will. But I tremble for the peril that longer continuance in our present slipshod way of not doing things may bring upon us.

Our coming offering for Church Extension ought to be the largest in our history. Never were there so many and so urgent calls for aid in building houses of worship. Never were the returns quicker for any investment of money in the Lord's work. Every church among us ought to take the offering the first Sunday in September. We must make up this fund to a quarter of a million by the close of the year 1900. W. F. RICHARDSON.

The Jubilee Convention.

Attend the Jubilee Convention and get a great spiritual uplift, receive new thoughts on old subjects, obtain a wider outlook on the human race and feel the new interest that comes from contact with other bright and consecrated Christian people. Books give valuable ideas, but these stick better when we get them warm from a heart that has been kindled into enthusiasm by them. Sometimes, too, we get more good from men than from their messages. Attend the convention and be lifted out of the ruts into which you have fallen during the years of religious service and toil; and secure instruction in patience from those who on account of peculiar trials have been driven to live very close to God and who, like Ian Maclaren's Burnbrae, are "far ben."

Attend the convention and receive the benefit of a journey where the monotny of life will be broken by new scenery, conversation with old friends and classmates; and the forming of new acquaintances that will bring out our latent abilities. Let the lower critics and the higher critics flee to the convention as a city of refuge for safety in a reconsecration until they are favored with a fair trial. Attend it and get into the current of thought and purpose of the best people in a great religious body and go home revived for better service.

Missouri ought to be represented by one thousand rejoicing Disciples. Hannibal will cross over to the convention city, overcoming every obstacle. LEVI MARSHALL.

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

The second session of the Piedmont Assembly, held in the tabernacle near Gordonsville, Va., showed a decided improvement upon the opening session of last year. The grounds were in better condition, a number of new cottages had been erected, the attendance was large, order excellent and the preaching more definite and evangelistic. Evangelist W. H. Book was engaged for two sermons each day during the assembly and the people in great numbers came from all the adjacent counties and from distant sections of the state to hear his eloquent and heart-searching sermons and to enjoy the fellowship of the Lord's disciples. Addresses from the leading preachers of the state and from Bros. Power and Wright, of Washington, and Abbott, of Baltimore, contributed to make the gathering a success. No admission fee is charged to the services, no paid entertainments are held, but voluntary contributions suffice to meet the expenses and reduce the debt upon the property.

A vigorous effort is being made to revive interest in the organized mission work in Virginia. John S. Ellett, a Christian business man, of Richmond, has guaranteed the salary of F. C. Anderson, state evangelist, for three months, to attend the district convention and to awaken interest in the state work, and to cultivate a closer bond of union between the state and district societies. The Tidewater district convention, which met with Independence Church, Hanover county, Aug. 8, 9 and 10, showed the effects of this attempt at a forward movement. Of the thirty churches in the district, twenty-five sent delegates, and among these were a number of representative business men. The churches reported 207 additions and $650 raised for district work. The Educational Board reported assets amounting to $2,500, and several candidates who will be sent to college to prepare for the ministry of the Word. The board will continue its appropriation to the Fredericksburg mission, and will endeavor to put an evangelist in the field. The convention in 1900 meets with the Rappahannock Church, Essex county.

At the convention this summer general regret was expressed at the departure of Cephas Shelburne from the mission in Fredericksburg. Having gathered together a nucleus of excellent people in the church, provided for them a comfortable church home and won recognition and the respect of the various religious bodies in the city, it was thought that he should have remained indefinitely in that growing and historic town. But Bro. Shelburne thinks he will have a more promising field of usefulness in Roanoke, Va., where his pastorate begins Sept. 1.

The work of Ira W. Kimmel opens auspiciously at the Whitney Ave. Mission in this city. The attendance at Sunday-school already exceeds that of some of our older churches. The committee has been obliged to purchase additional chairs to accommodate the Sunday-school and midweek attendants, and two young ladies have made the good confession. Unless all signs fail these will be the first fruits of a glorious harvest to be reaped in that community in the next few years. The C. W. B. M. never made a better investment than when they granted an appropriation to Whitney Avenue.

The Ninth Street Church prides itself upon the fact that during its eight years of history there has never been a failure to hold the regular Sunday morning and evening services nor a midweek prayer-meeting, with the single exception of a Wednesday, when we adjourned to attend the state convention at the Vermont Avenue Church. During the pastor's absence this summer a delighful service of the Lord's Supper was held, conducted by Elders P. S. Steel and J. A. Scott. The invitation was given and a young lady confessed Christ. Sunday, Aug. 14, there were two confessions and the money raised to pay the semi-annual interest upon our church debt.

We are looking forward to the annual convention of Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia at Beaver Creek, Md., Sept. 20, 21 and 22, and expect it to be the best in our history. We have not relinquished the hope of securing a one-fare rate for the round trip to the Cincinnati Convention from this section. We will be able to make definite announcements in a few days.

EDWARD B. BAGBY.

Texas Letter.

Despite the heat and dust I recently made a hasty trip to St. Louis in the interest of the business department of the Christian Courier. As I passed through the rich country of Northern Texas I was impressed anew with the wealth of the land. Certainly there is nothing better under the sun. Corn, wheat, oats, hay and melons were to be seen in abundance everywhere, while the cotton fields would be able to supply, it would seem, the wants of the world. And when passing through the territory the fat cattle were so numerous that my abhorance for a bad steak, if possible, was increased. A butcher himself ought almost to be butchered for selling our people such a thing.

The "Katy Flyer" took me through some interesting places, where I gladly would have stopped, but could not. At Nevada I spent five years, during which time I had my first experience as a peacemaker. Then I saw a little church torn asunder and bleeding at every pore reunited. There in the country rests the body of my honored father, who passed away from us at almost ninety years of age. By his side are the remains of a brother, while in the city are most of my kinsmen in the flesh living outside of Virginia. At Sedalia I also spent five years, which were blessed of God in the conversion of many souls, and in the building of one of the most beautiful churches in the brotherhood. At Rockport, a quiet little town on the Missouri River, I had my first city (?) pastorate, giving half time for three years to one of the best little churches I ever saw. At Mokane, another town on the "Big Muddy," where in my nineteenth year I was baptized into the Lord by D. M. Grandfield. Strange to say that I passed all these places in the night, and was not even permitted to see them.

In less than twenty-four hours—just five minutes less—after a run of almost 900 miles, I reached St. Louis. It is a big city, and growing larger every day. It is in the center of our population, and destined to be one of the largest cities in the world. And our people are a power in the city, with a number of active churches scattered through it. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and the Christian Publishing Company, two mighty agencies for good, are properly located in this great central metropolis. And as I looked through them I felt a sensation of pardonable pride that they were ours. Editor Garrison was away, as is his custom in the summer, by the lakeside. But his faithful assistant, W. W. Hopkins, was at his post, directing the office work of the paper. F. M. Call, the business manager, was also on hand, looking after the business affairs; and W. W. Dowling, the veteran Sunday-school writer, was toiling at his beloved task. It was a pleasure to meet again Oreon E. Scott, who for a little while was associated with the Courier, and to know that he was doing well.

On my return trip our sleeper gave us no little trouble, and lost us a precious hour of time by refusing to let the breaks be taken off. How like some people we all know. They keep the breaks on all the time. Now, don't misunderstand me; breaks are good things; in fact, we could not get along without them, but they ought not to be abused. We ought to push and pull some, and not be holding back all the time.

The race problem of the South demands the best thought of our wisest men. Booker T. Washington says its solution is in the education of the negro in the United States, and he is doing a great work in that direction. Henry M. Turner, seignior Bishop of the African Methodist Church, believes it can be solved only by sending the negro back to Africa. He assigns two reasons for his belief: first, no people ever become great who have not a country of their own; and second, the Anglo-Saxon race never associates with another race without treading it under foot. And thus the colored leaders themselves are not agreed. The world is waiting with a rich reward for the man who will solve this problem. Who is he? and what is his solution?

Garland is to have a new church building. They have been feeling the need of it for some time; and their recent meeting in which B. F. Wilson assisted their pastor, C. L. Cole, caused matters to culminate. The Garland congregation is one of the best in the state, and we note with pleasure this additional evidence of prosperity.

Attair has a new congregation of seventeen members. H. C. Thomas and wife recetly located there; there was no church or Sunday-school of any kind in the town. They soon organized a school; and it was not long till they sent for Geo. Van Pelt, one of our evangelists; and now they have a congregation with seventeen members, and money is being raised for a house.

Bros. Cranfill and Hayden, editors of two of the leading Baptist papers of the state, are having an unsavory fight in the courts of Cæsar. The Baptists, as a result, are suffering in the eyes of the world, and injury is being felt by all the churches. It seems to me that a division in the Baptist Zion is unavoidable. Such things ought not so to be.

R. L. Courtney, of Kentucky, succeeds L. B. Grogan at Rockwall, and we extend him a hand of hearty weclome. Bro. Grogan goes to Chickasha, I. T., to take charge of a school, and we wish him success.

Dedication.

On Lord's day, Aug. 13, it was my privilege to be present at the opening and dedication of the new and elegant house of worship just completed at Jamestown, Ohio. The house is a beautiful structure inside and out, a model of convenience and elegance, and a great credit to the church and city of Jamestown. The dedication was considered a very great success, and all felt greatly to rejoice in the better opportunity now afforded to do a great work for Christ and his church.

The Guest of Honor.

The M. E. camp meeting and chautauqua is in full blast at the beautiful association grounds here. Some very fine talent has been secured for the occasion. Thus Aug. 17th, Dr. B. J. Radford, of Eureka College, delivered before a fine audience a thoughtful and exceeding helpful address on "How They Grow." It has often been referred to since that day. In the grand march to the assembly grounds at 10 A. M., that day the school in the county bringing the largest number of their school pro rata was to be considered the guest of honor, was to lead in the great march through the city, occupy a conspicious seat during the day and receive a banner. Well, our school was the guest of honor on that occasion. B. S. Ferrall, Pastor.

State Missionary Convention.

The church at Jefferson City cordially invites faithful workers from all the churches in the state to attend the convention and help to make it one of the very best in all our history. Do not fear, because we are a "feeble folk" here, that you will not be well entertained. The good people of our city will assist us in this and hundreds of homes will extend cordial hospitality.

Do not make this the occasion of a mere visit to see the capital. This you can do at some more "convenient season" for us. I wish to say, however, that arrangements will be made to show our visitors everything of interest. Doubtless our genial governor and his charming wife will tender a reception at the mansion. The prison chaplain has promised to have an entertainment by the convicts for the convention, which will not interfere with its business.

Write me if you are coming. Remember the time, Oct. 2nd to 5th.

J. P. Pinkerton, Pastor.

Invitation.

The University Church, Des Moines, extends an invitation to the Disciples of Christ throughout Iowa to attend the Iowa Christian convention, Sept. 4-8. Every attention will be given delegates by the church; lodging and breakfast free. This is to be a forestate of the Jubilee Convention. Come and help make the best of the many good ones in Iowa. Send your name for assignment to the pastor.

I. N. McCash, Pastor.

Illinois Notes.

J. W. Knight, Carlinville, is in a meeting at Atwater with 30 additions.

H. M. Brooks will conduct a meeting at Rantoul, beginning Oct. 1st. H. H. Peters is the minister.

A. R. Spicer, Noweaqua, is holding a meeting for our board at Danville, which will result in organizing the second church there.

Our evangelists for the year beginning now are C. E. Evans, S. S. Lappin, Isaac Beckelhymer, C. H. Berry and J. E. Parker. They are now planning the campaign for fall and winter. Write me if you need a meeting.

C. E. Evans is in a meeting now at a country point near Macon.

During last year our board did twice as much as in the preceding year. Comparison with the second largest denomination in the state shows that converts made by our board were eight to where they made one and that five dollars of their money was equaled in service rendered by one dollar in the hands of our board. Our business management is all that could be asked and the one thing needful is liberal support by the churches and ministry.

This is our state jubilee year and the next annual state meeting will be known as the Jubilee Convention. It will be held the first week in October, 1900, at some central point. You will want your church to be in the list of contributors this year.

Apportionments are already sent to the churches and it is hoped that brethren will arrange for a general observance of our day. It comes one month later, Nov. 5th, and the time for preparation is longer. It only needs a little business management to bring in great returns.

The Sunday-school work will be carried on by our board hereafter and the money is now raised for this work by apportionment also. The call has been sent to all superintendents and they are asked to answer on the inclosed card at once. We can do only what the schools are willing to pay for. It rests entirely with the superintendents as to what shall be done. J. Fred Jones, Sec.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

A banner for every school in the state of Missouri, a banner that will adorn the walls of any church and one that will be an honor to all the workers.

Do you want it for your school and are you willing to make an effort for it, and at the same time increase the membership, interest and efficiency of your school? So that the query is very much to the point, do you want the banner?

This is not to go to the best school in the state, neither is it for the school showing the best per cent. of enrollment, attendance, grade nor offerings, but is within easy reach of 1,000 schools in Missouri, and we are planning for many hundreds of these fine bannrs to be given away at our next annual convention, and we want your school to immediately join those that will try for it.

The banners are to be 25 inches wide and 36 inches long, are to be printed in red, blue and gold, on the finest white paper and when framed, they will worthily reflect your interest in this department of the church work. Do you want it?

We will begin keeping "tally" after the first of September and make the points required to secure the banner so simple and easy that every school can easily have one if you wish to have it.

THE NINE POINTS REQUIRED TO SECURE THE BANNER.

1. At our convention next June you must report having had "evergreen" school; that is, it must have been open every Lord's day unless hindered by sickness or the weather. This is not difficult, in fact, the most of the schools of Missouri do this, so that it is an easy requirement, and yet some of our schools must advance in this direction if the banner adorns their walls.

2. You must at the next annual convention report an increase in your enrollment over the year before. This does not say how much of an increase, only that it shall be an increase, and if the enrollment in June shows only one additional pupil, it entitles you to the banner. Easy enough, is it not?

3. At the coming convention you must report an increase in your average attendance over the year ending May 31st, 1899, and this the great majority of our school can do and not hurt anything or anybody either; in fact, it ought to be done, and so we are willing to help push a good thing along by making it one of the banner points. You will admit that this is not at all difficult.

4. You must report at the coming convention that your school has observed "Children's Day," and you may think we ought to have said Children's Days, but we said if you have observed one of the days, well and good for the banner, and if you have kept more, so much the better for you.

5. Your school must report that you have furnished the annual statistical report, blanks for which will be sent you in good time. This is another point that will not be new to many of our schools, for you have always sent in your report and we have used them to good results; but this is to stimulate some that have been a little too lukewarm on this subject in the past, hence it is a banner point for all the schools for the present year.

6. You have had during the year ending May 31st, 1900, a Bible school rally, and if you will go at it right and in good time it will do you more good than you now conceive. For instance, if you will have the rally in the fall, get the adjacent preaching brethren to help, discussing some feature of Bible-school work on such a night as suits them best. If you will have some good and interesting music at all the services of the rally you can easily increase your enrollment; you can take an offering and meet your apportionment for state work; you can arouse interest and enlist the church members in Bible-school work as well as interest the school in all phases of the work. Have a rally and you are sure to have another; hence, it is made a banner point, and rightly so too.

7. You must report your apportionment for state Bible-school work paid.

8. You must co-operate with the county superintendent where we have one and he asks it of you, and in return he will help you carry a banner dome next June.

9. You must report an increase in the church membership in your school, and I have shown you how easy this is in the rally.

Will you have the banner? Will you urge your school to have it? More anon.

New York Mission Notes.

The state convention will be held at Tully, South of Syracuse on D. L. & W. R. R., Sept. 19-22. All the preachers and many others are expected. There is a splendid program, and the prospects are good for a large gathering of workers. The churches are rounding up their offering for state missions. Let no church be left off of the roll of helpers.

The New York churches will also give Church Extension a helping hand. They have made a good record on offerings for Foreign and Home Missions.

This is a remarkable time in they history of New York churches. Usually a number of the weaker churches are without regular preaching. Excepting two or three of the stronger churches that are changing pastors, all the churches have regular preachers.

The change of Bro. B. Q. Denham from N. Tonawanda to 56th Street, New York City, and Bro. L. C. McPherson, of Jefferson Street Church, Buffalo, to Havana, Cuba, will cause the reorganization of our state missionary board.

The education of my children, a boy of eight years and a girl of five, makes it necessary for me to close my evangelistic work and locate where there are good schools.

I do not want an easy place or a great church, the work of other men's hand; but I want a great field where faithful work and loyal preaching of the gospel will make a great church. I have been in the ministry fourteen years. Seven years of that time I have been a pastor, and seven years an evangelist. The two years that I have spent as state evangelist of New York have been the two best years of my life, not in members added, but in laying foundations, generating forces and setting in order the things wanting. Some who know say that the two years are two of the best in the history of New York missionary work. Five missionary pastors, a wise state board, the preachers and churches of the state, with scarcely an exception, are in full harmony with the missionary work, and share in the victories won for Christ.

Anti-missionary force is nil—is dead—in New York, and the Lord be praised! But the great work is just beginning and the change of state board and state evangelist makes our state meeting a matter of interest and prayerful thought. Come in the spirit of prayer.

The program of Preachers' Day, Sept. 19th, is worth the journey to Tully.

A. M. Hurd continues another year at Pompy.

D. C. Tremaine "settles down" for another year at Harrisville and Pitcairn.

Wm. Worsdell, a friend of my boyhood days from Illinois, at my suggestion quits the schoolroom and is happy in his pulpit work with the church at Clarence.

A. M. Hootman, of Tonawanda, is a strong and loyal gift from Indiana to our New York forces.

"Loyalty" and "Enthusiasm" are the "keynotes" in New York.

We expect to close a contract by Sept. 1st for a lot for this, the youngest church of the state.

State convention, Richland Center, Sept. 13-20. Plan to stay over Sunday.

The following speakers have been engaged: Pres. J. H. Hardin, Eureka College, Ill.; C. C. Smith, Cincinnati; Mrs. Helen E. Moses, Indianapolis; Claris Yeuell, Chavies, Ala.; Miss Mattie Burgess, Bina, India; G. W. Muckley, Kansas City, Mo., and probably A. McLean or F. M. Rains, of Cincinnati. Also F. N. Calvin, of Milwaukee, will be a new figure in our state meetings.

Bro. Calvin will present the interests of our new Children's Day, the Boys' and Girls' Rally Day for America. Let every Sunday-school superintendent in the state write to B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, O., for full information as to the observance of this day. Ask him for programs, all you want, free. The day set apart for this observance is the last Sunday before Thanksgiving. Begin now.

Mrs. E. M. Pease has been appointed musical director of the convention.

Mrs. D. S. Ross has been appointed chairman of thd entertainment committee. All who are going to the convention should send their names to her at once to be booked in advance for board and lodging. Address her at Richland Center. Attend to this at once.

Pastor A. F. Willett has resigned at Richland Center, on account of the failure of his health. He has returned to Michigan where it is hoped he may recuperate.

H. F. Barstow writes that he is pleased with the outlook at Hickory. He compliments Bro. Olson on the past successes.

A. M. Laird, of Elkhart, Ind., is holding a meeting at Lynxville, under direction of the state board. I visited them Aug. 6th and baptized two. He has baptized seven since then. That makes twelve additions since the Sunday-school was organized, when the church had but eleven members.

Claris Yeuell, of Chavies, Ala., is holding a meeting under direction of the state board at Fosterville. There were two additions last Sunday. He will hold one or two more meetings in the state before returning South. H will also be at the state convention.

At Hickory, in July, I organized an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. with nine members. More will join them. I hope the time will come soon when every state will have an auxiliary.

A church of twelve members has been partially organized near Valley Junction. They maintain a Sunday-school three miles from town in a schoolhouse.

F. W. Mutchler has made a splendid record at Center and Footville. They have given him a call for another year. Those two churches have given over $200 for missions this year.

O. C. Sturgeon and family, of Minneapolis, has returned to Milwaukee. Welcome home.

Churches wanting meetings between the state convention and the general convention should write me at once. Two or three such meetings can be supplied.

I am expecting to make arrangements whereby all who go from Wisconsin to the general conventions at Cincinnati may travel together on one train. Please send me your name, if you are expecting to go. Half rates from Chicago. Give me your name and address and I will send you exact figures soon.

The program of our state convention will be published in full in the Milwaukee Times and sent free to every Disciple in the state whose name and address we can secure.

A number of churches ars still delinquent on their payments to the state board. The apportionment should be paid in full at once. The books will close for this year before the state convention assembles. Your church should be reported among those that have paid in full. Send the money to E. M. Pease, Treasurer, Richland Center.

C. W. B. M. of Missouri.

Dear Sisters:—I write you from the College View Sanitarium, Lincoln, Neb., where I have been for some weeks, seeking to regain my health and strength. Never very strong at best, the great trial to which I have been subjected the past six months has produced extreme nervous exhaustion, undermining my health to such an extent that I have been compelled to leave home and seek surroundings and conditions more favorable to the restora- of my strength. My family physician urged this change, and for weeks before I left home he insisted that my recovery depended on my laying aside every burden.

My condition is such, that to receive the benefits of this institution I must have absolute rest, and be relieved of all care and responsibility. To this end I feel impelled, by a sence of duty to myself and family, to notify you of my intention to retire from my position as president of the C. W. B. M. of Missouri. In doing this I take occasion to express my sincere thanks to all my comrades who so faithfully co-operated with me in the work during the time I have held the position. My physician here does not promise me very speedy return of my health, hence I cannot at present see very far into the future. I am hoping to be able to be with you and to fill my place at our next state convention in October at Jefferson City, and thus close up the year's work, and then turn the presidency over to more competent hands. Should I fail of this purpose and find that I cannot be with you at Jefferson City, I will notify Sister J. M. Lowe, our vice-president, in time for her to be prepared to assume the duties of the occasion.

I am happy to report our work in a much more hopeful condition than at any time since I assumed the duties of president.

Shortly after my election at Trenton I began to urge organization, but more conservative workers did not deem it advisable to send out an organizer while the amount of money contributed for state work was barely sufficient to pay the secretary and keep up the general expenses. At the first board meeting at the beginning of the new year I again insisted that we extend the work in our own borders. Four ladies were appointed, each of whom was to make a "trial trip" as organizer. Only one, Mrs. H. S. Gilliam, of Hamilton, accepted the appointment. Our secretary did not deem it advisable to send her out until spring. I think it was in March that she was instructed to plan a route and go forward. She met with marked success; at no place did she fail where an organization was attemped. She started on a second trip, but was called in because of the low condition of the treasury.

So important did it seem to me to be able to report an increase in our membership at the close of this our Jubilee Year, so great was my confidence in the Missouri sisterhood, that I took the responsibility of saying to Sister Gilliam, "Go right on with your work I will personally be responsible for your salary." The results have more than justified me in this undue exercise of authority. I regret that the report of the first work is in Cameron, but I submit the report of the last four weeks, which has just been received:

New auxiliaries organized, 8; old auxiliaries reorganized, 1; Junior C. E. Societies, 2. Total, 11. Average membership of auxiliaries, 10 1-2; subscribers for Tidings, 27; life membership for Ann Arbor work, 1. "Visited three auxiliaries, each of which promised to do more forstate work this year, also to make a special offering for the Bible Chair. The weather was so warm the meetings were poorly attended, so the collections were small, but altogether came $1.19 paying the expenses of the trip." Eleven organizations in four weeks, and that in the most disagreeable time of the year, shows Sister Gilliam to be possessed of unusual ability as an organizer. One of our Missouri preachers said to me, "Sister Gilliam is a 'good mixer,' and I, who have served for years as an organizer in the W. C. T. U., know how very necessary is that qualification." Judging from reports that come to me, Sister Gilliam is also a pleasing and forceful speaker. A native Missourian myself, I think I feel a pardonable pride in this gifted, consecrated woman, who belongs to Missouri—is one of "our very own." Dear sisters, see that she is kept busy, and we will yet bring Missouri to the front in C. W. B. M. work.

Sister Clay, our new secretary, is also doing good work, so that altogether the outlook is very favorable. And now my sisters, I want to thank you for the many expressions of sympathy extended to me in the great sorrow that has come to me. Especially am I grateful for the many letters received during the past ten days, from my brothers as well as sisters, expressing love, confidence and esteem. I regret that I am not able to make a personal reply to each and all, but I assure you that these letters will be preserved among the choicest treasures stored away in "that magical isle up the river Time."

I said to my daughter, after reading this morning's mail, "These dear friends have broken for me the alabaster box of ointment, the fragrance of which will remain with me during the rest of my journey to the "home land."

My dear comrades, it is hardly necessary to assure you that I shall always be ready to cooperate with you in our C. W. B. M. work in any way practicable in the future. "My service is my King's, but my prayers forever and forevermore are thine." Alice Williams.

OHIO.

Cleveland, Aug. 21.—One confession yesterday and one a week ago at the Ætna Street Church.—AUSTIN HUNTER.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Sweet Valley, Aug. 22.—Last Lord's day baptized one, also fellowshiped one from the denominations.—J. W. BOLTON.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, Aug. 26.—One confession last Sunday and one Wednesday evening; both young men.—J. T. BOONE.

NEW JERSEY.

Plainfield.—A church has recently been organized here and is starting out with bright prospects; two baptisms on the 20th inst.—E. E. STEEN.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Brookings, August 24.—Our tent meeting at this place is still in progress. Three more confessions last night; 29 to date. Will continue till Sept. 3. All additions adults so far. They had a business meeting last night and asked Bro. L. W. Thompson, of Volga, to preach for them every Lord's day for the coming year. He was present and will accept, if finances do not forbid. Our new organization here is an "objectionable quantity" to the sects. They oppose us, preach against us and mention us in their sermons, which we have not done of them. We go from here to Defiance, Iowa, Sept. 10. Others wanting us for meetings write me there.—MILO G. CUMMINGS AND MISS PEARL WILEY, evangelists.

ILLINOIS.

Carlock, Aug. 21.—One addition at regular services last Sunday. We close our second year's work here next Lord's day.—J. F. SMITH.

Galesburg, Aug. 24.—There were two additions Sunday, Aug. 20th, and two at prayer-meeting Wednesday night, Aug. 23rd.—C. H. WHITE, pastor.

Kansas, Aug. 24.—Meeting at Pleasant Hill closed the 22nd of August with 28 additions; the best meeting the church has had for years.—E. F KERAN.

Atwater, Aug. 25.—J. W. Knight, of Carlinville, is conducting a successful meeting at this place, assisted by the writer. We are in our second week and report 36 accessions; 32 by confession. The Lord is with us in this effort.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON, singing evangelist.

MISSOURI.

Cross Timbers, Aug. 22.—I held a four days' meeting at Prairie Valley Church near Elkton, with two accessions to the one body.—S. E. HENDRICKSON.

Nashville, Aug. 21.—Two additions at Greenwood second Sunday. One by letter and one by baptism. One addition by baptism at Nashville since last report.—O. W. JONES.

Tulip, Aug. 21.—Our meeting one week old. Seven added to date. I do the preaching and lead the singing. I have arranged for an acting principal of Roberts Academy that I may preach the gospel all of my time. I hold meetings for expenses and freewill offerings. My next meeting will be at Riggs. Those wishing my services please address me at Middle Grove, Mo. The meeting at Tulip continues with fine interest.—T. L. NOBLITT.

Tuxedo, Aug. 28.—Two accessions here yesterday at morning service; a mother and son.—D. N. GILLETT.

Tulip, Aug. 26.—Our meeting continues with good interest. Meeting 12 days old; 24 added to date. I do the preaching and lead the singing.—T. L. NOBLITT.

Prairie Hill., Aug 25.—Seven additions and a great interest. Will go next to Blythedale. Please say through the columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that I have sold my property in Marionville, Mo., and will, the Lord willing, this fall move to Brownwood, Tex. I expect to confine my work to that state. Sorry I will not be able to attend the Jubilee Convention.—MORGAN MORGANS.

Marceline, Aug. 25.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting at Newcomer, Chariton county, with six accessions to the church. One elder and three deacons were added to the board of officers. Bro. F. M. McNamare was ordained to the ministry. He is an earnest and conscientious man. A better feeling now prevails in the church than has for some years past.—ISOM ROBERTS.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT? For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

Hope.

BY D. F. SEYSTER.

'Twixt faith and love doth hope reside,
Decreed by God to there abide,
Till fed by faith and fanned by love,
Its joys are realized above.

This lively hope, that looks beyond,
Can see the brightness saints have donned,
Can see the palms in snowy hands,
That beckon us to better lands.

Naught else can chase away the gloom
That shrouds a soul in doubt and doom;
Naught else would fill the "aching void"
Could hope by hopeless be destroyed.

This hope of glory, Christ in us,
More precious far and marvelous
Than all the wealth the world can give—
This hope that we again shall live.

The Parson's Barrel.

"Well, parson," said Deacon Goodgold to his pastor, "that last Sunday morning's sermon was number one, prime; may I ask you which end of the barrel that came out of? Your barrel is like the widder's in Scripter; it never seems to give out."

"I am glad that my sermon suited you," replied the genial dominie, for I got part of that at your house, part from Neighbor B———'s and part from poor Mrs. C———'s, in whose sick room I spent an hour, and one hint in it came from your boy Frank, who rode by my house on 'old Gray,' without any saddle or bridle. I picked up some of the best things in that discourse during an afternoon spent in pastoral visiting."

Parson Honeywell was a shrewd man, and a faithful, godly pastor. He had not a great many books; and his family increased faster than his library. His Bible he had at his fingers' ends; it was his one great unexhausted storehouse of heavenly knowledge. But he had also a book of human knowledge second only to God's Word. In the forenoon he studied his Bible, and in the same afternoon he sallied out with his horse and buggy and studied his people. He rode with his eyes open, finding illustrations—like his divine Master—from the birds of the air, the flowers of the field and the sower or ploughman by the wayside. His mind was on his sermon all the week. If he saw a farmer letting his team "blow" under a roadside tree, he halted and had a chat with him. He observed the farmer's style of thought, gave him a few words of golden counsel and drove on, leaving the farmer something to think of and something to love his pastor for also. If he saw a boy on his way from school, he took the lad into his buggy and asked him some questions which set the youngster to studying his Bible when he got home. Parson Honeywell caught his congregation when they were young.

Deacon Goodgold was curious to know more about the way in which his minister had gathered up that Sunday's sermon. "Well," replied the parson, "I was studying on the subject of trusting God in times of trial. First, I went to the fountain-head, for my Bible never runs dry. I studied my text thoroughly, comparing Scripture with Scripture; I prayed over it, for a half hour of prayer is worth two hours of study, in getting light on the things of God. After I had put my heads and doctrinal points on paper, I sallied out to find my practical observations among our congregation. I rode down to the house, and your wife told me her difficulties about the doctrine of assurance of faith. From here I went over to your neighbor B———'s house; he is terribly down since he failed in business. He told me that with the breaking down of his son's health and his own breaking down in the store, he could hardly hold his head up, and he had begun to feel awfully rebellious towards his Heavenly Father. I gave him a word or two of cheer, and noted down just what his difficulties were. From his store, I went to see poor Mrs. C———, who is dying slowly of consumption. She showed me a favorite flower that she had put into her window-sill to catch the sunsunshine, and said that her flower had been a daily sermon to her about keeping her soul in the sunshine of her Savior's countenance. Her talk braced me up and gave me a good hint. Then I called on the widow M———, who always needs a word of sympathy. Before I came away she told me that her daughter Mary could not exactly understand what it was to trust Christ and was finding no peace, although she had been under deep conviction of sin for several weeks. I had her daughter called in and I drew from her all her points of difficulty; I read to her such texts of Scripture as applied to her case, prayed with her and then started for home. Your boy rode by my house on the old horse who went along without any bridle, and stopped when he got to the bars that led to the pasture.

"Before I went to bed, I worked in all the material that I had gathered during the afternoon: and studied out the solution to the difficulties of your wife and your neighbor B———, and of the troubled daughter of widow M———, and I wove the answers of such doubts and difficulties into my sermon. The cheerful experiences of good Mrs. C——— in her sick chamber helped me mightily, for faith in action is worth several pounds of it in theory. I went to my pulpit last Sunday pretty sure that my sermon would help three or four persons there, and if it would fit their cases, I judged that it would fit thirty or forty more cases. For human nature is pretty much alike, and sometimes when I preach a discourse that comes home close to my own heart's wants, I take it for granted that it will come to plenty of other hearts in the congregation."

"Yes, parson," said the deacon, "your sermons cut a pretty broad swath. I often feel 'Thou art the man' when you hit some of my besettin' sins. I have often been wantin' to ask you why your sermon barrel has never giv' out, as poor Parson Scanty's barrel did before you came here. He always give us about the same sermon, and as I sit away back by the door, it got to be mighty thin by the time it got to my pew."

Parson Honeywell turned pleasantly to the deacon and said: "I will tell you what the famous old Dr. Bellamy once said to a young minister who asked him how he could always have material for his sermons. The shrewd old doctor said: 'Young man, fill up the cask, fill up the cask, and then if you tap it anywhere, you can get a full stream; but if you put in very little, it will dribble, dribble, dribble, and you may tap and tap and get precious little after all.' I always get my people to help me fill up my cask. Good afternoon, deacon."—Theodore L. Cuyler, in Lutheran Observer.

Two Ways of Getting up.

When we tumble out of the right side of the bed,
How bright the sun shines overhead;
How good our breakfast tastes—and, O!
How happily to school we go!
And o'er that day what peace is shed—
When we tumble out of the right side of the bed!

When we tumble out of the wrong side of the bed,
How dusky the sky frowns overhead!
How dull our lessons, how cross our mothers;
How perfectly horrid our sisters and brothers!
(And they all say, too, its our fault instead)
When we tumble out of the wrong side of the bed! —The Outlook.

Tools.

"We once hired a girl to help with the housework who always boasted of what she could do if only she had proper tools," remarked the grandmother thoughtfully. "She was a failure as a laundress, but she said it was because our wringer was old-fashioned and our starch not of the right kind. She constantly served us with poor bread, declaring it would be good if our range were different; and when the carpets were not well swept it was because no one could manage a sweeper like ours. She was sure she could work beautifully if she had everything to her liking, but if we did not furnish that we must not blame her for failure. We laughed at her folly, and sent her to seek a more congenial environment elsewhere.

"But sometimes I wonder if many of us are not servants of the same sort? We could live so much better lives if only our circumstances were different, we say. We are so hampered by our surroundings that we have no chance to be our best selves or do our best work. If only we had the opportunities that are given to others we would gladly improve them, but we fret and complain at being placed where we can do so little. What is all this but saying that God has made a mistake in the work he requires and in the tools he has given us?"—Forward.

Comparisons in Rhyme

As poor as a church mouse, as thin as a rail,
As fat as a porpoise, as rough as a gale,
As brave as a lion, as spry as a cat,
As bright as a sixpense, as weak as a rat.

As proud as peacock, as sly as a fox,
As mad as a March hare, as strong as an ox,
As fair as a lily, as empty as air,
As rich as was Crœsus, as cross as a bear.

As pure as an angel, as neat as a pin,
As smart as a steeltrap, as ugly sin,
As dead as a doornail, as white as a sheet,
As flat as a pancake, as red as a beet.

As round as an apple, as black as your hat,
As brown as a berry, as blind as a bat,
As mean as a miser, as full as a tick,
As plump as a partridge, as sharp as a stick.

As hard as a millstone, as bitter as gall,
As fine as a fiiddle, as clear as a bell,
As dry as a herring, as deep as a well.

As light as a feather, as hard as a rock,
As stiff as a poker, as calm as a clock,
As green as a gosling, as brisk as a bee,
And now let me stop, lest you weary of me.

The White Man's Burden.

[Perhaps Kipling, like others, spoke wiser than he knew when he wrote of "The White Man's Burden," as witness the following from Grapho in the Advance, Aug. 17th.—EDITOR.]

A liquor bill of $1,100,000,000 per year.

To stupefy, demoralize or kill boys and young men, 4,631,820,620 cigarettes annually.

To send a lot of other money up in smoke, 4,431,050,519 cigars.

The whole burden of tobacco, 297,089,312 pounds.

Saloons, more than 6,000 in Chicago, and other big cities in the same proportion.

Houses of prostitution, by blocks, acres and miles in the large cities.

Murders, in 1898, 7,840; in 1897, 9,520; in 1896, 10,652; in 1895, 10,500.

Total murders in four years—the length of a Presidential term—38,512.

Suicides for a year, 5,920.

Lynchings 122.

Convicts in prison, 62,244.

Successive polygamy through the divorce courts.

Taxes, federal taxes, state taxes, county taxes, township taxes, municipal taxes, special taxes.

More taxes.

Tax eaters in droves, and still they come and always hungry.

A brilliant five hundred million dollar Congress.

Political bosses.

The machine.

Ward heelers, henchmen and thugs.

Jury bribing.

Boodling in city councils.

"Grafting."

Peculiar influences in the election of United States senators.

Boodling in state legislatures.

Corporation lawyers turned into federal judges.

Trusts, combinations and syndicates.

More trusts.

Watered stock and big dividends.

Strikes, lockouts and boycotts.

Anarchy in high places.

Railroad rebates, secret rates, and other schemes for outwitting law and playing smash with honest business.

SOME OF HIS BURDENS ABROAD.

The national debt of France, $6,000,000,000; of England, $3,300,000,000; of Austria-Hungary, $3,000,000,000; of Russia, $2,875,000,000; of Italy, $2,530,000,000.

Total debt of all Europe—mostly incurred in the business of killing one another—$29,000,000,000.

Russia's army, 932,815 men—annual expense, $290,000,000.

France's army, 617,179 men—annual expense, $185,000,000.

Germany's army, 611,629 men—expense $158,000,000.

Great Britain's army, 220,000 men—expense for army and navy, $210,000,000.

Austria-Hungary's army, 367,271 men—expense, $100,000,000.

Total armies of all Europe, 3,750,102 men—annual expense. $1,153,000,000.

The liquor bill of Europe is out of sight.

OTHER BURDENS.

Emperors who think they are the state.

Czars who are the whole thing.

Infallible popes.

Infallible critics.

Heirs-apparent who play the races.

Other princes who play all the year round at the expense of the people.

Pretenders, claimants of thrones which their ancestors disgraced and lost, and other back numbers waiting for something to turn up.

Nobles, poverty-stricken and penniless, watching for American multi-millionaire-heiresses.

Among the lesser burdens of the white man may be mentioned:

The spring poet.

The writer of erotic novels.

Yellow journalism.

The professional agitator.

The man who is always setting a day for the world to wind up.

The inventor of religious isms.

The religious teacher who subscribes to a creed one day and repudiates it the next.

Too much German theology.

Bacilli, bacteria and germs, everywhere and on all occasions.

In extending these burdens to the brown man the white man should see the reaconableness of a gradual introduction.

The Kissing Bug.

Professor Otto Lugger, entomologist of of the State Agricultural School, says that the "kissing bug," which is having a little reign of terror of its own these days, is not a new discovery, as some people imagine. Its popular name, he says, is simply another appellation for an insect that has been known to scientists for more than half a century.

The professor volunteered this explanation in order to satisfy the hundreds of people in this section who are daily flooding his office with queries for information, and are sending him all sorts of specimens of bugs under the impression that they belong to the only original kissing bug family. He explains that it is a member of the true bug family, and is distinguished from its cousins by having a sucking mouth instead of a biting mouth. A number of knife-like bristles in the mouth are used to penetrate the skin, whereupon a drop of poison is injected. This produces inflammation, and when the blood rushes to the surface the bug drinks his fill.

The bedbug, Professor Lugger says, is the natural prey of the kissing bug, and when the latter enters a house it does so to wage war on the other insect. Incidentally, it does not hesitate to tackle the people of the house. The kissing bug is six times as large as the bedbug and of a pitchy black color, from whence it derives its name of melanolestes picipes. The Southern species, the conenose, are much more venomous than the Northern bug. The victim of its bite will be lame for a week and sensitive people can be killed outright by it.—Minneapolis Times.

Mother's Life.

The life of a hard-working mother was described recently by a bright boy when a reporter entered into conversation. He said: "My mother gets me up, makes the fire and sends me off. Then she gets my father up, gets the other children their breakfast and sends them to school; and then she and the baby have their breakfast."

"How old is the baby?" asked the reporter.

"Oh, she is most two, but she can talk and walk as well as any of us."

"Are you well paid?"

"I get $4 a week, and my father gets $3.50 a day."

"How much does your mother get?"

With a bewildered look, the boy said:

"Mother? Why she don't work for anybody."

"I thought you said she worked for all of you?"

"Oh, yes! for us she does, but there isn't any money in it."

As the boy grows older he will find that very many of the world's best workers toil without any prospect of making money by their labors, and very often they do not win the gratitude of those who benefit by their exertions.—Union Gospel News.

Carleton and His Dog.

Henry Guy Carleton, the eminent playwriter, stammers badly, but this does not prevent him from holding his own in any controversy. When he was living near Madison Square, New York, he used to pass daily the New York Club, of whrch he is a member. One day one of the young and frivolous members said to him:

"I saw you this morning, Carleton, carrying your poodle through the Square. Good exercise, isn't it? But I'd rather let somebody else do it for me."

"Und—doubtedly," replied Carleton grimly, even if haltingly. "When any one sees m—me carrying m—my d—d—dog, they cry, 'There g—g—goes Henry G—Guy Carleton with his d—dog.' But if they should see y—you they'd ask, 'W—w—who's that in—infernal i—diot c—c—carrying a p—p—poodle?"

Sometimes Carleton stammers worse than other times, and his hearers try to supply the word that sticks, but it is always resented. When he was editor of Life he began to tell Mr. Mitchell a story. He got as far as this:

"Ond d—d—day while I was w—w—w—w—alk—k——"

"Walking," interposed Mr. Mitchell, helpfully.

"One d—d—day," began Mr. Carleton anew, "while I was p—p—promen—n—n—nad—d——ding," which was even harder to pronounce.

Mr. Mitchell never repeated the experiment.—Saturday Evening Post.

Airships.

[While we have never been as sanguine on the nearness of the age of airships as some who have spoken on the subject, we have nevertheless watched developments in this direction with great interest, and think the following article from the Catholic News about the most feasible theory we have yet seen on the problem of aerial navigation.—EDITOR.]

"The latest and most extraordinary project in the world of invention is a giant airship which, it is claimed, will fly the skies at the rate of 100 miles an hour. This marvelous ship is to be built in New York, where prominent capalists are backing the scheme. The inventor, Dr. A. de Baussett, says that this aerial flyer will easily make 100 miles an hour, and it will be possible to go from New York to London and Paris in thirty hours. The construction of four great airships will be begun as soon as possible. They will measure 774 feet over all, larger than any of the swift leviathans that struggle with the deep sea and are considered fleet when they do twenty-two miles an hour. And aboard the airships there will be every comfort, even to elevators and telephones. There will be barbershops, smoking rooms, cigar stores, buffets and card rooms for the men; luxurious parlors, boudoirs, hairdressers' rooms, women's rooms and the like for the women, not forgetting a music room.

"The grand parlor in each of the ships will be 320 feet long, and all of the passengers could easily dance in it without the least discomfort and have room to give away. The service will be like that of any first-class hotel and every one will be happy, even though they are "off the earth." Several other lines of transportation and stations will be erected in the principal cities of Europe, Asia and Africa. The future may see the skies alive with gigantic birds of pleasure and commerce.

"The de Bausset system in aeronautics is an entirely new departure in mechanics, to construct with steel of the greatest tensile strength a vessel strong and light enough for resisting the enormous pressure of the atmosphere when exhausted of the air within, for overcoming gravitation; the lifting power or ascensional force thus obtained is by a vacuum secured within a cylinder of great capacity instead of inflation by hydrogen gas.

"Several tests under deadweight and also under hydraulic pressure upon plates of steel of same thickness as the ones to be used in the construction of the cylinder vacuum or lift, but with the special bracing under the plates, to ascertain their resistance under atmospheric pressure, were made with the greatest success, giving always a coefficient of safety of 30-100 of resistance to collapsing over the stress to be assumed. It is a known fact that the force of gravity becomes less as the distance from the earth becomes greater, and reaching an altitude of four and a half miles where the aeroplane is called to navigate, the force of gravity is lessened, the earth does not exert the same power to carry an object with it as it does nearer its surface. Thence in navigating in a westerly direction the rotation of the earth towards the east is partially overcome.

"The method of rising from the earth thus obtained, the means of propulsion is to be considered; this is obtained by 32 turbines of 42 inches diameter located under and adherent to the cylinder—vacuum acting under atmospheric pressure, while eight helical propellers, located at the front and rear of the car, rigidly fastened under the cylinder and pivoted upon an axis at an angle required, will act as rudders for steering the aeroplane in any required direction.

Liquefied air and carbonic gas engines are to be used as prime power amounting to 300 horsepower to urge dynamos for the transmission of electric motors placed in the same shaft at the turbines, and helical propeller rudder, to impart an average velocity of 100 miles per hour, thus facing all the static resistances at the front of the aeroplane to its forward motion."

Stand By the Minister.

It happened once that a leading member of a congregation considered it his duty to remonstrate with his minister, to whom he was deeply attached, because the minister's preaching had grown hard and unspiritual. They were personal friends, and the conversation was conducted with perfect taste and temper; but the minister did feel a little sore afterward, which was rather foolish, and he constantly worried himself with the idea that his friends and his congregation were turning against him. A few days afterward a brother minister called upon him, and, as they talked of one thing and another, his visitor congratulated him on the attachment of his people. "Why, last night at a dinner-table old Doctor Sardine was carping at your preaching—calling you a rationalist, and so forth—when Mr. Cochran spoke out at once and told the old gentleman that he did not know what he was talking about. 'I go to his church,' said your man, 'and I know that I can never repay my minister all that he has done for me and mine.' It was straight talk, and produced an immense impression, and one minister envied you such a friend."

While his friend had told him his faults boldly, man to man, and he had taken peivate offence, like a foolish child, that friend had been guarding his reputation with generous enthusiasm.—John Watson.

How One Man Helped a Boy.

The following story is told of a Philadelphia millionaire who has been dead some years: A young man came to his home one day and asked for a loan of money to aid him in starting in business.

"Do you drink?" asked the millionaire.

"Once in awhile."

"Stop it! Stop it for a year and then come and see me." The young man broke off the habit at once, and at the end of the year came to see the millionaire again.

"Do you smoke?" asked the successful man.

"Now and then."

"Stop it! Stop it for a year and then come and see me again."

The young man went home and broke away from the habit. It took him some time, but he finally worried through the year, and presented himself again.

"Do you chew?" asked the philanthropist.

"Yes, I do," was the desperate reply.

"Stop it! Stop it for a year, and then come and see me again."

The young man stopped chewing, but he never came back again. When asked by his anxious friends why he never called on the millionaire again he replied that he knew exactly what the man was driving at. "He'd have told me that now that I had stopped drinking and smoking and chewing I must have enough to start myself in business. And I have."—Ex.

THE SON OF GIDEON.

IN SIX CHAPTERS.—IV.

Jotham reached the well in safety and drew a bucket of water, which he began to pour into the bottle. While he was doing so, he heard footsteps. He felt a thrill of alarm. Three men approached in the gloom of the night. One of them spoke to Jotham: "Peace be with you! We also would draw water. This is a thirsty time, when all the world has been to Shechem."

"What is doing at Shechem?" the boy ventured to ask, finding he had not been recognized.

"Are you a stranger? This was a great day in that city. For a thing has happened that was never known of before. The Jews have made them a king, just as the other nations have kings. But he is only king of Shechem, a single city. However, he will no doubt capture other cities. Abimelech is his name. He was anointed in the Plain of the Pillar, just before Shechem. And we all cried, 'Long live the king! Long live the son of Gideon!'"

"Had not Gideon other sons?" said Jotham.

"Where be they now?" returned the men, laughing. "Come, stranger, join us in crying, 'Long live King Abimelech!'"

"Death to King Abimelech!" cried Jotham. "As he became king by the shedding of blood, even so may he cease to reign!" And he sped away with his leathern bottle. He heard an arrow whiz by his head, and then another, but he sped on till the darkness shielded him. At the mouth of the cave he found Esther waiting. She drank eagerly and thanked him for his trouble.

"Do not go in yet," said Jotham, standing in the bushes. "I have something to tell you."

"Has anything happened? How strange your voice sounds! O, Jotham, have you got into trouble on my account?"

"On whose account could it better be? But no. I heard at the well—some strangers told me—that Abimelech has been made king in Shechem. When I heard that, the blood boiled in my veins. I can never forget that night when he stood with his bloody sword . . . and now to think of his being crowned, of his wearing royal robes, and ruling over a great city—he the murderer, the unnatural brother! And, Esther, I am going to Shechem—I shall appeal to the citizens, rouse them to a sense of their cruel injustice to my father. For Gideon, my father, saved all their lives when the enemy would have burnt Shechem. And yet they turn to this wicked man! I go to Shechem at once. It is my duty."

Esther clasped her hands. "Do not go, Jotham!"

"Esther, would you ask me to be untrue to the memory of my father—of my murdered brothers?"

"At least wake my father and get his advice."

"Esther, what matters the advice of the dearest and wisest friend when God speaks in the heart, saying, 'Go?' Do not wake him, for he would only seek to dissuade me, and it would make him unhappy. Farewell, dear friend, sister of Caleb! If I never return I pray you think often of me—when to think will not make you sad. And as for you, I shall always remember you as you stood this night, the torch in your hand, the bright red in your cheeks, while shadows flitted along the sides of the cave as the light flared. It is a beautiful memory to carry with me. I hope to return to this cave to-morrow night. But who knows? So farewell, and may God be with Tola and Caleb and with you, Esther." He pressed her hand, then turned before she could reply and vanished in the night.

Early the next morning the inhabitants of Shechem were startled by the news, "Jotham stands upon the flat rock of Mount Gerizim!" The people poured out of the houses and ran to the edge of the town. The flat rock was directly over their heads, but upon the summit of a sheer precipice. There was only one way for them to get to him—to go up by a very roundabout trail. He was out of bow shot. Therefore they stood in silent amazement, staring at this boy upon whose head a price had been set—the very price for which Joseph had been sold into Egypt.

"Listen to me, you men of Shechem, that God may listen to you!" came the clear, boyish voice, as Jotham's eyes burned with lofty courage. "Once there was a time when the trees decided to make a king over them. They said to the olive tree, 'Reign over us.' 'I will not leave my own position, where I make olive oil for the world, to be your king,' the tree answered. Then they said to the fig tree, 'Come, thou, and be our king.' But the fig tree said, 'Shall I cease bearing my good fruit simply to be your king?' They asked the vine, but neither would it leave its station, in which God had placed it for useful purposes, to have simply the honor of royalty. But when they asked the bramble, the bramble said, 'If in truth you wish to make me king, come and put your trust in my shadow! I will reign over you. But if you do not obey me, then out of me shall come fire to destroy you!'

"Now, O men of Shechem, if you have acted sincerely and truly in making Abimelech king, if in making him king you have dealt well with the sons of Gideon, then rejoice in Abimelech and let him rejoice in you! But did not my father fight for you? Yes, he adventured his life far and saved you out of the hand of your powerful enemies. Yet you have risen up against his house this day, and have slain his sons upon one altar, and have chosen Abimelech king because his mother was a woman of Shechem! If this that you have done is wicked, then may the king you have chosen be an evil to you! May fire come from him and destroy you, and may fire come from you and devour Abimelech! For you have chosen the bramble to be ruler over you, and in the shadow of a bramble do you trust!"

"No more!" shouted the fierce voice of Abimelech, as he rode among the throng upon his royal mule, a crown of gold upon his head. "Where is Zebul, whom I have just made Governor of Shechem?"

"Here am I, O king."

"Hasten with soldiers around the mountain pass and take this boy and cast him from the flat rock to his destruction!"

"And why, O Abimelech?" exclaimed Gaal, who was in the crowd. "You are king now. Is not that enough? Can you not let this poor butterfly escape? See, no one heeds his words—rest you content!"

"Who are you," thundered the king, "to speak to your monarch? Silence, or you die!"

"Who am I? You shall hear of me, fear not, before your reign is over! I am Gaal. Did you get the name? Gaal! Gaal! and your destroyer!"

"Where are my soldiers?" screamed Abimelech, purple from fury. "Seize that wretch and tear him limb from limb. Nay, let him be burnt alive! Where is my bodyguard?"

"May it please you, O king," said some one near him, "they have gone to capture Jotham." In the meantime, Gaal did not linger to learn what Abimelech would do. He was surrounded by his friends, and with their aid he contrived to escape from the city.

Great was Caleb's surprise and sorrow when he woke up and found that Jotham had left the cave. He waited for the next night with great impatience, but the son of Gideon did not come. A week passed, and the fate of the brave boy was still a mystery. Since they dared hold communication with no one, they could only hope for news from the arrival of Jotham. Tola came to the conclusion that he had fallen a victim to the ambition of his half brother, the new king of Shechem.

But there were other thoughts to engage the attention of the cave-dwellers. On the night after Jotham's departure Caleb, while standing in the bushes before the cave, was startled by a vague, irregular shape which suddenly loomed up before him. It was Tola's camel, which had been turned loose. After that it came every night, and patrolled back and forth before the opening. "I know not what to do," said Tola, in great perplexity. "The coming of the beast will draw attention to the place. If he should come in the daylight we would be undone!"

The next day the camel came, browsing on the thorny bushes before the opening and winking a friendly eye at Caleb. "If no one sees him," said Tola, "I must ride him away to-night, to some lonely place, and kill him, else he will betray us!" That day was spent in ceaseless anxiety, but no one from the city appeared to notice the camel. When night came, Tola rode away upon his faithful beast. "Go not for water while I am gone," he said on leaving, "and to ond light the torch."

The children waited for his coming, whispering in the darkness about Jotham's disappearance. At last they heard the stones drawn away from the opening of the cave. Then Esther lit the torch and ran toward the opening. A wild, sinister face looked in, before whose red eyes hung shaggy hair. The girl started back with a scream. The man disappeared. Caleb ran for his steel bow and, fitting an arrow to the notch, bade his sister blow out the light. They sat, every nerve strained, facing the opening, knowing not how many men were hid without. The sound of a voice sent their hearts to bounding.

"Who opened the cave?" It was Tola, who had returned. "I could not kill the camel," he added. "I had not the heart. I left him far from here. But I told you not to move these stones."

Then they told him what had happened. "We must leave the cave!" said Tola, quickly. "How fortunate it is that I did not slay the camel, for now we must escape upon his back! Our duty here is ended. Since Jotham is dead, we have no more need to lie hidden. For in some distant town of Israel we will live, where Abimelech's name is unknown. Again I say, how fortunate that when I went to kill our camel my arm failed! Surely, the compassion we show to others, even if it be to dumb beasts, is in some degree a measure of that compassion which God will show to us!"

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

THE PROPHET HAGGAI.*

It was more than fifteen years after the edict of Cyrus had been proclaimed and the earliest attempts at return had been made under Sheshbazzar, that the prophets Haggai and Zechariah undertook to promote the building of the temple, whose foundations had been begun in the second year after the arrival of the first caravan (Ezra 3). During all that time nothing had been done toward the completion of the undertaking. An altar had been erected, probably on the site of the old altar of burnt offerings, and a form of worship had been going forward, but the people were disinclined to take up the task of building the temple, both because they were poor and because there were troubles for the community arising from the antagonism of the people who inhabited the surrounding territory and whose overtures to assist in the erection of the temple had been declined. Zerubbabel, the successor of Sheshbazzar, seems to have been a man of weak character, as is shown by the fact that he never appears as the leader of any enterprise, but is rather the object of the constant exhortations of the prophets. The prospect was sufficiently disheartening when Haggai and Zechariah began their work. The community was small and furnished only with limited means of livelihood, and there was no inclination to undertake the ambitious project of the building of a house that could compare in any sense with the splendid edifice reared by Solomon to the worship of Jehovah.

At last, however, Haggai, in the year 520 B. C., in the month of September, undertook to stir up the people to a sense of their responsibility to God. They were commonly saying that the time had not yet come to build the temple (Haggai 1:2), but, on the other hand, they were living in frame houses and seeking their comfort in such ways as the limited means at their disposal permitted. The prophet nndertook to show them that their complaints arose from causes that it lay in their power to remedy. They had been troubled recently by drought and famine (1:6, 10, 11). They were complaining about this disaster to the little state. The prophet assured them that it was because of their failure to fulfill the wishes of God by rebuilding his house that they had thus suffered, and he exhorted them to go up to the mountain and to bring timber that the house might be finished (1:8). The effect of this sermon, which perhaps represented a number of efforts on the part of the prophet, was immediate. The leaders of the people, Zerubbabel and Joshua, thus urged by the prophet, undertook the work to which he had summoned them. The people here alluded to, it will be noticed, are spoken of as the "remnant;" that is, those who were left in the land at the time of the deportation. There is no allusion made to those who had returned, and it is probable, as has been previously remarked, that they were an inconsiderable element in the community. In consequence of the preaching of Haggai a beginning was made in the building operations some twenty-five days later in the same month.

In October of the same year the prophet appeared with a new message, which seemed to be called forth by a partial abandonment of the enterprise, resulting perhaps from the discouragement or weariness on the part of the builders. There were those in the community who were reporting that, having seen the old temple in the days before it was destroyed, they were vastly disappointed at the meagreness of the new structure which was rising; it had no comparison with the old. Such words whispered about by the older men produced a feeling of indifference and discouragement on the part of the community at large. The prophet, therefore, rose to meet the emergency with a new message. Jehovah had covenanted with the people when they came out of Egypt that he would be with them and would bring them safely on their national day. That covenant still held good. They might expect the aid of Jehovah if they fulfilled his wishes in the matter of the temple. Moreover, all the signs of the times pointed to great political changes in the empire. It was the moment when the throne left by Cyrus to Cyaxares, his son, and later occupied by the usurper Gomates (Gaumata) had just been occupied by Darius, who was elected by the princes to the kingship. This election was the signal for revolts in many provinces and a state so feeble as Judah might well believe that where universal peace promised only continuance of the meagre and unpromising conditions which had prevailed during the last fifteen years, a general upheaval of the empire would bring somehow a measure of prosperity to the little state. The prophet, therefore, predicts such convulsions in the empire as will bring the riches of the nations into Jerusalem (2:6, 7). The world belongs to God and he will see that his temple is to be richer and more glorious than the former, impossible as this might seem to those who looked at its slowly rising walls. This, then, constituted the great work of Haggai, and, as we shall see in the following lesson, of his contemporary, Zechariah.

A still later message was delivered by the prophet in December of the same year (2:10) relating to the character of the people as unclean and needing reformation in order to prosper, and concluding with another promise that the existing political conditions should be radically modified for the benefit of Judah.

It will be seen from this study that the work of the prophets was absolutely essential to the reconstruction of the slowly reviving community. Leadership was not to be found in the prince or the priest, but in the prophet. When other men sank under the weight of discouragement or selfishly neglected their duties to the community, the prophets of the Lord, with the single aim of fulfilling his will, arose in the face of seemingly insurmountable obstacles and prosecuted with vigor the task of religious improvement. The life of Israel was so intimately bound up with the work of the prophets that no explanation other than that which lies in their work can possibly be given for that unique series of spiritual disclosures which came with their life. Israel's history was different from that of other peoples of the Orient because of the divine element which was revealed through them, and of that element the prophets were, in the largest measure, the channels.

And what the prophets were to Israel, the preachers and religious teachers must be to the community in every generation. It is their duty to turn the attention of the people from the mere passing things of life to those that abide, from selfish and individual interests to those of the community and of the world. The task of temple building is not one which exhausted itself in the days of the revival of Judah. That holy temple in the Lord which every man may be is to be constructed under the guidance of religion in this and every other generation. A nobler task is committed to the preacher and to the Sunday-school teacher than even that which fell to Haggai in ancient Judah. Every teacher and preacher may become the bearer of a message from God to those whom they instruct and thus aid in the erection of that spiritual and eternal temple, not only of the individual life, but of the universal church, which is the greatest need of the world to-day.

Christian Endeavor

By Burris A. Jenkins.

TOPIC FOR SEPT. 10.

AN EARLY CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORER.

(2 Tim. 3:10-17.)

[A Union Meeting with the Juniors.]

Timothy was a little boy, half Greek and half Jew, who was born and reared in Asia Minor, a little section about as big as one of our counties. The exact town in which he lived isn't surley known, but it was either Derbe or Lystra. It is known, however, that he was carefully trained in all the religious life of the Jewish people. His mother, probably widowed when the lad was quite young, together with his grandmother, Lois, had trained him carefully in the Jewish Scriptures, in the Greek translation, and had imparted to him considerable religious culture and feeling.

In his early manhood he became a follower of Paul, and made with that great apostle-missionary the famous journey into Europe called the second missionary journey, when the church at Thessalonica was founded. It was fitting that this young Gentile should have aided in the founding of the first distinctively Gentile church in the world. One can almost see him now, in imagination, slender, medium in height, with olive skin, and clustering brown hair, a trifle too frail in appearance for so ardent a spirit as his body contained. Yet sometimes an ardent soul can bear up a fainting body; and certainly the work which this young man did showed him an Endevorer in body and in spirit. It is said that he became, at a very early age, bishop of the great church at Ephesus. However this may be he certainly rose to prominence in the early church.

Such was one of the earliest Endeavorers. He kept the pledge as faithfully, no doubt, as any nineteenth century Endeavorer. He was a Junior, first of all; and from a child knew the Scriptures. He evidently read the Jewish books regularly, and was patient, steadfast, long-suffering, and followed Paul's teachings. This implies, does it not, that he was prayerful, active, liberal—all that our pledge demands of us to-day.

There have been good men in every age of the world. Even in heathen nations, here and there, a pure lily rises from the swamp of miasma. How much more is it likely that gentle souls, in the one true religion of the one true God, must have flourished and poured their perfume out upon the ancient air. Samuel, David, Solomon, Amos, and down centuries to the boy Jesus, how many Junior Endeavorers there were before ever the word, Junior Endeavorer was known!

"What's the Hurry?"

"So near, and yet so far." Here I am, at your great Union Station with not quite enough time before my outgoing train to call on you, and yet enough time to intensify my desire to do so. "What's the hurry?" Why, two young people in the western part of this state have sent for me to tie a "nuptial knot," and I must not fail to be on time. On the evening of the 23rd inst., in the Christian Church at Lee's Summit I am to unite in marriage Miss Winifred Flanagan, of that place, and Dr. O. O. Young, of Greenwood. The groom is a young physician and the bride-elect is a niece of Bro. and Sister Francis Flanagan, so well known in church circles. She is also a former pupil of the writer, which explains the long call. It would be a great pleasure to extend my visit in Missouri, but as I recently passed a month in her borders I must hasten back to my Kentucky home. Hope to see you and whole regiments of Missouri people in Cincinnati, O., at the Jubilee Convention.

"All aboard!" Good-by.

Frank W. Allen.

Literature.

Lend a Hand. By Charles M. Sheldon. Fleming H. Revell, Chicago, New York, publishers.

This short but cleverly written story by this famous author is intended to show how even a private library may be made to do good service in its surrounding community.

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Liee. By Hannah Whitall Smith. New and enlarged edition. Fleming H. Revell, Chicago, New York and Toronto.

This is an old book, newly revised and enlarged. It has recently also come into new demand because Christian experience and aspiration have come up to the level of its teaching. The book will have a perennial interest among all those who are hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and after a higher or a truer Christian life. The Christian Endeavor movement, pledging young disciples to strive "to do whatever Christ would like to have them do," and such books as that of Mr. Sheldon's, "In His Steps; or, What Would Jesus Do?" have done much to exalt the ideal of Christian life and to create a desire for a fuller measure of the life of God realized in the human soul. It is not strange that a book like this should be in demand among this class of Christians.

The book is divided into three parts. Part I deals with The Life, as to what it is and how to enter into it. Part II deals with The Difficulties, in the way of realizing it, such as difficulties concerning consecration, faith, the will, guidance, doubts, temptations, failures and the presence of God in everything. Part III deals with results, such as liberty, growth, service, practical results in daily life, the joy of obedience, divine union, the chariots of God, the life on wings.

In reading this volume one feels that he is following, not a novice, not a mere doctrinaire, not one who is dealing in second-hand theories or abstract ideas, but one who has herself grappled with and conquered these difficulties in her own religious experience, and out of that experience has gained wisdom by which she would help others forward in the divine life. We do not doubt but that thousands of troubled, anxious souls would find rest and peace and a much higher degree of joy in Christian living by a careful reading of this little book, and to all such, and to all desiring to make progress in the Christian life, we most heartily commend it.

Heroes of the Mission Field.

The Bethany C. E. Reading Courses will issue very soon a book under the above title by W. J. Lhamon. The work is now ready for the printer. These reading courses are doing much to enlarge and enrich our literature. The scope and value of this new work by Bro. Lhamon will be best seen by a glance at its chapter headings:

I. The Meaning of Christian Missions.
II. The Magnitude of Missions.
III. Count Zinzendorf and the Moravians.
IV. David Brainard: Missionary to American Indians.
V. Hans Egede: Pioneer Missionary to Greenland.
VI. William Carey: Father and Founder of Modern Missions.
VII. Henry Martyn: Meteor-like Missionary to India and Persia.
VIII. Adoniram Judson: Pioneer Missionary to Burmah.
IX. Robert Morrison: Pioneer Missionary of China.
X. Robert Moffat: Missionary at Kuruman.
XI. David Livingstone: Greatest of Missionary Explorers.
XII. Mackay of Uganda.
XIII. Samuel Marsden: Pioneer Missionary to New Zealand.
XIV. John Williams: Missionary Martyr of Polynesia.
XV. Bishop Patterson: Martyr Missionary of Melanesia.
XVI. John Geddie: Missionary Among Cannibals.
XVII. John Hunt: Herald of Mercy to Merciless Fijis.
XVIII. Titus Coan: Foremost Missionary to Hawaiian Islands.
XIX. Heroic Women.

Those who have read Bro. Lhamon's work on the Acts of the Apostles will be prepared to expect a valuable work from the foregoing outline. It should be remembered that these books are not intended simply for those enlisted in the reading courses, but for the whole brotherhood and any others that may desire first-class literature.

MAGAZINES.

The Brotherhood Star, a monthly magazine of 32 pages, published at Lebanon, Pa., and New York, the official organ of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, is an interesting journal. The original and selected articles are highly spiritual in their tone and well calculated to allay religious animosities and increase peace. The magazine is well illustrated and sufficiently departmentized to make it a popular religious journal, and the editorial staff, headed by Rev. C. E. Wycoff, is sufficiently strong to give it standing and recognition in the world of letters and religion. The publisher of the Brotherhood Star is the Rev. J. Garland, Lebanon, Pa.

IF you look at a dozen common lamp-chimneys, and then at Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass," you will see the differences—all but one—they break from heat; Macbeth's don't; you can't see that.

Common glass is misty, milky, dusty; you can't see through it; Macbeth's is clear.

Tough, clear glass is worth fine work; and a perfect chimney of fine tough glass is worth a hundred such as you hear pop, clash on the least provocation.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

Yellow All Over. Mr. Frank Barknecht, Werner, Wis., writes: "My son, aged five years, had the jaundice so bad that he was yellow all over. He was so far gone that I thought he could not live. A few bottles of Blood Vitalizer cured him completely. I wish everybody knew about this remedy." It is an awful thing when the bile gets into the blood. Dr. Peter's Vitalizer is the proper remedy. Not a drug store medicine. Special agents supply it. Address Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 So. Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

EARL.

Mrs. Annie Jane Earl, beloved wife of H. S. Earl, of Irvington, Ind., departed this life at their summer home at Macatawa Park, Mich., Aug. 9. Sister Earl was born in Adelaide, South Australia, May 2, 1851, her maiden name being McGary. She became the wife of Bro. H. S. Earl May 16, 1867, Bro. Earl having gone to that country as an evangelist in 1864. In 1874 they came to the United States, and after spending a year in this country they went to England, Bro. Earl being our first missionary there. It was in their home at Southampton, England, while Bro. Earl was pastor of the church in that city, that the writer first met Sister Earl. Being a number of days a guest in their home he had opportunity of learning her quiet, gentle, Christian character. In 1891 they returned to the United States, Bro. Earl himself being in broken health. After about two years, spent in Nashville, Tenn., the family located in Irvington, Ind., in 1893.

Immediately after Bro. Earl's return to this country he became interested in Macatawa Park, having read of it in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST while he was yet in England. His health was greatly improved here, and at one time he was largely interested, financially, in the place. He established him a beautiful summer home here on the crest of one of the tallest timbered ridges, commanding a fine view of both Lake Michigan and Black Lake. To this home the family came, early in last June, expecting, as heretofore, to spend a joyful, happy summer in these beautiful surroundings. But alas! who knows what shadows may soon shut out the light of the sun and darken our homes? Soon after arriving here their youngest child, Percy, aged fifteen, was taken down with typhoid fever from exposure and overwork in the hot sun before leaving their home in Irvington. Sister Earl watched faithfully by his bedside with her husband until she, herself, in her loving devotion to him, was stricken with the same disease. A little later the son passed away, but the mother was in such critical condition that it was deemed wise to keep this fact from her knowledge until she should be better able to bear it. She bore her sickness with the greatest patience, and the the physicians had hoped she would recover until the very last day. The fever had left her, but she was too weak to endure the struggle, and bidding her family one by one good-bye, she soon afterward fell asleep gently as a child falls into the embrace of slumber. The sons and daughter had been summoned by telegraph, save the son in England, and, in the presence of those she loved best, on the beautiful heights of "Earl Villa," with the great lake stretching away in the deepening twilight, and her face cooled by its breezes, her gentle spirit passed from earthly scenes into a far more glorious vision of celestial beauty in the presence of the Lord. After brief funeral services at the Auditorium, near which their home stood, in which a large number of friends expressed their sympathy by their presence, the body was taken back by the sorrowing husband to their home in Irvington for interment.

Sister Earl, as much as any woman we have ever known, filled the measure of that scriptural ideal: "A meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." She was a loving mother, and literally laid down her life on the altar of devotion to her son whose fatal sickness preceded hers. Beneath this quiet exterior and gentleness of spirit, and the source of it, was a serene faith that laid hold of spiritual realities and enabled her to "endure as seeing Him who is invisible." Her Christian character will be a rich legacy to be cherished by her children and her husband. Theirs the loss, hers the eternal gain. J. H. G.

MOWRY.

The members of the Christian Church of Collins, Ia., were greatly grieved to learn that Mrs. Mowry, wife of their pastor, had died Saturday at her home in Maxwell. Funeral was held yesterday morning in the church at Maxwell. O. H King, of Colfax, preached the sermon. The Maxwell Tribune gives the following biographical notes:

"Mrs. Justina Peterson Mowry, youngest daughter of J. D. and Elizabeth Peterson, was born May 26, 1857, in Scott county, Ia., and died July 22, 1899, aged 42 years, one month 26 days. Her home circle being broken by the mother's death, at 16 she began self-support by teaching, using funds as fast as gathered in her higher education till in 1884 she graduated with her husband from Hillsdale College, Michigan. In 1881 she married J. R. Mowry. To them have been born five children, three boys and two girls, one of the latter having preceded her to the better land.

"In connection with her home duties, while her husband was under the employment of different state boards in evangelistic work and college agency, she resumed study in the theological department, and, after four years, graduated therefrom. For five years she was county president of the Woman's Temperance Union of the banner county of Michigan, holding conventions and Demorest contests as strength and circumstances permitted. Attendance upon county, state and national conventions ennobled her life by personal acquaintance with the Frances Willards, Mary Hunts and Helen Gougars of the order.

"She was converted at 17 and united with the Free Baptist Church at Wilton, Muscatine county, Ia. Sharing changed convictions with her husband in favor of the Church of Christ she followed the same, though it meant the severance of sacred associations, collegiate and ecclesiastical. Though not ordained to the Christian ministry, feeling commissioned of heaven to break the bread of life, she preferred as a lay worker to act as embassador of Christ, filling the pulpit and conducting services as calls and circumstances permitted. As to her domestic fidelity, companiable qualities and Christian character, those who knew her best and loved her most bear universal witness in her behalf. It being her request that advice to the living and not praise of the dead occupy the funeral hour, we let the curtain fall with the foregoing biographical sketch, closing this obituary with one of the thoughts of her dying advice to her husband, viz., 'John, put as little as need be into the ground, but all into the gospel possible.'"

SLADE.

Again has the Danville Church been called upon to give up one of her elders in the death of Bro. Geo. P. Slade. He was born in Bordentown, N. J., June 3, 1833. In September, 1861, he was married to Alethea M. Kerr. At the time of his marriage he had enlisted in Co. A, 44th Ohio, and did faithful service for his country. After returning from the war he began preaching and teaching. He was first licensed to preach in the old Christian church at Troy, Ohio, but in 1864 he was ordained to the ministry of the Church of Christ at Centralia, Ill., by Evangelists John Boggs, and Silas Leonard, and Simpson Frazier. He at once took charge of the church at Centralia. After this he preached in West Virginia, and built at New Cumberland a church still known as "Slade's Church." From there he went to Canton, Ohio, and became pastor of the churches at Canton and Massilon. He next became pastor of Hazelwood Church, Pittsburg. While there he organized the church at McKeesport and preached for it Lord's day afternoons. From Pittsburg he went to Braddock, Penn., but still continued his mission at McKeesport. He found the church at Braddock in a bad condition, but left it healthy and prosperous. In six years he built the McKeesport church up from a membership of two into a strong church with a good house. He gave them his services until they were able to pay a minister. From Braddock he went to Ft. Wayne, Ind., where he was for two years. From there to Wellsville, N. Y., where he spent two of the most delightful years of his life. His next pastorate was at Carthage, Mo., where they were encouraged and strengthened by a group of "noble women." At Carthage he remained four years, and to that noble church the hearts of his faithful wife and himself often turned during all the years that "lie between then and now." After a few months spent in evangelistic work they settled in Danville, where the faithful preacher and manly husband laid himself down to rest. He died July 28, 1899, and was burried from the church the following Sunday at 4:30 P. M. In the death of Bro. Slade humanity has lost a friend, the truth a strong defender and the church a faithful servant and noble example. His life before the people was a mighty sermon, and the home of Bro. and Sister Slade gave one a taste of heaven. I was his pastor for nearly five years, and he was a sympathetic, kind and encouraging helper. Every day he prayed for the church and his pastor, and I believe he will speak for us all in his new home.

AUNT MARIAH'S SATURDAY TALK SERIES.

These books, complete in six volumes, were prepared by Mrs. Craig, the authoress, with a view of reaching the young of the present time. She tells these true stories of prominent men and women in such an interesting way that the young mind will grasp the facts stated and retain them in their minds all through life. Each volume is beautifully bound in cloth, containing from 75 to 100 pages, and the price is 50c. per volume, postage paid, or $2.50 for the full set of six volumes. The titles are "Little Presidents," "Little Kings," "Little Queens," "Little Statesmen," "Little Generals" and "Little Orators."

Those church members who desire to learn of the lives of the men who were foremost in the Current Reformation should read the "Life of Alexander Campbell" and "Men if Yesterday," two books of recent publication, both from the pen of T. W. Grafton. The first-mentioned is a concise history of the life of Alexander Campbell, and "Men of Yesterday" contains short biographical sketches of Barton W. Stone, John Smith, Isaac Errett, Walter Scott, B. W. Johnson and O. A. Burgess.

The price of either is $1.00, postage paid.

THE SCIENCE AND PEDAGOGY OF ETHICS

Is the title of Prof. H. W. Everest's late book, just from the press of the Christian Publishing Co. The author says in the beginning of his preface: "This volume is the result of lifelong devotion to the study and teaching of moral science and religion."

The subject is treated under the following heads: Theoretical Ethics, Practical Ethics and Pedagogical Ethics.

The subdivisions are as follows: Who are moral beings? what is a moral act? conscience, moral freedom, subjective and objective right, duties in respect to inanimate nature, duties in respect to animals, duties in respect to self, duties in respect to our fellowmen in general, duties respecting the home, duties repecting the state, duties of state to state, duties to God, moral education in the home, example in the home, moral habits, moral powers to be developed, moral powers should be trained, worthy models of moral character, immoral contagion, education in self-control, family government, moral education in the school, difficulties and encouragements, guarding against vice, positive training in morals, religion in the school, moral training in the higher schools, moral education in the church.

It will be seen from the above that this work covers a vast field of thought and is worthy the attention of teachers and preachers, and is especially adapted for family reading. The work embraces 312 pages, is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is $1.50, postage paid.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

The Race of the Age!

What a race!

The train was just pulling out of Englewood, puffing and panting with its mighty efforts. As it slowly gained speed it came on a lot of tow headed children roosting on a fence, who shouted and waved as the cars came up, and then, as if with a common impulse, every child leaped to the ground and began a race with the train. The race was of short duration. As the machine left the panting little runners behind, a gray haired onlooker smiling sadly remarked: "Young America all over. Nothing too swift for them to race against." "Yes, you couldn't find a fitter exemplification of the familiar saying, 'The child is the father of the man' than in that group of children racing against the train. It's but a preliminary heat of the great race their parents are engaged in. As a physician I realize as perhaps you do not," he continued, "the erroneous change that fifty years have made in our national life. People point back to grandmothers and greatgrandmothers and say

LOOK AT THEM!

Compare them with the women of to-day! How straight they were and how strong, how hardy and how helpful they were, how heartily they ate and how heartily they laughed.

"To-day, as men and women, millions of us do in earnest what those children did in play; we're keyed up to the straining point all the time, and the nerves won't stand the daily strains and drains without protest."

There is a ton of solid fact to reflect on, suggested by the statement just quoted. What are we going to do? This is the age of steam, the age of electricity. We must keep up in

THE GREAT RACE.

But how long can we keep up? No longer, relatively, than the children kept up their race with the train. What we need is more brawn, more blood and better blood. Strength of body depends on a pure and plentiful blood current, for science has never advanced a fact beyond the statement of Moses that "The Blood is The Life." But every generation of investigation shows the statement to be true in a wider, deeper, and broader sense than was dreamed of in the past. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery begins at the beginning with the blood. It cures practically a wide range of diseases because many forms of disease have their origin in the blood. It is a scientific compound based, not upon theory but upon the practical, common sense proof that if you purify, enrich, and vitalize the blood you overcome disease in any organ. The "Golden Medical Discovery" heals disease in just this way. It begins first of all to strengthen the body through the blood, and every ounce of new blood and pure blood counts against disease.

"It was near the little town of Leroy, W. Va., and during the month of March, 1896, that a young man lay pale and motionless upon (what the neighbors called) his dying bed. Disease of the lungs, liver complaint, kidney trouble, and pleurisy were fast hastening him to the grave. The doctors had given him up to die. The neighbors said, 'he cannot live.' 'Oh, I would not care to die,' he said, 'were it not for leaving my dear wife and little child, but I know that I must die.' A brother had presented him with three bottles of medicine, but he had no faith in 'patent medicines'; but, after the doctors had given him up to die and he had banished every hope of recovery, he said to his wife, 'Dear wife, I am going to die, there can be no harm now in taking that medicine. I will begin its use at once.' He did begin to use it and at first he grew worse, but soon there came a change. Slowly but surely he got better. To-day that man is strong and healthy and he owes his life to that medicine. What was the medicine? It was Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and I, Luther Martin, am the cured man. Dr. Pierce, I thank you from the very depth of my heart, for rescuing me from the grave." The foregoing is from Luther Martin, Esq., a prominent citizen of Lubec, Wood Co., W. Va.

M. L. Messer, Esq., of Garfield, Lamoille Co., Vt., writes: "I had been out of health for about two years. Suffered with pain in head, nervousness, could not sleep, poor appetite, loss of flesh; caused by overwork. Doctors did not help me so I applied to you for advice, and described my case. You replied advising me to use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pellets.' I did so and after using one bottle I could sleep better and felt better. After using six bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and two vials of 'Pellets,' I find myself gaining in flesh and I am almost entirely cured."

CURRENT EVENTS.

At this writing the condition of affairs in South Africa is still in a very critical stage. President Kruger, of the South African Republic, declines to make any further concessions, and it is difficult to see, at present, how war can be averted in view of recent declarations by Mr. Chamberlain, although there are those who hope some method of peaceable settlement may be found. The dispute between Great Britain and the Boers is one in which the right is not all on one side. Early in the present century, when the British took possession of Cape Colony, the Hollanders, Germans and French, who inhabited the country at that time and whose descendants are known as the Boers, went still further north into the then uninhabited regions north of the Orange River. This exodus was caused by their opposition to the British power, which they claimed had been unjust to them. The Boers settled at Natal, purchasing a region of country from the Zulu king, with whom they subsequently had war because of his treachery in massacreing a large number of Boers whom he had invited to a banquet unarmed. An English gunboat soon appeared in the Harbor of St. Lucia Bay, and Natal was proclaimed to be British; a few British goldhunters having been prospecting along the coast was the ground for this seizure. The Boers resisted this claim of the British, took arms against them and were defeated. Not wishing to remain subjects of Great Britain, they once more abandoned their homes and marched west into the Orange Free State. This country, too, was soon thereafter declared to be British on the ground that the Boers had been British subjects and that wherever they settled the country became British territory.

Still intent upon their independence, the Boers crossed the Vaal River into what was really no-man's-land, being wholly uninhabited. In 1852 England recognized the Transvaal as an independent community, and soon thereafter turned over the Orange Free State also to the Boers, who occupied it. The present trouble is the result of an alluvial gold discovery in 1870 in the northeast part of the Transvaal. This brought in a great many foreigners, especially British and American, who have furnished the money for the development of the mines, which have proved to be increasingly productive. Regarding these foreigners, or uitlanders, as a temporary population, the Boers have been slow to accord to them the rights which they claim to be due them. No doubt there is just ground for grievance in this respect, and the recent triumph of the liberal party in the Transvaal gives promise of an early effort to redress this grievance. In view of this history, however, it is not difficult to see how difficult it is for the Boers to believe that it is not the real aim of the British Government to take possession of their territory. It is certain, however, that whatever may be the aim of any English politician, the great mass of the English people desire only justice for theiy countrymen in the Transvaal and believe that a suzerainty which does not guarantee such justice amounts to nothing. Surely, there should be some method by which justice may be secured to all classes of the population without an appeal to arms.

The great trial at Rennes, France, still continues to be the chief attraction of the civilized world. During the past week the tide seems to have turned decidedly in favor of Dreyfus. Several important witnesses have given their testimony for the defense and this, together with the failure of the prosecution to present any new incriminating evidence, has produced the general assuraunce, even in France, that the noted prisoner will be pronounced innocent and released. One sign of the disintegration of the forces arrayed against Dreyfus is the dividing lines which are being drawn between members of the general staff who have testified in the Dreyfus case. Seeing the inevitable, some of these officers are preparing to make their fall as easy as possible, while others are persistent in their contention that Dreyfus must be condemned. If the way was clear for acquitting Dreyfus without putting an ineffaceable blot on the generals of the army and other leading men of France there would probably be no hesitation in pronouncing the acquittal. But the awful alternative will not down that, if Dreyfus is innocent, there have been forgery, perjury, conspiracy and corruption among the generals and others holding high places in France. It was the purpose to make Dreyfus the scape-goat, but if he is released, who will be the victim? This is the question that agitates all France and almost the whole civilized world. It is this fact alone, more than any new evidence that has been presented, that has raised the doubt as to the ultimate fate of Dreyfus. Many have reasoned, with Caiaphas, that it is expedient that one man should die rather than that the whole nation should perish. This is the real danger to Dreyfus. But we may trust to the awakened public conscience of France to avert so great a moral disaster as the infliction of injustice upon an innocent man as a means of political safety.

The insular commission, which consists of General Kennedy, Judge Curtis and Major Watkins, who for the past six months have been studying the conditions of the Island of Porto Rico, made its report to the Secretary of War a few days ago. The commission recommends a form of civil government for the island to take the place of the present military regime, and submits a code of laws which it thinks should be placed in operation by an order from the President without waiting for congressional enactment. The military force, according to these recommendations, would remain in the island, but be kept in the background. English is to be made the official language of the island, but for the present all except the federal courts are to be conducted in Spanish. The code proposed abrogates all Spanish laws and royal decrees and substitutes therefor a code modified after the laws of the states of the United States, and declares the common law and principles of equity to be in the future the law of the land in the absence of any specific direction in the code. The American system of courts is substituted for the Spanish system. Of the five supreme judges recommended, three are to be Americans and two natives. The natives are to hold the offices in county, township and city government, the higher officers to be appointed by the President, the other be the Governor-General and the county commissioners. A public school system, conducted in English by American teachers is provided, and also night schools for illiterate adults. The right to teach Spanish where demanded is given. Laws governing corporations and marriages are provided, and all taxes which bear heavily on the poor are abrogated. Inasmuch as the people of the island are yet oppressed by the old Spanish laws and customs, the commission recommends that this code be put into effect at once by the President.

The revolution in San Domingo, which began with the assassination of President Heureaux, seems to have terminated in favor of the revolutionists. Dispatches announce the surrender of leading cities to the revolutionary forces. General Juan Isidro Jiminez, who is the revolutionary aspirant to the presidency, has been detained for sometime at Santiago de Cuba by General Wood, military governor of the province, whither he had gone to enlist the Cubans in behalf of the revolution. While Jiminez was not able to be present and lead the revolution, it is believed that it was planned and inspired largely by him. A number of the cities have declared for him, and it is probable that he will be elected to the presidency. General Caceras, the assassin of the former President, has been declared Minister of War. The revolution seems to have been affected without much bloodshed, and with but slight interruption to the business of the company. An American who has been sometime in San Domingo, says there is great dissatisfaction in the cities with the form of government, and thinks General Jiminez is better fitted than any one else to assume the reins of government, and that he is popular with the people. One of the great needs of San Domingo, he says, is a better financial system, and whoever is elected President must give his immediate attention to the currency question. Solving that successfully, he is likely to remain President for many years. Under the former administration too large a supply of bank notes, was issued within a short period, and as there was no deposit to back the notes the people became frightened and the notes suffered depreciation, running down to as low as 6 to 1 in foreign countries. It is easy to see how this state of things would bring about dissatisfaction among the people, and the only remedy which the people of these island republics seem to know is revolution.

A dispatch from Manila, from the staff correspondent of the Chicago Record, announces that the Sultan of Sulu, one of the Philippine group of islands, has signed the treaty presented to him by General Bates, acknowledging the supremacy of the Udited States Government over the entire Sulu Archipelago. The treaty was signed August 20, at Maidun, the Sultan's capital, on the island of Sulu. The natives are reported as being highly pleased with this relation to the United States Government. A clause in the treaty grants Americans the right to purchase land in the island. This government will retain all the ports that were formerly occupied by the Spanish, and reserves the right to open others at its discretion. The Sultan will collect no revenues, but will receive an annual salary and will maintain law and order. Several of the principal chiefs are also to be salaried. General Bates succeeded in gaining the friendship of the powerful chiefs of Mindanao, Basilan, Sulu, Siassi and Tawitawi, and this, of course, compelled the consent of the Sultan. The correspondent writes that this is considered a great diplomatic victory. Now if Gen. Bates will try his diplomatic skill on Aguinaldo and win his adhesion to the United States for a salary consideration, this would doubtless be the cheapest way to end the Philippine war. There might be drawbacks to such an arrangement as that, however, which would prove troublesome.

Somewhat of a sensation was created in the Dreyfus trial on Monday by the appearance of a witness who bore direct testimony to the guilt of Dreyfus. The witness claimed to have been a political refugee from Austria in 1894 and said his name was Eugene Cernuschi. The defense made vehement objection to such testimony at this hour of the trial and declared for its right to summon foreign witnesses, not only to know the truth of Cernuschi's statements, but also to know if the documents in the bordereau were actually communicated, and if so to whom. If this becomes necessary the trial is yet far from an end, but it is not at all likely that the prosecution will permit such a course, which, as it seems to us could result only in further evidences of a conspiracy against Dreyfus. The remaining evidence on Monday was strongly in favor of Dreyfus.

ROMAN CATHOLICISM AND OUR ISLAND POSSESSIONS.

Archbishop John Ireland has made a deliverance concerning the attitude which he thinks American Protestantism should assume toward the religious reconstruction in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines. Having been asked by the editor of the Outlook if he had anything to suggest which would open the way for Protestants and Catholics to carry on religious work in the islands mentioned "in such relations of mutual friendliness as will promote the best interests of the people in these islands, and will help to draw Protestants and Catholics nearer together rather than to estrange them from each other in the United States," he gives his reply in the Outlook.

Archbishop Ireland is credited with being a liberal among the Catholics, and his answer may be expected to represent as liberal a view of the situation as it is possible for a Roman Catholic to entertain. He frankly says, "As a Catholic, I cannot approve of any efforts of Protestants to affect the religious duties of the inhabitants of the islands. Catholics are there in complete control; they have a thorough church organization; the inhabitants are Catholics; some of them may not live up to the teachings of their faith, but they have no idea of abandoning that faith for another. It represents all they have ever known of a higher life. Protestantism will never take the place in their hearts of that faith. To take from them their faith is to throw them into absolute religious indifference. If the inhabitants of those islands were all Protestants, would Protestants ask Catholics to unite with them in the work of Protestant disintegregation?"

It is not surprising, of course, that Archbishop Ireland should take this view of the religious situation in these islands. He could hardly be a Catholic and hold any other view. There are some considerations, however, which the Archbishop omits in his view of the case. If the Catholics are in "complete control" in these islands, as he says, and have been for centuries, why has not Roman Catholicism created a better civilization? Why has it not produced a higher morality than prevails among these peoples? Why is it there is such a divorce between religion and conduct or faith and morals? The Archbishop admits that some of them may not "live up to the teachings of their faith," but is it likely that even the Roman Catholicism of these islands will be greatly improved until Protestantism shall teach a purer faith and present a higher ethical standard of conduct?

We think the Archbishop errs in his estimate of the damaging effect of Protestant teaching on the faith of the people of these islands. There is reason to believe that very many of them have become convinced that there is a very close and vital connection between the political and religious despotism to which they have been subjected in the past. They know that Spain is a Roman Catholic country and that the form of government which was imposed upon them for centuries is the outcome of a Roman Catholic civilization. This fact has doubtless raised the inquiry in the minds of many of the more intelligent, as to whether there is not something radically wrong in a religious system that produces these fruits. The Archbishop asks, "If the inhabitants of those islands were all Protestants, would Protestants ask Catholics to unite with them in the work of Protestant disintegration?" To which we reply, that if Protestants had been in complete control of Cuba, for instance, for four hundred years and had done nothing more for the people than Roman Catholicism has done, they ought in such case, to ask the co-operation of some other type of religionists to elevate the condition of the people. But this Catholic dignitary is intelligent enough to know that Cuba would have been in a very much more advanced condition than she is to-day if she had been under the influence of the Protestant faith for a much less period of time than that.

Not only does Archbishop Ireland object to Protestant missionaries being sent to these late Spanish possessions, as a Catholic, but he claims that he does so as an American also. If he were America's enemy, to-day, he would say to American Protestants: "Hurry on your missionaries to Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines, and have them tell the inhabitants of those islands that their historic faith is wrong, and that they ought to become Protestants." "This," he says, "would be the speediest and most effective way to make the inhabitants of those islands discontented and opposed to America." This statement was based on the idea that the people of these islands are greatly in love with Roman Catholicism. Contrariwise, President Schurman, who has just returned from the Philippines, states that one serious objection which the Filipinos have to the United States Government is that it treats the Roman Catholic Churches and institutions in those islands with too great favor. They believe these Roman Catholic religious orders are responsible, in a large measure, for the impositions to which they have been subjected in the past. They are for suppressing them and object to the lenient treatment which the American forces there accord them. This, of course, is in direct opposition to what the Archbishop would have us believe.

In order to enforce his view of nonintervention in religious matters on the part of Protestants in these new possessions, he cites the example of General MacMahon, who was Governor of Algeria at one time. Although he was an ardent Catholic, he "issued orders restricting missionary effort of any sort, Catholic or Protestant." "He proposed to have peace while France was trying to assimilate that country. He called the Muslim sheiks together, and he assured them that no Mohammedans would be disturbed in the exercise of their faith." Governor MacMahon would have been a strange ruler if he had not given the Mohammedans the assurance that they would not be "disturbed in the exercise of their faith." In other words, he would naturally guarantee religious liberty. Does the Archbishop suppose any different course will be pursued in any of these islands? No Roman Catholics will be "disturbed in the exercise of their falth" in any of these islands while the American flag floats there. But it would be a strange sort of government for Protestants to institute which would not guarantee the same right to people holding any other religious faith. It is a mistake to suppose that all the people of Cuba, for instance, are Catholics. There are a few Protestants and Protestant churches in that island, and these are to be as free to propagate their faith as are the Roman Catholics, or else we shall have a very different sort of government there from that which we have in this country. There may be peculiar conditions among a people like the Mohammedans, which would justify the cessation for a time of religious work among them in the interests of peace, but aside from the preservation of order and good government no civil or military governor, holding his authority from the United States, will ever prohibit the quiet and orderly presentation of the gospel of Christ in any of these islands.

No, the Roman Catholics of this country must not shrink from the comparison or contrast between themselves and Protestants which is bound to be instituted in these islands. It is inevitable. This country is essentially a Protestant country, while granting the fullest religious liberty to Catholics. Its idea of civil and religious liberty have been molded by Protestantism. These ideas will go with its flag and will be taught to the people over whom it waves, and those of them who desire, voluntarily, to accept the new faith and the larger truth and the greater liberty will be protected in their right so to do, and Protestant and Roman Catholic civilizations will stand face to face in these islands and the world will have another object-lesson as to the superiority of Protestantism over Roman Catholicism in promoting the enlightenment, the morality and the intellectual and religious progress of the people who come under their control.

POWER FROM ON HIGH.

The last words spoken by the Master before his return to heaven were these:

"Ye shall be my witnesses, both in Jerusalem and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

This is only another way of saying that "repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all nations"—only another way of saying: "Preach the gospel to the whole creation."

In immediate connection with this command, with this statement, is an assurance of "power from on high." While "the chosen disciples" were commanded to "go and make disciples of all the nations," a temporary embargo was placed on them. "Tarry," said the Master, "until ye be clothed with power from on high."

The work to which the friends of the Christ were called was so great, so transcendently important and so exceedingly difficult, that it could only be successfully carried on by divine assistance. They were encouraged to undertake it by the assurance of him who possesses "all authority" both "in heaven and on earth," that he would be with them in their effort to accomplish the apparently impossible task. "So, then, the Lord Jesus, after he had spoken to them, was received up into heaven, and sat down at the right hand of God. And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them."

The reception of the needed "power" was synchronous with the descent of the Holy Spirit, and the Christ said to "the eleven," "Ye shall receive power WHEN the Holy Spirit is come upon you." The Holy Spirit came, and with his advent came "power." Men who were timid became courageous. The disciple who cursed and swore and derided his Lord, after the coming of the Spirit said: "We cannot but speak the things which we saw and heard;" "We must obey God rather than men." These things he said in the presence of "Annas, the high priest, and Caiaphas, and John and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the high priest."

What a change! Only a short time before this man had "denied before them, saying, 'I know not what thou sayest;'" "and again he denied with an oath, 'I know not the man;'" "then began he to curse and to swear, 'I know not the man.'" What a change! How are we to account for it? "Ye shall receive power WHEN the Holy Spirit is come upon you." In these words we have the explanation. The presence of the Holy Spirit in Simon Peter changed him from a lying, profane coward to a man of truth and courage. He is now, after the coming of the Holy Spirit, ready to speak and, if necessary, to die for the Lord Jesus. As a matter of fact, he sealed his testimony to the Son of God with his life's blood. In his old age he said of himself and coworkers: "We did not follow cunningly devised fables when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus." The wonderful change that came to "the eleven" is a demonstration of the fact that the Holy Spirit came to them as the Teacher had promised.

The Holy Spirit was needed; the Holy Spirit came. Power was needed; power was given. The presence of the victorious Christ was required; the omnipotent Christ was present.

Is there anything in this for us? Why not? Are we to set forth these facts in our preaching merely as facts of history? It is true to-day that "whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that through patience and through comfort of the Scriptures we might have hope."

THE need of the church now is "power from on high." There is learning in the church as never before. The culture is superior to anything of the kind possessed by the church in the past. There is a growing unity among believers, for which we should render thanks to almighty God. The organization of the body of Christ is becoming more complete as the years go by. All things outward are favorable. The need now is the Holy Spirit in the hearts of the disciples of the Christ as a present, personal experience. In almost all other respects the church of the nineteenth century is superior to the church of the apostolic age.

In Ezekiel's vision of the valley of dry bones he saw that the bones came together, bone to his bone. There were sinews upon them, and flesh came up, and skin covered them above; but there was no breath in them.

In response to the prophet's cry the Spirit came, and with his advent came life. The presence of the Spirit was THE essential requisite. This lesson is taught—the importance of the Holy Spirit's presence—in both the Old Testament and in the New.

Not as a theory, or as a part of our theology, but as a fact in our experience, the personal indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and the consequent "power from on high," is essential to real success in the work to which God calls us.

Jesus taught his disciples to pray for the Holy Spirit. Paul prayed for his brethren that they might "be strengthened with power through the Spirit in the inner man."

The work to which WE are called is so great, so important, so difficult, that it can only be successfully carried on by divine power. If the early disciples stood in need of "power from on high," equally do the disciples of Christ in the present time need this enduement. In no other way can the difficulties by which we are surrounded be overcome. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

THE GOLDEN JUBILEE.

The use of the term jubilee has been changed somewhat from its original use among the Israelites. Then it meant a restoration, now it means a celebration of some event fifty years past. While there has been lost much of the idea of giving and restoring from the original, yet even now there is something of that idea left in our Jubilee celebrations. The man who is fifty years old at the anniversary receives special consideration and special gifts. The couple married fifty years are especially honored by children and grandchildren. The organization at its fiftieth anniversary has special endowments bestowed or gifts for building purposes. In charitable institutions special funds are raised for charities. In the Jubilee of church organizations more and more it has come about that extraordinary donations have been made to strengthen the church and endow missions and colleges. Measured by precedents in other religious bodies our request at Chattanooga for $100,000 as our Jubilee offering was a modest one. Some thought it too large only on account of our previous neglect of of Home Missions and our exceedingly meagre offerings to evangelize America; it would be impossible to raise it. It was thought by others that because this was the Jubilee and because of the great gift at Chattanooga of $5,000 we could raise an amount equal to twice and a half any previous offering. The receipts, thus far, have in a measure justified the hope. The double has been realized all through the year. The half is yet to be raised, and less than one month is before us. This half can be raised only by a great popular movement. That it will be raised we have little doubt.

First, this is the fiftieth anniversary of the American Christian Missionary Society, and all the other societies should recognize this fact, and we believe they do, and hence are willing that special courtesies and privileges shall be given to this society ordinarily not extended, and that there is no jealousy whatever because of the unprecedented growth made in the Home Mission receipts. They all recognize that their time will come. This is the reason for the present editorial and for the space given in this issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to the Home Society.

Second, every church in the land should recognize its obligations to our missionary organizations by sending its gifts for the great gathering. We owe much to our organized work, as we have continually shown in these columns. It has saved us from contention and saved us from selfishness. We would not like to belong to a church which would not send some token when the Mother Missionary Society celebrates her fiftieth anniversary.

Third, if we ever do the work that God intends us to do as a people we must place our Home Mission work on a much higher plane. This is the year, this is the time. If we do, all our missionary enterprises will receive an influx of life.

Fourth, only the people who live near to God are blessed of God. Only the spiritual will commune with God. Spirituality is only another name for love, and love another name for sacrifice. Mouthing is notspirituality. Let no one who professes to love the church and love the cause and love Christ go to Cincinnati to rejoice without first sending his offering.

Fifth, we are told that recently a brother wrote to the different societies sending an offering for each, saying: "I could not both go and send, so I will remain at home and send the amount it would cost me to go." If you want todo this you can, though it seems best for you to meet in in the great assembly; take part in the rejoicing because you have taken part in gaining the victory.

Sixth and finally, brethren, this is to be the greatest religious gathering ever held on this continent—to celebrate an unparalleled growth. See to it that no shadow rests on our rejoicing. May we, by universal agreement, each bear a part in raising the final amount. You will, no doubt, be asked personally this week, if indeed you have not already been asked, to send at least $1.00 to the secretaries of the Home Board to aid in raising the last part of the $100,000 for Home Missions this year. You can do this. Do not neglect it. It means you; have you given, it means you; have you not given, it means you; are you going to Cincinnati, it means you; are you not, it means you; have you wealth, it means you; have you little it, means you. Alll can, nearly all will join. The object to be attainded is so great, the sacrifice necessary so small, that there will be an almost universal outpouring of gifts. We predict that September, 1899, will eclipse all missionary records among our people. Only do not neglect it. Send at once your offering.

We are informed that one hundred preachers wrote in to the Home office during August stating that they will, in some way, help the final offering. Now for the winding up of our greatest missionary year, so far.

PALEOZOIC CHRISTIANS.

During a Western trip we saw an Indian from some neigboring reservation looking into the window of a gun store. We looked him carefully all over. He was "the real thing," without doubt. He had his blanket, his eagle feathers, his bow and arrows, just as if he had stepped out of a page of Catlin's. When we came nearer we paused to note what it was at which he was gazing so earnestly. It proved to be a hammerless gun. And now suppose that one of the mountains of the near-by range had suddenly vomited forth ashes, a la Vesuvius and Pompeii: what would have been the finding of some future society of archæologists as the date of the event? Is this the stone age, judged by the Ute's arrows? or the iron age, judged by the gunsmith's display? And is it not true that all ages overlap and coexist? That certainly is the way the spiritual world stands. There are men in every congregation that belong to the paleozoic period, and some that would be more at home in the latter part of the twentieth century A. D. When the disciples attempted to justify their passion and desire for vengeance by Elisha's example Christ reminded them that Elisha had been dead a long time.—Interior.

But the fact that a man has been "dead a long time" does not make his example less a standard of right to one who does not believe in the progress of the race and the divine evolution of human history. There be Christians, so called, who do not realize that Christ's coming into the world has introduced a new standard of ethics, a new conception of God, a new type of life and a new interpretation of history and of the world. Mormons have attempted to justify polygamy by the example of Old Testament characters, cruelties in war have been condoned by the wars against Canaanitish tribes, and now and then a Christian will predicate his faith in Christ and in the Christian Scriptures on the verbal accuracy of the Old Testament records in chronologies and genealogies! How little does Christ mean to this class of people!

Hour of Prayer.

DECISION OF CHARACTER.

(Dan. 1:8; 6:10-16.)

Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Sept. 13.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The will is the regnant power in human character, and righteous decisions, in the midst of temptations to evil, form a character which God always rewards.

Along with the captives carried by Nebuchadnezzar to Babylon, of the children of Israel, were some of the seed royal of the house of Judah—"youths in whom was no blemish, but well-favored, and skillful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science, and such as had ability to stand in the king's palace." In order that the king might better fit these promising youths for his service he appointed them "a daily portion of the king's food, and of the wine which he drank," that they might be nourished for three years by this high living and then stand in his presence. Among these children of Judah was Daniel. We apprehend most young men under similar circumstances would have regarded themselves as exceedingly fortunate in being permitted thus to share in the king's fare. "But Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the king's food, nor with the wine which he drank."

Daniel formed this double purpose in his heart. It was a deep seated purpose, having its origin in religious convictions which he held, and in a high ideal of life which he had chosen for himself. It was a decision, let it be noted, of the spirit as against the desires of the flesh, which would have been gratified by the king's fare. He was subordinating the material and fleshly to the spiritual, his lower nature to his higher nature. If Daniel achieved any greatness in life, if he was promoted to high places of honor and responsibility, if he was favored of God, and his name had come down to the present as one of the moral heroes of the past, he owed it all to this wise and courageous decision. The man who carries his religious convictions and ideals even into foreign courts and among peoples of lower standards of living and still purposes in his heart not to defile himself, but maintains an attitude of courageous loyalty to God, will have fixed upon him the seal of moral greatness. He will be numbered among the seed royal in the kingdom of God.

Perhaps the most common and almost universal sin of our time is in the choosing of the lower instead of the higher ideal; in compromising our moral convictions by yielding to the solicitations of the lower nature as against the demands of the higher. There is great need of cultivating the spirit of moral heroism which manifests itself so prominently in the life and character of Daniel. Would that all the young men of the land would, in the language of the familiar hymn, and purpose in their hearts not to defile themselves with any unclean thing.

"Dare to be a Daniel,"

We are not surprised to learn that, as a later incident in the life of Daniel, as given in the quotation above, he had decision of character sufficient to enable him to defy even the edict of Darius, the king, when that decree interfered with his religious duties. When by the conspiracy of his enemies the king had been persuaded to issue an edict prohibiting any one from making "a petition of any god or man for thirty days, save of the king," Daniel again purposed in his heart to be loyal to his God, and take the consequences. This was a severe test of character, but had not God blessed him in his former righteous decisions, and why should he not trust Him now? So "he kneeled down before the open windows in his chamber, facing towards Jerusalem, three times a day, and prayed and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime." The penalty we know, and the deliverance we know. The meaning of it all is that God will not forsake a man who always purposes in his heart to be loyal to Him, no matter what the temptation may be to do otherwise. If Daniel had not made the first decision he would not have had the strength of character to have made this last one. There is nothing that strengthens the power of the will like righteous decisions, and there is nothing that weakens it more than surrendering to the clamor of appetites or passions.

There is not a day that passes when each one of us does not have the opportunity of making righteous decisions. We are continually making choices,and in so doing we are both indicating and forming our characters. Let any one of us determine that for a single day his choices will be made in harmony with the will of God, as that will is understood by us, and the evening shadows will find us with a worthier conception of life and a higher degree of self-respect. Such is the favorable result of an honest effort to be loyal to conscience and to God.

PRAYER.

O Thou who art our Creator and Father! We thank Thee that Thou hast fashioned us in Thine own image. We thank Thee that Thou hast endowed us with the power of choice—the sublime but awful prerogative of deciding our own destiny. We are grateful, too, that Thou hast placed before us such vast incentives to right choices; and not only so, but that Thou art working in us "both do will and to do Thy good pleasure." Help us, we pray Thee, to open our hearts to all the divine influences that are working for our salvation, and to seek continually to bring our wills into harmony with Thy will. May we always have grace to decide for the right as against the wrong, and to follow our convictions of duty, no matter at what present cost to us. Inspire the rulers of nations, and all who are in positions of influence and authority, in church and state, with the desire to choose wisely and righteously, and may each of us so subordinate our individual wills to Thy will that we may enjoy the peace "which passeth all understanding." For Christ's sake. Amen!

MACATAWA MUSINGS.

How brief and flitting a thing is summer! How rapidly the golden days have passed by here at the Park! A few radiant sunsets out over the lake; a few long, bright days, treading on each others' heels in rapid succession; a few storms breaking in upon the calm of the lake and of the woods and sending in majestic billows to break in fury upon the shore; a few gatherings of worshipers at the Auditorium, in the woods and down by the lakeside at eventide; a few social excursions here and there with circles of friends; a few evening and morning strolls through the deep woods or along the sounding shore, where, alone with God, the heart sends up its sincerest adoration; a few quiet reveries on the veranda, gazing up into the clear deep of the upper skies, or out upon the changing colors of the lake, or pouring over the pages of some favorite book or magazine or paper; a few greetings and good-byes with coming and departing friends; a few hours each day in thinking and toiling for the interest of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and in personal correspondence; a few cloud-shadows of disappointment—and the summer is gone! Whether there were more shadows than sunlight, whether there were more smiles than tears, matters little. How have these influences and experiences affected our character and relation with God? This alone is important.

These musings are written down in the last hours of August. There is something about August that we like. There is a silent majesty in its starlit nights and in its early morning and evening hours that moves our soul to higher thoughts. The nights are cooler and the stars seem to shine brighter than in the other summer months. Peering out over the lake last night we announced the light of an approaching vessel. Further investigation proved it to be a setting star passing beneath the horizon line. We wonder if many a heavenly phenomenon is not misinterpreted and regarded as a commonplace event. But we were speaking of August. We have had a long succession of clear, calm days and nights, when the lake has lain in tranquil repose save as its surface was stirred into light ripples by the gentle breeze. But after all, there is a prophecy in the cool night air of the early departure of summer. In an early walk through the woods this morning, following a dim trail we came across what might be called a convention or congress of butterflies. There, in the heart of the forest, were thousands of the brown-winged creatures, gorgeously decorated, flying about among the trees and alighting on their boughs, as if dimly conscious that the end of their brief career was approaching. Had they come together to condole with each other, and had they sought out this quiet retreat in which to spend the closing hours of their brief lives? If so, they share a common feeling with man. Whatever the throng and rush may be in which we do our life work, who of us does not look forward to and long for a quiet spot, somewhere, for the evening hour and the transition?

Sitting on the veranda, last evening, in the early gloaming, talking with the pastor of one of our largest city churches, he said: "Do you not think there is a tendency among our brethren to regard our brotherhood as divided into two wings, one of them more progressive and liberal, the other more conservative, with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as the leader of the former and the Christian Standard as the leader of the latter?" We replied that we did not know how brethren regarded the matter, but that there were no doubt among us, as there were bound to be in every religious body, these two elements, but that no one could draw the line among us to-day, separating us into two distinct wings. We ventured to ask him this question: "You are reading and have for years been reading the leading religious journals of the leading religious bodies of this country, in order that you may know the trend of religious thought among other people and what they were doing for the world's salvation: will you please tell me, frankly, whether you regard the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S attitude toward the problems of biblical criticism as more conservative or more radical than other representative papers which you read?" His reply was that it was more conservative, with one possible exception, than the other leading papers which he was reading. This was our own opinion, but we desired the evidence of one looking at the question from an independent point of view. We have always thought of ourself as a conservative in the best sense of that word, in relation to all these questions of modern biblical criticism. It is a little surprising to us to learn occasionally that others esteem us a radical and the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST as a sort of organ and champion of the new criticism! In an editorial last week we attempted to define what our attitude has been and is toward higher criticism, and by that statement of the case we are prepared to stand or fall. If there is only a "wing" among us that is prepared to endorse that attitude, then we have departed a long way from the spirit and course of the fathers of our movement.

What concerns us far more than the unsettled questions of biblical criticism is the deeper spiritual life and the more intense religious activity of Christian people, and especially of those particular Christians with whom we are identified and to whose religious need it is the supreme purpose of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to minister. There are some things that are settled, thank God! Jesus Christ is God's Son and the divine Savior of the world. He came in the flesh, took our nature, lived "the human life of God," revealed to us the Father, laid down his life for us and took it up again, ascending above all principalities and powers. The Scriptures testify of this Christ, reveal Him and point out the sure way by which we may come into right relations with God and with one another and share in that abundant life which Christ has brought into the world. Here is enough to fire every soul with the holiest ambition. Here is an adequate basis on which to build our faith and our character. Here are motives high enough, deep enough, to lead us into the most Christly consecration and service. Here are opened up to us a glorious visita of unlimited possibilities. Herein is offered to us the outstretched hand of human sympathy and divine power by which we crucify the flesh and live in the Spirit. Herein is made possible the desire expressed by Tennyson:

> "O that a man might arise in me,
> That the man I am may cease to be."

To lead our readers into these pastures and beside these living waters; to point them to the unattained heights of spiritual progress and Christian achievement; to imbue them with a sincere love of truth and the desire to live the truth which they believe and know; to enable them to show to the world the beauty and the power of that simple faith and doctrine for which we plead—this has been our fondest hope, our loftiest ambition and the object of unceasing labors and prayers.

Speaking of the departure of summer, we are reminded of this by the departure on each outgoing steamer of friends who have been spending the summer here. Many have already gone. Only a few of our preachers remain, and most of those leave this week. A little while more and the remainder of us also will "fold our tents like the Arabs and silently steal away." Sweet has been the fellowship we have had together here, a very foretaste of that fellowship without which even heaven would be no heaven. If we have not accomplished all that we had planned, we have at least read some of the lessons which God has written on the bright pages of nature. We have compared these lessons with those found on the pages of that other volume, written by holy men of old, and baptized in the tears and blood of many generations of believers, and find that the God who writes to-day in the book of nature is the same God who of old spake in time past unto the fathers in the prophets, and in later times through his Son. We are glad that the God who paints the evening and morning sky, and fills the earth with His glory and beauty, is the same God who so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son to redeem it. To His ever-blessed name be glory and dominion forever and ever!

Edgewood-on-the-Lake, Macatawa, Mich., Aug. 31, 1899.

As we go to press the news from the Transvaal is of the most serious character. President Kruger's reply to England's last overture is a withdrawal of the five years' franchise and agreement in principle to a conference at Cape Town. This is interpreted to mean defiance to England, and it is predicted that the Boers will declare war inside of forty-eight hours.

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

CHRISTIAN UNION IN OUR NATIONAL CONVENTIONS.

BENJAMIN L. SMITH.

The first mention of any action in regard to Christian union in our National Convention was in 1871, when a letter was received from the Triennial Conference of the Free Baptist Church, commending S. D. Bates as fraternal delegate from the conference to the convention.

As the result of this visit a committee was appointed and visits were exchanged back and forth through a period of years. The following lines of union were suggested: "The freest exchange of pulpits; the closest co-operation in protracted meetings; that wherein possible the different bodies should unite in one congregation for work and worship." The following lines were suggested:

1. As to name. Since both bodies use the phrase "the Church of Christ," let each include the other in this expression, and let the term Baptist be understood as equivalent to immersionist, embracing the ideas of a converted church membership and the unchanged ordinances of the gospel, and not an ecclesiastical name.

2. As to admission of members. Let inquirers be instructed in the way of salvation in the precise language of the inspired apostles to inquirers of the same class, and let each candidate for baptism be received upon a public confession that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God," with the silent consent, if no specific objections be presented to the pastor or his associate officers.

3. As to communion. Since the Disciples conscientiously regard it a privilege and also a duty required by the teaching of the Scriptures to commune every Lord's day, let the Lord's supper be observed every first day of the week, as it is now by some Baptist churches as well as by the Disciples, faithfully presenting the conditions of salvation and the practice of the primitive church, and judging no man's liberty.

4. As to the preachers. Let all the members in each local congregation unite in supporting a good, capable man, and recognize his standing in the Christian ministry regardless of past affiliations, who will prudently regard these points of adjustment, teach the Word of God as he finds it in the Bible and prayerfully lead the flock of God into all good ways and works.

5. As to co-operation. Let the several congregations exercise their liberty in sending messengers to associational and conventional meetings of the two bodies now constituted, and contribute to the enterprise of either or both bodies as the pleasure of individual contributors.

This exchange of views was the good seed sown in the soil; the harvest is yet to appear.

THE EPISCOPAL OVERTURE FOR CHRISTIAN UNION.

In 1887 the convention of the Episcopal Church, through its secretary, Herman C. Duncan, transmitted the declaration of the House of Bishops on the subject of Christian union, pleading for Christian union and saying:

1. Our earnest desire is that the Savior's prayer, "that we may be one," may, in its deepest and truest sense, be speedily fulfilled.

2. That we believe that all who have been baptized with water in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, are members of the Holy Catholic Church.

3. That in all things of human ordering or human choice, relating to modes of worship and discipline, or to traditional customs, this church is ready in the spirit of love and humility to forego all preference of her own.

4. That this church does not seek to absorb other communions, but rather, co-operating with them on the basis of a common faith and order to discountenance schism, to heal the wounds of the body of Christ, and to promote the charity which is the chief of Christian graces and the visible manifestation of Christ to the world.

But furthermore, we do hereby affirm the Christian unity, now so earnestly desired by the memorialists, can be restored only by the return of all Christian communions to the principles of unity exemplified by the undivided catholic church during the first ages of its existence; which principles we believe to be the substantial deposit of Christian faith and order committed by Christ and his apostles to the church unto the end of the world, and therefore incapable of compromise and surrender by those who have been ordained to be stewards and trustees for the common and equal benefit of all men.

As inherent parts of this sacred deposit, and therefore as essential to the restoration of unity among the divided branches of Christendom, we account the following to wit:

1. The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament as the revealed work of God.

2. The Nicene Creed as the sufficient statement of the Christian faith.

3. The two sacraments—Baptism and the Supper of the Lord, ministered with unfailing use of Christ's words of institution and of the elements ordained by him.

4. The Historic Episcopate locally adapted in the methods of its administration to the varying needs of the nations and peoples called of God unto the unity of his church.

Furthermore, deeply grieved by the sad divisions which afflict the Christian Church in our land, we hereby declare our desire and readiness, as soon as there shall be any authorized response to this declaration, to enter into brotherly conference with all or any Christian bodies seeking the restoration of the organic unity of the church with a view to the earnest study of the conditions under which so priceless a blessing might happily be brought to pass.

REPLY TO THE EPISCOPAL OVERTURE.

On motion this communication was referred to a special committee, as follows: Isaac Errett, D. R. Dungan, J. W. McGarvey, A. R. Benton, B. J. Radford. The reply, writtten by Isaac Errett and by him read to the convention, was a masterly document, as follows:

Dear Sir:—Your communication, addressed to the General Christian Missionary Convention, through R. Moffett, its corresponding secretary, was by him laid before our convention at its annual meeting in Indianapolis, October the 20th, 1897. After due consideration the following response was unanimously agreed to, which you will please present to your honorable commission, with assurances of our cordial approval of their noble aim.

Having carefully and with deep interest considered the declaration of the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church, adopted October 20th, 1886, we respectfully and affectionately submit the result of our deliberations. In doing this, it is proper to say that the General Christian Missionary Convention is possessed of no ecclesiastical authority. It is made up partly of delegates from our state and territorial missionary conventions and partly of annual members, life members and life directors, and its objects are purely benevolent and philanthropic. It has no control over the faith and discipline of our churches. While there is a broad Christian fellowship of faith and love among all these churches in districts, states and nation, for missionary, educational and other benevolent and charitable purposes there is no central ecclesiastical organization, having control of questions of doctrine and discipline, and no possibility, therefore, of an authoritative response to your declaration. But as this convention is composed of members from all the states and territories in which we have churches and of members of these churches embracing a fair share of intelligence, experience and wisdom of their membership, this unanimous expression of sentiment on the part of this convention may be safely regarded as the most trustworthy utterance obtainable of the convictions of the entire brotherhood in the United States known as Christians or Disciples of Christ. We have the fullest confidence that it will be generally approved.

Allow us therefore to say:

1. You may infer with what lively interest and admiration we regard the declaration of your House of Bishops, when we state that in so far as our religious movement is distinctive, its original differentiation from all other religious movements of the time was the condemnation of the sect spirit and of sectarian organizations as unscriptural, sinful and fruitful in mischief, and the advocacy of the return to the unity, catholicity and spirituality of the faith and practice of the churches of apostolic times; a return, in other words, to New Testament teaching. This movement, which took on, in 1809, the public form of a voluntary Christian association, finally developed into the organization of churches to restore, as it was then expressed, "in letter and in spirit, in principle and in practice," the faith and discipline of apostolic times.

They were known simply as "churches of Christ." These organizations were formed, not because those entering into them desired a separation from the ecclesiastical communions with which they had been associated, but because the narrow and bitter sectarian spirit then prevailing forbade all utterance of such anti-sectarian sentiments and all promotion of such anti-sectarian aims within their respective pales. These churches have increased until now they number, in the United States, about 800,000 communicants, and to-day there sounds out from them all, with no diminution of earnestness or emphasis, the same condemnation of sectarian parties, sectarian creeds, sectarian names, sectarian aims, and the same entreaty for the return of all believers to the unity of faith and catholicity of spirit taught, fostered and defended by the apostles of Jesus Christ. We cannot, therefore, do otherwise than hail with gladness the declaration of your desire and readiness, so soon as there shall be any authorized response to this declaration, to enter into brotherly conference with all or any Christian bodies seeking the restoration of organic unity of the church with a view to the earnest study of the conditions under which so priceless a blessing might be happily brought to pass. We are especially glad that this overture comes from the Protestant Episcopal Church. Eminently conservative as that church is known to be, its leadership in such a movement is evidence that the religious sentiment of this country in behalf of Christian unity is deep and strong, while the cautious proceedings of thirty-three years, ripening into the declaration and the appointment of this commission, give us unmistakably the results of mature deliberation and ripe conviction. While we do not accord with everything suggested in the declaration and to what "is essential to the restoration of unity among the divided branches of Christendom," we do most heartily approve the proposal for "brotherly conference" with a view to the earnest study of the conditions under which the desired unity may be brought to pass.

2. The frankness and candor with which you express your understanding of "the principles of unity" is, in our view, as admirable as the kind spirit in which you invite us to brotherly conference. While it would be manifestly premature to enter at present on a discussion of any of these principles, we deem it altogether proper to imitate your frankness in simply stating, in the light of the investigations and experience of three-quarters of a century, what we deem essential to Christian unity.

1. We heartily concur in your statement of the first essential to the restoration of unity: the recognition of "the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as the revealed Word of God." In the language of the Westminster Confession of Faith, "The whole counsel of God concerning all things necessary for his own glory, man's salvation, faith and life, is either expressly set down in the Scripture, or by good and necessary consequences may be deduced from the Scriptures, "unto which nothing is at any time to be added, whether by new revelations of the spirit of the traditions of men." "And, though all things in Scripture are not alike plain in themselves, not alike clear unto all, yet those things which are necessary to be known, believed and observed for salvation are so clearly compounded and open in some place of Scripture or other, that not only the learned, but the unlearned, in due use of the ordinary means may attain unto a sufficient understanding of them."

The Holy Scriptures are the only catholic rule of faith and discipline. On no other platform can the scattered hosts of spiritual Israel be restored to unity. The Historic Episcopate, "or the principles of unity exemplified by the undivided Catholic Church, 'during the first stages of its existence" will not be accepted by the various "divided branches of Christendom" as "essential" to Christian unity, or as binding on the conscience. Nothing less authoritative than a thus saith the Lord will be universally recognized as essential to Christian unity, or as binding on the conscience. The history of the early Christian centuries may have a universally admitted value as illustrating or confirming Scripture; but as essential to union in Christ no historical teaching outside of the inspired books will ever be universally or even generally accepted by the divided branches of Christendom. For instance: If parochial or diocesan episcopacy or an order of priesthood in the church other than the "royal priesthood" which belongs to all believers is set forth in the New Testament Scriptures as of divine authority, then collateral evidence of such forms of episcopal government and such order of priesthood may be brought from the history of the undivided catholic church during the first ages of its existence, and such testimony of a "Historic Episcopate" would doubtless be allowed to have its just weight. But a basis of union involving anything as essential other than what is contained in the revealed Word of God, we regard as utterly impracticable.

What we have said of the testimony of the early Christian centuries may also be said of what is styled the Apostles' Creed, the Nicene Creed, and all human creeds. Nothing less authoritative than God's Word should be regarded as beyond the reach of "compromise and surrendered "Hold fast the form of sound words which thou hast heard of me," said the inspired Paul to Timothy. No form of uninspired words, however admirable in the estimate of the multitudes, can be insisted on as beyond "compromise or surrender" without placing an insuperable obstacle in the way of "the restoration of unity among the undivided branches of Christendom." "If any statement of the Christian faith" should at any time be deemed necessary, not as a bond of fellowship, but for public information, or to condemn prevalent errors, we respectfully submit that Christians of to-day can put such a statement in a form much better suited to the people of this generation than the Nicene formula, which had its birth out of the controversies of that time, and came into being under conditions which not only do not exist, but which are not so much as known to the great majority of professed Christians of the present time.

The restoration of unity demands a return to New Testament teaching. We may not presume to improve on the ideas of unity and catholicity taught by inspiration. We ought to improve on the practice of the apostolic churches, being made wiser by their errors and by the apostolic rebukes which those errors called forth; but in our conceptions of spiritual unity and ecclesiastical union, of catholicity, and of all that is to be insisted on as essential to Christian fellowship and "incapable of compromise and surrender," we must be guided solely by the teaching of Jesus the Christ and his apostles.

Coming, then, to the New Testament, to the "pure river of water of life, bright as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb," before it was contaminated by the muddy stream of human doctrine and tradition, what do we find?

1. That the original inspired creed—that, and that alone which was required to be believed and confessed by all who sought membership in the church of God—had but one article, viz., "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God." That which justified and saved and held all the saved in one blessed fellowship was not assent to a system of doctrines, a formulation of speculative opinions and theories, or a form of church government, but faith in Jesus the Messiah, the Son of God. Faith in a divine person, love of a divine person, absolute and entire personal surrender and committal in conscience, heart and life to a divine person—this was the requirement, the only requirement, laid on those who sought salvation and entrance into the fellowship of Christians. This is a divine creed, which can neither be "compromised or surrendered." Everything that is not legitimately involved in this one article of faith concerning the Christhood and divinity of Jesus as a test of fitness on the score of faith for admission to membership in the church, not only may be but ought to be surrendered.

2. That all who confessed this faith in the Lord Jesus were admitted to Christian fellowship by immersion in water into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. And only such was admitted. We would say, therefore, that those who thus accepted Jesus as their Lord and Savior and were thus immersed were, in the apostolic age, members of the church of God; or to use the language of the Declaration, "members of the Holy Catholic Church." The churches of the apostolic times acknowledged "one Lord, one faith, one baptism," and these were among the essentials of Christian unity.

3. That those who were thus added to the church were continued in fellowship so long as they walked in the commandments of Jesus. Obedience to the Lord Jesus—in other words, Christian character—was the test of fellowship in the church. If any one denied the Lord that bought him or refused to honor him by obedience to his commandments, he was to be condemned as unworthy of Christian fellowship. But so long as one cherished faith in the Son of God and kept his commandments, he was entitled to a place among the children of God. If he was right concerning Christ, though he might be wrong about many things, it was presumed that Christ would bring him right about everything essential to spiritual life and enjoyment. And if he was not right as to his faith in and obedience to Christ, however free from error in other respects, his unbelief and disobedience formed an insurmountable barrier to the fellowship of Christians.

It will be seen that this is catholic ground.

"The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments and the revealed Word of God," is catholic. This can not be said of any creed of human compilation.

Faith in Jesus as the Christ, the Son of God is catholic. It is the faith of all who accept the Old and New Testaments and the revealed Word of God.

The immersion of believers into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit is catholic. No one disputes that the believer is the proper subject of baptism, while there is a serious and widespread controversy over the admission of infants to that ordinance. All admit that the immersion of a proper subject is valid baptism, while there is endless controversy over sprinkling and pouring.

Disciples of Christ, Christians, Church of God, Churches of Christ—these are catholic. All the evangelical parties claim these designations and complain of any exclusive appropriation of them; while Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, etc., are party names, which can never be universally approved.

Here, then, we stand on unsectarian ground, where it seems to us, if anywhere, we find the essential principles of Christian unity, which cannot be compromised or surrendered.

4. Outside of that which is essential to Christian unity there are many things pertaining to growth in knowledge, to methods of working, etc., in reference to which, for the sake of peace and for the preservation of unity, there should be a common agreement. There should, we think, be the largest liberty of opinion, of investigation and of utterance on all questions arising out of the study of the Scriptures, and no one who holds to Jesus "as God manifest to the flesh," and who keeps his commandments, should be disturbed in his church relations on account of his opinions, provided he does not attempt to force his opinions on others or to make an acceptance of them a test of fellowship. Should he attempt this he becomes a factionist, to be rejected after the first and second admonition.

Many questions unprofitable for discussion in the pulpit may be profitably, or at least harmlessly discussed in the schools, to which all speculative questions should be remanded.

There are practical questions—questions of method in carrying out the work of the church—which, being left to the discretion of Christians, to be answered according to times and circumstances, should never be made tests of fellowship or occasions of strife. In questions of this class as to what is expedient and not as to what is of divine authority and obligation — Christians should learn to please each other and study the things that make for peace and edification. We are pleased, therefore, to read in the Declaration, "That in all things of human ordering or human choics, relating to modes of worship and discipline, or to traditional customs, this church is ready, in the spirit of love and humility, to forego all preferences of her own." To refuse to forego preferences in all things of human ordering or human choice, or in things resting on mere traditional authority, and to allow such preferences to stand in the way of Christian union, would be to assume the tremendous responsibility of exhalting the human to an equality with the divine. May we not say that it would be to make the Word of God of none effect by human traditions and usages? If "the spirit of love and humanity" prevail, this Declaration of the Protestant Episcoval Church will receive unstinted appropal from all who aim to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Yet it is just here that we fear. It is so easy to mistake attachment to mere usages for a conscientious adherence to God's will, that there is more danger of disagreement in things not taught in the Scriptures than in the things that are taught therein.

5. There remains one item in the Declaration too important to be passed without notice: "That this church does not seek to absorb other communions, but rather, co-operating with them on a basis of common faith and order, to discountenance schism, to heal the wounds of the body of Christ and to promote the charity which is the chief of the Christian graces and the visible manifestation of Christ to the world." As we understand it, this is a gratifying declaration. We do not regard it as looking toward a theological and ecclesiastical electicism or syncretism by which the various denominational systems and doctrines and church government shall be perpetuated, in whole or in part, under some nebulous scheme or vague profession of Christian unity, but simply as a frank disavowal of selfish aims. This is alike manly and just. It exhibits the only spirit in which it is possible to "discountenance schism and heal the wounds of the body of Christ." Not what will promote the interests of any denomination, but what will serve the purposes and promote the welfare of the "one body" of Christ, is to be sought. All other communions should adopt this sentiment as their own, as a necessary preliminary to all successful efforts to heal divisions and make manifest that unity which is so prominent a characteristic of the Church of God.

In conclusion, permit us to say that we very cordially approve the gentle and loving spirit that breathes in your Declaration, and heartily coincide with your proposal to "enter into brotherly conference with all or any Christian bodies seeking the restoration of the organic unity of the church with a view to the earnest study of the conditions under which so priceless a blessing might happily be brought to pass." We respectfully submit this answer to your Declaration with humble reliance on the Head of the Church that we may be delivered from pride and prejudice, and be led into all the truth, so that all may seek the same thing, and that there may be no division among us, but that we may be perfected together in the same mind and the same judgment—thus realizing and fulfilling the prayer of our blessed Lord and Savior in behalf of all who believe in him: "That they may all be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they may be one in us, and that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

WHAT IS INSPIRATION? PLENARY?

JAMES H. BROOKS.

One has said, "Whenever you find yourself in a mental fog, attend to the duty of definition." Who can give us a strict, scholarly definition of inspiration? Is the term not being misused? In the current literature of the day we find such expressions as these: The mail brought me the following inspiring words; I do not remember ever seeing him gazing at the ceiling for inspiration; the inspiration of all evangelistic work; his life and work are an inspiration for all; her beautiful solos were an inspiration to all. We read of inspiring reports of so many meetings, conventions, addresses and books. Indeed, according to present custom of writing and speaking, I may almost say, all things that some parties do and say are "inspired," or "inspiring." "Inspiration" has come to have almost as many meanings as the term "conscience" (see Standard Dictionary), or the word "baptidzo" (see Ditzler on Baptism, page 101). The following adopted quotations I make from the Boston Monday Lectures on "Transcendentalism:"

Theodore Parker's chief intellectual fault was inadequate attention to definition. He failed to distinguish between intuition and instinct and between inspiration and illumination. He did not carefully distinguish from each other inspiration and dictation. Plainly there is a difference between the two. Orthodoxy believes the Bible to be inspired; and her definition of inspiration is the gift of infallibility in teaching moral and religious truth (page 92). But, by inspiration thus defined, orthodoxy [in inspiration?] does not mean dictation. . . . The astounding fact is, that the Bible is the only book in the world that will bear full and permanent translation into life. The careless and superficial sometimes do not distinguish from each other the biblical record and THE BIBLICAL INCULCATION. I know that fearful things are recorded in the Bible concerning men who, in some respects, were approved of God; but it is the biblical inculcation I pronounce free from adulterate elements, not the biblical record. The inculcation of the Scriptures, from the beginning to the end of the sixty-six pamphlets, is known by experience to be free from adulterate elements; and I defy the world to show any disease that has ever come from the absorption in the veins of the ages of the biblical inculcation. . . . There is something very peculiar about this one book, in the incontrovertible fact that its inculcations are preserved from such error as would work out, in experience, moral disease in the world. . . By plenary inspiration, orthodoxy does not mean verbal inspiration. . . . If the Bible is written by dictation or verbal inspiration, as Theodore Parker often taught that orthodox scholarship supposes that it is, even then it would not be at all clear that any translation of the Bible is verbally inspired. If anything was dictated, of course, only the original was dictated. In places I believe we have in the Bible absolute dictation, and yet inspiration and dictation are two things; and the difference between them is worth pointing out when orthodoxy is held responsible for a caricature of her definition, and when men are thrown into unrest on this point, as if they were called on to believe self-contradiction. The fact that all portions of the Bible are inspired does not imply at all that King James' version, or the Hindostanee, or any other is dictated by the Holy Ghost. . . . Sometimes, as in the Decologue and the Sermon on the Mount, and in the transfigured psalm and prophecy, it well may be that we have in the original, words which could not by the will of man.

In the Christian Review, Vol. I. No. 2., is found an article from the pen of H. J. Anderson. He declares himself "a believer in the full inspiration of the Bible." I judge he is not in sympathy with Joseph Cook on his "three degrees of inspiration." Let us here entertain some of his reflections: A very common objection brought against the plenary inspiration of the Holy Scriptures is, that the insignificancy of many of the details needed not the divine wisdom of the Holy Spirit to record them, whilst they seem but the natural and ordinary appendages to a composition, such as man in similar circumstances would have made. This objection is often made, not only by the daring infidel, or the inquisitive sceptic, but also by those who have professed faith in the character of Jesus, upon the testimony of the divine writings of prophets and apostles. . . When human wisdom is to be made the judge and arbiter in cases of this character, we may soon bid farewell to the divinity of the whole book. All I have to say is, I have not so learned Christ. . . . The mass of the people, in the simplicity and blessedness of their faith, believe in the full inspiration of the divine record. . . . He believes in the inspiration of the book more than of its writers. That God selected the very men he wished, separated them from their mothers' womb for his purposes, and caused them to say and write the very things he wished them to say and write. They say it each in his own style, but it was because they had a view capable of such a style that God selected them instead of others, and superintended (italics supplied) them in that style with the Holy Spirit's inspiration (inbreathing) so that all they had said, every jot and title, is the Word, not of Moses, John or Paul, but of God. The book we call the Bible is in all its parts and details the book of the Spirit, the book of God. Here I plant my weary feet; weary with searching by human reason and inhuman teaching for peace and safety in time and eternity; and in every sentence of the divine volume I see a divine declaration and seek to understand it, knowing that however humble or humiliating it may appear there is divine truth in it, and its sense and connection, suited to some one or other of the ten thousand varying circumstances of man. . . . The Rev. J. B. Jeter, D. D., says: Objections to plenary inspiration are founded, as far as we have observed, not on any scriptural statements on the subject, but on supposed mistakes and errors in the sacred writings. These relate chiefly to the creation of the world, the origin of man, the misquotations and misrepresentations of the Old Testament Scriptures by the writers of the New. The full discussion of these subjects would fill a volume. A few points we may briefly notice. The reader may see the discussion of this subject in a volume entitled, "Baptist Doctrines," edited by the Rev. Charles A. Jenkins, of North Carolina, published in St. Louis, by Chauncey R. Barnes, 1880. The original quotation: "Inspiration (from the Latin, inbreathing). The supernatural influence of God's Spirit on the human mind, by which prophets, apostles and other sacred writers were qualified to record divine truth without error. Others hold that it is only a divine impression on the mind by which the understanding is informed" (Smith's Bible Dictionary). Again, "Supernatural influence tending to raise the soul above itself; the resulting elevation; an impression received in this elevated state" (Hurst's New Nutall's Dictionary). Another says, "Divine infusion into the mind."

The extremist in "full inspiration" believes every verse in the Bible, every word of it, every syllable of it, every letter of it, is the direct utterance of the Holy Spirit, and that the Bible writers are only the penmen of his dictation; that the words of Scripture were immediately dictated by the Holy Spirit; that the inspired documen throughout is faultless—faultless equally in its form and essence, in its spirit and letter. . . . This, as was my former article, is written for "the more un-learned," the novice in the study of this subject.

These quotations have been made in the hope that some of "the little children" in the school of Christ may be aided somewhat in their investigations. Perhaps there are few who take the extreme view of "verbal inspiration;" may be, if we really knew our position, we would be found advocating some of the several gradation theories. I may write one other article.

THE CURSE OF COMMERCIALISM.

JOSEPH F. NEWTON.

Every one is impressed with the commercial development of our time. That we are living in an era of unparalleled industrial activity and prosperity is unquestionable. Increased facilities for intercommunication and transportation have drawn the nations into a closer fellowship and made the exchange of commodities possible and profitable; growing civilization is constantly multiplying men's wants; intimate knowledge of other countries and climates reveals the source from which these desires may be gratified, and international agreements and protection insure the safe transference of products. Thus the world is transformed into a vast market, where individuals and nations buy and sell and get gain. It may be that the discovery of this mutual dependence has contributed much to the decay of national prejudices and the cultivation of that beautiful fraternalism that characterizes our generation. Confidence is the soul of commerce and the life of brotherhood. Our new industrial conditions have done away with the old individual independence in labor and trade and compelled concentration of forces and a growing dependence among the members of society. We believe that the contingencies of modern industrialism, drawing men together into new combinations and complications, into closer assotion and more delicately organized relations, will lead to the discovery of those sacred moral laws of our social organism in its unity, the deeper revelation of man to man. The co-operation of men in the enterprise of life may be a divine means to reveal their inherent human oneness, and their confederation into clubs, companies, guilds and fraterities may be the prophecy of a larger brotherhood, deeper than they all—the goal of all. The blessings growing out of our commercial expansion and prosperity are many and valuable, but it is not an unmixed good.

History shows that eras of great material prosperity have not usually been coincident with noble thought, high art and pure religion. The commercial climate seems to be incompatible with these finer flowers of life, and the commercial spirit appears unfriendly to intellectual and spiritual attainments. Voluptuous calm and the imbecile apathy of industrial prosperity destroys that spirit which inspires great literatures and heroic deeds. Honest gain easily degenerates into selfish greed, and selfishness is antagonistic to all things great and noble. It clips the wings of the human imagination and chains the mind to the cold and stubborn facts of existence; it freezes the fine genius and romance and heroism; it blights the divine beauty of poetry and music and eloquence, and crucifies religion upon a cross of greed. As some one has said, "Selfishness, by whatever name we call it, by whatever religious or social philosophy we disguise or defend it, is the essence of sin. It is the outrage against which nature lifts up its voice, and which has desecrated and laid waste the garden of the Lord with hands of violence. It is the bitter bondage of the race to falsehood. Its clanking chains deafen us to the voice of God and the cry of our brothers for help; they beat and bruise and gall the soul in its every attempt to rise to the realization of divine ideals." Nothing so degrades and imbrutes men as selfishness, and nothing so blinds them to the things of highest importance and to the obligation to humanity. It is the one thing from which men need deliverance. That commercialism cultivates selfishness is self evident. It is a tacitly accepted plank in the social and economic platform that a man is justified in committing any injustice within certain general legal limitations. Thus the commercial world becomes a vast gladiatorial scene, where the battle is for the strongest and the race for the swiftest. And if, in the stress and strain of conflict, the strongest has attained the supremacy by crushing the weaker antagonist, it is reckoned legitimate for him to keep his iron heel on the neck of his voiceless and bleeding competitors and be henceforth master of the spoils, so long as this is done within the customary limits of civil restrictions. This is the modification of an ancient aphorism to read: "Might is right in business and in war."

Long-continued prosperity of trade based upon self interest completely enervates the moral constitution of a community. Both historically and in the very nature of things, the inevitable tendency of selfish trade is to weaken moral principle and destroy moral courage, to sacrifice public good in the interest of private gain, for corruption and cowardice are related as antecedents and consequence in the logic of life. It was not an empty phrase when the sagacious Napoleon denounced the British Empire as a nation of shopkeepers; he was statesman enough to know the fruits of material success. As some one has so aptly said, "The tendency of selfish trade is demoralizing, because its eagerness for peace constantly lowers the moral ideal. The private pocket inevitably becomes the arbiter of public policy. Plausibility supplants honesty, sophistication takes the place of simplicity, and the certain evils of the existing condition are resolutely preferred to the splendid possibilities of progress." How plain and unmistakable is the lesson of history in this regard. The great nations of the past, the record of whose ruin we read with so much interest, were grand and invincible so long as private interests were subordinates to public welfare and ironclad legions marched forth to battle and to conquest. But when victory crowned their arms, and peace with its luxurious languor and magnificent monotony obtained, men listened to the subtle and seductive sophistries of self-interest, and their mournful disintegration began. Greece faded away when rumors of war had ceased. Imperial Rome was invulnerable from without, but succumbed to decay within, and the historian records its pathetic "Decline and Downfall." Strong, indeed, is the community that, having stemmed the storm of national adversity and secured its independence, can stand the test of continued prosperity.

To be more specific and enumerate the results of the commercial spirit, we may indicate that it fosters low conceptions of man. Just now we are in the midst of the most stupendous revolution ever accomplished in the history of the world's industrial growth. It is an endeavor to annihilate competition by placing the entire industrial system on a monopolistic basis. Industry is being organized into a system of feudalized co-operations, the result of which will be the most heartless and relentless scheme of industrial despotism in the annals of human labor. Commercial combination destroys individualism and shifts the responsibility for oppression and injustice from the personal conscience to the shoulders of a soulless corporation. Individual citizens lose their independence and identity and become the absolute and object slaves of these gigantic aggregations of capital—the most despicable form of slavery imaginable. Nothing could be more discouraging than to be considered a commodity of exchange, an instrument at the disposal of a capitalistic combine. It is the verdict of universal history that independence is indispensable to the development of the highest manhood, that in those countries and conditions where men are denied the inalienable opportunity to cultivate these natural and normal powers the lowest order of character prevails. It is the logic of history and reason alike that to attain the noblest society workingmen should not be forced by circumstances to engage in industries that endanger the health and life of the individual; that they should receive an ample remuneration for the maintenance of a comfortable existence; that they should have some assurance that integrity and industry will be rewarded with continuity of employment; that they should be protected from pauperism in old age. Industrial slavery, without these mitigating considerations, is unbearable. No man has the right to own his fellowmen or take advantage of his helplessness to imbrute him. And that spirit of commercialism that disregards the bonds of human brotherhood and selfishly ignores the obligations of life in the struggle for self-aggrandizement is a curse and a crime. It is this low spirit that causes the unrest and discontent in every department of life, that is gradually becoming more defiant of authority, more regardless of vested rights and more disposed to ignore all moral obligations. The wealth of the rich finds itself endangered by the poverty of the poor, to which it is indifferent; capital oppresses labor and labor strikes back at capital; class is arrayed against class and interest against interest, until selfishness seems to be the only law to which all yield implicit obedience. It would not be surprising to see the impending struggle between the gigantic capitalistic corporations and the tremendous organized combinations of labor culminate in the most terrific explosion of anarchy and revolution in the history of society.

That this condition of things should powerfully influence the entire system of civilization is inevitable. Its blighting touch is felt in every department of life. It destroys the divine sentiments of patriotism, friendship, sympathy and love; it depreciates the high accomplishments of art and oratory, music and poetry; it paralyzes the religious instincts and stupifies the spiritual intuitions and aspirations; it pollutes politics and degrades statesmanship; it corrupts society with the leprosy of avarice; it discourages scholarship and puts genius on the list of commercial commodities. But in nothing is its withering blast more conspicuous than in the wreck of those finer feelings and faiths to which we give the name religion. A distinguished thinker gives a concise and comprehensive statement of the antagonism of modern commercial life to religious culture when he says: "The conditions under which work is done are increasingly unfavorable to the cultivation of the religious spirit. Competition grows every year keener; the weaker men are pushed downward, the abler men find it harder to rise, and where time is so imperious in its claims, little thought can be spared for eternity." Meditation is fast becoming a lost art for want of time to practice it, and men's grasp upon eternal verities is correspondingly relaxed. This state of mind offers a fertile field for the propagation of the sophistries of superficial scepticism. One is constantly amazed at the complacent negativeness which characterizes the spiritual conceptions of the avarage citizen. This is a characteristic of every age when the commercial spirit predominates. It converts life into a scandalous scramble and men are so absorbed in getting a living that they have no time to live. The demands of life are so tyrannous, its strain so incessant, its excitement so intense, that men have neglected the contemplation of those solemn issues which existence involves. The din of the present drowns the voice of the future, the crude and obtrusive material world obscures the vision of that higher realm, and God and duty and immortality fade away like "the baseless fabric of a dream." Sunday is spent in slumberous reaction and pleasant recreation from the stress and strain of the busy week; religion is considered a luxury which only the rich and leisure classes can afford, commercialism encourages materialism and pessimism, and life is overcast with gloom.

What of the remedy? Instantly we are surrounded by a mass of reformers and instantaneous world-regenerators, each proposing a patent panacea for the ills of society. One is constantly astonished at the vagaries of which the human mind is capable and the facility with which fanatics solve the most perplexing problems of social philosophy. The egotism of pseudo-reformers in idealizing themselves as philanthropists is only surpassed by the audacity with which they propound their preposterous propositions.

All national reform must begin and end with the individual. Remedial legislation piled mountain high only serves to complicate the relations and increase the friction of classes and ranks artificially separated. Even education is impotent to elevate man from the sensuous to the spiritual sphere of existence and bring him into a higher and more harmonious environment. No scientific developments, no modification of the external forms of government, from monarchy to democracy, or from democracy to anarchy can possibly vitalize and purify the social system. The cause of the evil is too deep and too radical in its nature to be cured by legislation. Repression will not avail except to temporarily prevent outbreaks of violence; it may suppress, but it is powerless to extinguish the fires which threaten all social order. In the last analysis it will be found that the solution of these complex and vexing problems is in the realm of religion—not in the church with its scholastic and artificial theology—in a simple religion whose foundation is in the love of justice, mercy and truth—the religion of love and duty and hope. Reforms must have their basis in improved individual character, which results only from high moral principles, and these principles can only be cultivated by the contemplation of those solemn issues and hopes which religion inculcates, the awakening of those lofty aspirations which it incites and the exercise of these moral restraints which it imposes. Let the simple religion of love to God and to man be enthroned in the hearts of men and immanent in their lives, and the industrial slavery that stains our age with an indelible disgrace will be relegated to the limbo of barbarism, the literature which, under the pretense of realism and devotion to art, panders and appeals to the baser passions of the lower nature, will be swept into the rubbish heap of the world, and that high art will become the evangelist of righteousness, and the divine spirit of genius, now haunting the marketplace, will again inhabit the temple and celebrate in song and story and color the good, the beautiful and the true.

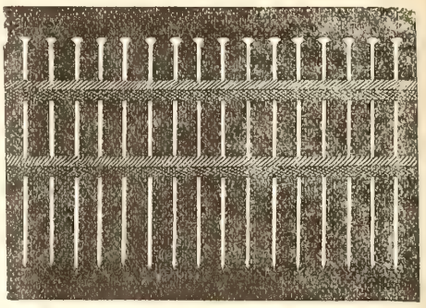
Approved Editorials.



DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I am delighted with your editorial in July 13th—"A Crowning Feature of a Great Movement," and also with your reply to a brother in the last issue on "How to be Filled with the Spirit." The power for the work of the gospel ministry is not mere zeal for our plea, but that fullness of the Spirit by which men are convinced of sin and brought into known fellowship with God. To secure the divine presence, this fullness of the Spirit, we need the consecration you refer to, and then with this the reception of the Holy Spirit as our life, strength, "all and in all." This is a present salvation. The world needs to see it as a reality. But what I want to suggest is that those brethren who see the importance of this infilling of the Spirit make an aggressive movement. Not merely write articles and preach sermons, which are good, but also hold conventions, discuss the varied phases of the spiritual life, inspirit one another and direct the attention of the world to this "crowning feature" of the last dispensation. The Disciples of Christ within the last half century have taken several advance steps. This aggressive movement would be another and indeed a "crowning feature of a great movement."

The Disciples of Christ are untrammeled by creed and are free to follow the leadings of truth and righteousness, then let us have associated effort, as in the work of temperance and missions, and thus give prominence to the special truth and intensify our own minds.

Berea, Ky. JOHN G. FEE.

[Bro. Fee's suggestion, if wisely carried out, would no doubt prove a valuable aid to the acquirement of a richer spirituality in our lives. We must first see, then walk in the light. It is fruit-bearing Christians that make the world better and heaven richer, not discussions and dissentions about words to no profit.—EDITOR]

By Way of Remembrance.

PIN POINTS WITH WHICH TO PRICK YOUR CONSCIENCE.

Did you take the offering for Church Extension last Sunday?

If not, do not fail to observe the day some Sunday in September.

Remember that upon your decision rests the life of some mission point every five years.

If we do not create a large Extension Fund, we must lose several mission points each year.

Fifteen thousand dollars is what we must get in September, in order to reach $210,000 by the Jubilee Convention.

Remember that several hundred churches refusing or neglecting to take the offering will defeat our longed-for result.

That we have 2,700 homeless churches in our brotherhood ought to spur us to great giving for Church Extension.

Remember that you can send a personal gift, even if your pastor and official board do not call for a public collection.

There are over 60 churches promised aid to build, depending largely upon the September offering. Will you stand by the board in its enlargement?

The board and secretary have done everything that could be legitimately done. The result must now rest with the pastors and churches as to a large collection.

The brotherhood should stand by the Board of Church Extension that has never lost a loan. Such business management merits the support of every missionary church in the land.

David said: "Lo, now I dwell in a house of cedar, while the ark of the Lord simply dwelleth within a tent," expressing discontent that he should provide anything better for himself than he was willing to provide for the Lord and his work.

Last year quite a number of missions, which gave great promise of usefulness when organized, got discouraged and disbanded because of no place in which to worship. Some of them offered to raise two-thirds of the cost of house and lot if our board would loan the other third. How long, O how long shall this neglect go on?

Remember, there are only three Sundays left in September, and your church should get its offering to Kansas City before the 30th of September, to go into the $15,000. Let something else be set aside and Church Extension have the right of way. Send your offering to

The Home Mission Offering.

Comparative statement of receipts to the American Christian Missionary Society for the month of August, 1899, were $5,654.75; gain $3,644.70. You will note the increase in the offerings during the past month; but there are very many churches yet to hear from that have not sent an offering to the Home Society in this her Juiblee Year. Remember, the books close September 30th. Please remit promptly that you may be numbered among the churches that helped to raise the $100,000 for Home Missions in this Jubilee Year. Send your offerings to Benj. L. Smith, Cor. Sec., Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O.

Our Budget.

—Did you make an offering for Church Extension last Sunday?

—If for any reason you failed to make an offering for Church Extension on last Sunday, fix another day in this month.

—Next month is the month of the Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati, O. The days are 13th to 20th inclusive.

—The books of all our missionary societies for the year close on the 30th day of the present month. If you have promised any one or more of them an offering it should be sent in to them before the end of this month.

—All our missionary societies are now on the home stretch for the mark set at the last convention, $150,000 for Foreign Missions, $100,000 for Home Missions; $90,000 for C. W. B. M.; $15,000 for Church Extension, and liberal support of the Christian Orphans' Home.

—"The adoption of this new arrangement" —unification of our missionary organizations and the curtailing of the number of missionary offerings—"means the throttling of all our missionary work."—Christian Standard.

A good deal better plan for "throttling all our missionary work," would be to foster the idea that our missionary boards with the aid of the secretaries, or the secretaries with the aid of the boards, are conducting mission work, and that they are inventing methods to induce the churches to assist them, and dictating the way in which they must do it. A good way to prevent such a "throttling" would be to regard the churches as engaged in doing mission work, mission boards and secretaries being agencies which they have instituted for carrying on the work. In this view of the case the churches doing the work would be supposed to know how much they ought to give and what was the best plan of raising it. How would it do to ask the churches that are doing this work if they wish to make any modifications in their present plan?

—Let it be understood that the unification of our home and foreign societies, so as to have one set of officers and committees and one convention, is quite independent of whether we shall have fewer or more collections. We might have fewer collections under the present arrangement or more under the united society, just as the churches through their representatives may determine. Naturally, however, the unification of our societies would tend to the unification of some of our collections, provided the churches think this the best way to do it and find it to be such by experience. We can surely trust the various churches to manage this detail according to their own judgment. If they are made to feel that it is their work, and that they do not need to be coaxed or scolded into supportidg it, they can be relied on to adopt the most effective plan for raising the money. A closer connection between the churches and our mission work is absolutely essential to the future growth of that work.

—"Fewer calls mean less money." Not with a church or an individual who has a missionary conscience. There is a large and increasing number of such churches and individuals among us. They do not act from impulse, but from a conscientious conviction of duty. They look over the field of our missionary needs and decide that they can give so much for this cause. They can decide this once or twice a year, and pay it in weekly or monthly or quarterly payments as will suit them best. If any church finds it can raise more money by having more calls, it is at liberty to follow that course. If others feel that they can do better for other interests by having fewer appeals, or collections, they will exercise their liberty in the matter, regardless of what the editors, boards and secretaries may say about it. Such is our liberty in Christ.

—On Saturday morning, Sept. 2nd, the following special dispatch was received at this office from Dwight L. Pendleton, Wellsburg, W. Va.: "Father went peacefully to rest at six thirty yesterday afternoon." Thus are we informed of the departue of another of the few remaining fathers of the restoration movement to the heavenly country. W. K. Pendleton, though a son-in-law of Alexander Campbell, was also his colaborer in the college, in editorial work and in the pulpit. In our issue of December 8, 1898, we presented a good picture of Dr. Pendleton to our readers with a brief statement of his life. He was then in good health at his home in Eustis, Florida. We are not yet informed of the particulars of his departure other than stated in the above dispatch. Dr. Pendleton was born in Louisa County, Virginia, Sept. 8., 1817, and was hence almost 82 years old when the call to the higher life came to him. We shall hope in due season to be able to give our readers a suitable sketch and memorial of his life.

—The home secretaries are sending out this week a large number of letters to their friends, asking for at least $1.00 to complete the $100,000 for Home Missions this year. The home office says it is receiving the heaviest mail in its history. From all over the land come congratulations and assurances of sympathy and help. All say that the American Christian Missionary Society must not fail in reaching the $100,000, and many promise help. Every one who sends in $1.00 for Home Missions will have his or her name enrolled in the Jubilee League.

—There was great rejoicing at Omaha, August 30th, on the return of the 1st Nebraska regiment from the Philippine Islands. It is said that for five minutes after the arrival of the train the long platform was a spectacle of tears, kisses and happy reunions. The greeting of the city was equally enthusiastic. Flags, handkerchiefs, bells, whistles and countless voices were mingled in one long, loud refrain of joy at the return of these gallant, brave men. If bravery, hardships and a few months of separation here on earth call forth such outbursts of joy, what must be that greeting on the other shore when the brave men and women of the Lord's army from all ages and nations are received into their everlasting habitation?

—The Outline Bible Club Course of the American Institute of Sacred Literature (Chicago, Ill.) will take for its subject this coming year the Founding of the Christian Church, a study of the Acts with the Epistles and the Revelation introduced in their probable historical relation. It is expected that fully ten thousand people will enter upon the study of this subject during the months from October to June. If the record of the past years is kept up there will be representatives of every evangelical denomination, and Unitarians, Universalists, Jews and Roman Catholics as well. In a few Women's Clubs, where the work has been pursued, all these elements have been present in the same club. The work begins properly with October, but clubs may be organized, now so as to be ready promptly.

—We call the attention of our readers to "An Open Door," in this paper, by the official board of the churches at Palo Alto, Cal. What stronger argument could be presented for the need of a large Church Extension Fund to step in at such a time and supply the need? The facts cited certainly show the importance of the field and of immediate action, and it is to be hoped that our Church Extension Board will soon be able to come to their relief.

—We recently saw a dispatch in one of our city papers, the Republic, to the effect that the Pope had ordered a more moderate course on the part of the Jesuit priests of France toward Dreyfus. If true, this is a very significant piece of news. Religious persecution sometimes reacts upon the persecutors in a way that is not soon forgotten. The undercurrent in the Dreyfus trial is getting dangerly near the surface, and now the Pope advises milder treatment, but this by no means modifies cruelty of former days.

—"The Curse of Commercialism," by Rev. Joseph F. Newton, assistant pastor of the Nonsectarian Church of this city, in this paper, is a strong article and worthy of a careful reading. It is a nonsectarian, nonpartisan article, but not non on the vital elements of a better government, purer society and a more spiritual church.

—On the 5th of the present month occurred the 83rd anniversary of the birthday of Dr. W. A. Belding, of Troy, N. Y. The occasion was made additionally joyful by the reception of a number of congratulatory letters from his friends throughout the country. Though present in spirit only, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST joins in greetings to Dr. Belding and hopes that many years may yet be added to his richly stored and useful life.

—In continuing our historical series on the Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, we have come to the organization of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and the Christian Women's Board of Missions, and from this period onward our missionary activities are conducted through these three national organizations—the American Christian Missionary Society, which is the mother society, the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Brief historical sketches of these societies will be presented by their respective corresponding secretaries—B. L. Smith, A. McLean and Miss Lois A. White. The series of articles concerning the A. C. M. S., by B. L. Smith, begins this week, and to it the attention of our readers is invited.

—Last Sunday was Church Extension Day, but as many preachers take their vacation in August, many churches either wholly omitted the offering or only partially observed it. Church Extension Day, coming as it does on the first Sunday in September, is at the disadvantage of a lack of proper preparation, for the reason stated. Also, being the last month in the year, each of the other secretaries desire to get in a final appeal which, of course, as things now stand, further detracts from Church Extension interests. And as individuals and churches are being beseiged both directly and indirectly for an offering for Home and Foreign Missions, many we fear will become confused and make no offering at all, or at least are liable to forget Church Extension. We would not have you slight either Home or Foreign Missions, but we insist that the appeal for Church Extension funds must be heard. This month is the harvest month for Church Extension, and it should be a bountiful one. Do not let the month pass without an offering for this important work.

—Labor Day was generally observed throughout the larger cities of the country, and thus again was emphasis given to its dignity and importance. If for no other reason than this the observance of the day will not go without its beneficial results. When we stop to consider how fundamental is labor in our social and civil fabric the presentation of this truth in a practical way becomes, not only allowable, but essential to its freedom and its fruits. When a country gives to labor a secondary place in its catalogue of essential factors, it invites elements of destruction to a place in its organism. The day was of course dishonored by many in an enlarged consumption of intoxcating beverages, but these abuses must not be counted against labor. The cause of labor is as worthy of public parades and public oratory as politics or religion, and is not more dishonored by abuses. We have no apology to make for ignorance and intemperance, more or less associated with every cause, but we do have a warm heart and strong words for labor and for every effort to secure for it its just place and fruits.

—In presenting the fine half-tone picture of O. A. Burgess on our first page this week we are doubly confident of an appreciated service by our readers. She who was his companion in life is to-day the head of one of our great missionary societies, a position she has filled with honor to herself, to the memory of her lamented husband, to the society and to the church for a number of years, and which she is likely to fill to the end of her earthly pilgrimage. It was the writer's privilege to have personally known O. A. Burgess as a pastor, a teacher and a defender of the faith in public discussions and to testify to his great ability in each of these departments of the Master's work. As a preacher he was eloquent; as a teacher he was scholarly; as a disputant he was a logician of the first magnitude. Some of his assaults upon error were terrific and crushing. O. A. Burgess was born in Thompson, Conn., August 26th, 1829, went to Metamora, Ill., in 1847, was baptized July 21st, 1850, graduated from Bethany College in 1854, and soon after married Miss Nannie Ledgerwood who, as stated, survives him. He was first a financial agent of Eureka College, then a member of its faculty; he served in the Civil War until his health failed, then returned to the ministry, preaching five years for the church at Washington and Metamora, Ill. In 1862 he accepted a call to the Central Church, Indianapolis, Ind., and in 1868 was made president of the Northwestern Christian University, now Butler University, at Irvington, Ind. It was during his long and faithful work in Indianapolis that the writer knew him. The cause of primitive Christianity, of Christian missions, of education and of civil and religious liberty have had few stauncher friends than O. A. Burgess, and it is unfortunate for these that failing health greatly reduced the time of his service in their behalf. He departed this life in his fifty-third year, but his memory and his impress upon the religious world will never die. For an excellent account of his busy and effective life, see "Men of Yesterday," by Thos. W. Grafton.

—In a personal letter to the editor, W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, Mo., under date of Sept. 1, from which we have permission to quote, says:

I have seen with deep regret the effort made in certain quarters to place the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in a false light as to its attitude toward the "higher criticism," to which some of our thoughtful men, old and young, are giving such close attention. I think I have never understood your position other than you have stated it in the editorial in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, this week. I do not see how any fair-minded editor or honest thinker could better state the true attitude of the nonprofessional student of those questions. That has been the position I have myself tried to maintain, and I believe I have succeeded in doing so without any very strong prejudice; I will not say without any at all. I deplore the cry of "infidelity" that has been raised against some of our most thoughtful and scholarly young men, and have absolutely no sympathy with it. At the same time I must say that I am viewing with some concern the course of a number of our younger men, and am not without real anxiety as to the outcome of their pursuit of knowledge along critical lines. Perhaps the fact that I am, in the main, a conservative in my views of higher criticism may explain my fears. No man can love and respect more than I the splendid group of young men among us who have been fitting themselves for higher service by studying special lines of truth; but how important it is that they be careful to sift the wheat from the chaff, and be sure of their ground. * *

As to the spirit that would condemn the search for facts, and would blindly accept tradition for fear of having to adopt some new view, it has never commended itself to me, and now less than ever. The disposition to brand as unbelievers those who think themselves bound to accept the newer views is unworthy of a Christian, in my opinion. And the flippant epithet of "old fogy" or "traditionalist" ought not to be scornfully applied to those who think themselves bound to hold to the older views. I think both sides have erred in this matter. I am deeply concerned that we shall all be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath or suspicion towards our brethren. Let us pray more and criticise less, be slow to accept a new theory until it has been thoroughly tested, allow to every other man the same freedom of investigation that we claim for ourselves, cherish the spirit of evangelism and make it the work of our lives to preach Christ and him crucified, and we shall not go far wrong.

—There can be no question but that there is a distinct effort in certain quarters to place this paper in a false light before the brotherhood in order to frighten timid people as to its soundness on critical questions. We are thankful to Bro Richardson for his brave word of defense and no less for his candid word of caution. We are trying to keep in sympathetic touch with the younger class of scholars and thinkers among us, and we are glad to testify that, with rare exceptions, they have been prudent both in accepting and presenting new theories or views. There is always need, however, for the word of caution Bro. R. has given, not only among the younger class of writers, but among older ones as well. There are always the two dangers—one from stagnation and inhospitality to new ideas, the other from yielding essential truth, along with the older view, in an inordinate fondness for new things. Perhaps more people are exposed to the first danger than there are to the second, but it is vastly in the interest of a sane and moral progress that those who lead do not lead too fast, and especially that they do not lead in the wrong direction. To avoid these two extremes has ever been the steadfast aim and policy of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, as its most intelligent readers will testify.

—We call attention to the announcement of the "Grecian Art Tableaux and Concert Company" elsewhere in this paper. The central figure of this company is Elizabeth Flower Willis, one of the best impersonators the public has yet seen. The entire entertainment is of her own designing and is pitched on a plane of refined pleasure that is rarely attained in other entertainment companies.

—Bro. Jones notes the following typographical errors in his reply to Bro. Shepherd's article last week:

I did not say that Bro. Shepherd was "preaching" his man of straw, but punching him. I did not say at the close of my article last week that there was an "argument" between God the Father and man the child, but agreement.

—The Texas letter, which should have appeared in this paper, is held over to the next issue that it may be accompanied with a picture of the new and elegant house of worship recently dedicated at Greenville, Texas, of which the letter treats. We could not get the cut made in time for this paper. We regret that other important communications and articles have to be held over to the next issue for want of space in this paper.

—"A Reader" asks for the poem in full of which one stanza appeared in our C. W. B. M. number, July 27th, in the opening of the article headed "Twenty-five Beautiful Years," by Helen E. Moses. In reply to the question Sister Moses says that the poem was published in Scribner's magazine when edited by Dr. Holland, but that she does not remember the title of poem nor the date of its appearance. "A Reader" will have to address Scribner's for further information about the poem.

—DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—As a life member of both societies and a hearty supporter of every missionary effort I want to add my indorsement of your plea for a unification of our missionary interests. Some of us have been ignoring the present distracting divisions for years. L. E. MURRAY.
Irvington, Ind.

—Rev. J. R. Henson, pastor of the M. E. Church in Clarendon, Texas, and editor of a paper published weekly, in that city, called The Agitator, in an article on "Humbugs," closes with the following advice to all persons in consultation with hypnotic, magnetic, or any other mental or Christian Science doctor which he, not without reason, says is fair to all parties:

"Pay only when cured and not one cent before." Never pay in advance, and if they won't take your case on these conditions (and they won't) you may know they are what we have said they are, frauds.

—In commenting on what Ananias said to Saul of Tarsus, the Journal and Messenger says:

Paul is nowhere represented as saying to another what Ananias said to him. Indeed, he who came to Ananias did not tell him to say to Saul what he did say. It is the only instance in which such language is used, and it is too much to believe that such a formula for salvation was of divine authority, and yet no use made of it by the apostles except in that one case. Certainly, no faithful and intelligent minister of the gospel would dare to go to the people with that formula to-day.

We are surprised at such reasoning by our esteemed contemporary. Strange, indeed, that the Lord would send Saul to an incompetent teacher to learn the way of duty. We have heard people of other faiths take such a dodge on Acts 2:38, but were quite unprepared for such a dodge from the Journal and Messenger on this Scripture. Such logic is a much shorter route to infidelity than via Higher Criticism.

—A. M. Harvuot, pastor Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, O., is proposing a school for training assistant pastors and helpers for city churches. This strikes us as a good and much-needed work. We see no reason why such a school should not be made a success, as the demand for it is certainly apparent to any student of the situation. O. H. Phillips, writing on the subject, says:

DEAR BRO. HARVUOT:—Your plan appeals to me as in every way a worthy one. The pastor needs efficient helpers to insure success in church building. Trained and consecrated women will give a pastor the service he needs in attaining his ideals.

J. H. Fillmore, of Cincinnati, O., says:

MR. A. M. HARVUOT—My Dear Brother: I am pleased to know that you contemplate starting a school of pastoral helpers. I don't know of a greater need than such "helpers" as you have in mind for our cities, and I know of no one so well qualified as yourself to take the lead in this matter. I feel sure that the mere announcement of your intention will bring general approval and a full class of students.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Hattress H. Shick is in a good meeting at Selmaville, Ill.

F. M. Green will close his pastoral work at Kent, O., Dec. 1, 1899. He contemplates a a trip into the Southern states for a few months.

Alvin E. Hill, of Poe, Ind., would like to correspond with any church wanting a pastor. He is 29 years of age, married and prefers work in Indiana or Ohio.

The church in Muncie, Ind., has extended a unanimous call to J. P. Myers to continue as their pastor at an increased salary. The church is in a prosperous state.

Rufus Hopkins, a cousin of the assistant editor, who resides at Ridgeway, Mo., called at this office on last Thursday during a business trip to the city.

Jasper Armstrong, of Sulphur Springs, Texas, who is now battling with disease in the infirmary at Terrell, Texas, writes that he is hopeful of recovery.

R. J. Tydings, of Washington, D. C., has an interesting article in this paper calculated to increase one's appreciation of "Home and Native Land."

A. C. Eaton, evangelist, now at Lindley, Mo., will be glad to answer calls for protracted meetings anywhere in North Missouri or Iowa. Write to him for terms.

Stephen Jewell, of Granite Pass, Ore., suggests that the preachers of the United States, on the first Sunday in October, preach a peace sermon from Isaiah 2:4.

Frank H. Marshall, of Garden City, Minn., has become a member of the faculty of Add-Ran University, Waco, Tex., and recently removed to that place from his home in Minnesota.

The Fourth Christian Church, of this city, is publishing a weekly "Church Bulletin." It is in good taste and will doubtless serve the church and its pastor, Bro. McFarland, a good purpose.

J. V. Coombs had to close his meeting in Chicago, Aug. 25, on account of sickness, but hopes to be able to begin his meeting at Ingraham, Ill., Sept. 4.

Robert Moffett, of Cleveland, Ohio, announces that he has received advance subscribers enough for his proposed book of sermons to assure him in proceeding to publish the book. It is now in the printers' hands and will soon appear.

L. J. Marshall, pastor of the church in Palmyra, Mo., returned Aug. 31st from a month's vacation in Colorado Springs. He says that he is greatly benefited by the rest. He began his second year's pastorate Sept 3rd.

W. R. Burbridge has accepted evangelistic work for the ninth Kansas district, and requests any congregation in that district wanting a meeting to address him in care of Bro. Thompson, Hill City, Kan.

W. B. Craig, Chancellor Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, has recently returned from a tour of three weeks in the West. This explains the failure to receive an article from him for our college number, as we thought.

Wm. Durban, our London corresbondent, will sail for the United States this month. He is coming to America to attend the great convention in Cincinnati in October. it is reported to us that other English preachers may also be present at the convention.

Claris Yeuell, of Alabama, will spend a season in Wisconsin, preaching and lecturing. One of his popular lectures is entitled "On the Summits of the Sunny South," which he is delivering in the interest of his mission in Alabama. For lectures or meetings address Bro. Yuell, care C. G. McNeill, 670 33rd St., Milwaukee, Wis.

S. M. Martin has removed from Oakland, Cal., to 3531 Bell Ave., this city. He is now holding his second meeting in Plattsburg, Mo. V. E. Ridenour has charge of the singing. He says, "Will be in our big tent by Wednesday." During his former meeting in 1891 at Plattsburg he had 375 additions. After the Jubilee Convention he will go to Huntington, W. Va.

Sister Younkin, of this city, so widely known for her work in helping to maintain the Christian Orphans' Home and who has been sorely afflicted for the past two years, is now in a serious condition at her home. There seems to remain but little if any hope of her recovery. This will be very sad news to a host of very sincere and sympathizing friends. Sister Younkin is the friend of the widow and the orphan.

W. A. Moore, of Webster City, Iowa, is announced to preach for the Beulah Church, this city, next Sunday.

J. W. Holsapple, pastor of the church at Sherman, Texas, is publishing a local paper of eight pages, called Christian Visitor. It is a monthly, and well filled with news and literature calculated to interest and edify the church.

Miss Bertha Marshall will leave her home in this city to begin her trip to India on the 27th of this month. Prior to her departure she is visiting a number of the churches in this city to their edification and delight. Her father is our city evangelist and is doing a good work in Carondelet.

W. A. Wheery has accepted the call of the First Christian Church of Norman, Okla., for another year. He is said to be doing a good work for the cause of Christ in the "Athens" of Oklahoma, the university town of the territory; 74 additions, including the Boen meeting, since Jan. 1, 1899.

William Remfrey Hunt, missionary to China, is now returning from London to his post at Nanking, per S. S. "Himalaya," with his wife. Their voyage will require six weeks' time. Letters addressed to them at Nanking should be sent in care of the "Imperial Chinese Post."

Ben F. Hervey is now at Ritzville, Wash., where he is trying to organize the few Disciples of that place for work. Of Ritzville he says it is destined to be the greatest wheat market on the N. P. R. R. This county, he says, is selling farming land as low as 50 cents per acre.

C. A. Young's work at the University of Virginia has become so important that he has received an appointment from the University to an instructorship in Hebrew, which makes him at once a member of the faculty and opens the way for the introduction of biblical discipline in the Universty itself.—Christian Oracle.

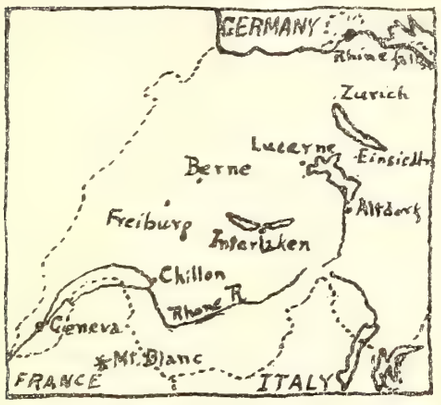
A DELIGHTFUL ENTERTAINMENT.

If the church desires to attract the attention of the young people more than do the theater and other places of worldly amusement, it must furnish them entertainment at home.

It has been the great aim of Elizabeth Flower Willis to prepare a program for her Grecian Art Tableau and Concert Company that will not only be entertaining and amusing, but also of a highly elevating and artistic nature: in this it is universally acknowledged that she has been grandly successful.

Their new program consists of Mandolin and Guitar Duetts, Vocal and Violin Solos, Illustrated Recitations, Illustrated Songs, Readings, Impersonations and some thirty or forty beautiful Tableaux under powerful colored calcium lights.



By communicating at once with Maurice Willis, Mgr., 20 Broad St., New York City, this company may be secured while in the West.

Wheeling Through Europe—V.

THE FIRST WEEK IN SWITZERLAND.

Switzerland, where we entered it from Southern Germany, does not look as one expects Switzerland to look. It is hard to resist the impression that snow-clad peaks ought to be present to usher the traveler into this land of Alps, and that beetling precipices ought fairly to overhang the boundary line. As a matter of fact one sees only a broad, rolling plain, bounded on the south by a line of low hills, beyond which lies the Rhine. The custom officials professed great severity at first and were going to demand a deposit as a guarantee that the wheels were not for sale, but after a polyglot argument they relented. Later, when we entered France, we failed to find any custom officer or office at the frontier and didn't know when we crossed the boundary line, and when we returned to Switzerland we were delayed only a moment, and no leading questions asked.

It is expected to rain frequently in Switzerland and, true to the traditions, a thunder storm came dashing down the road at us before we were a mile over the line. Wind, rain and hail did their worst for half an hour and a cottage in the neighboring village was struck by lightning and began to burn. We went to the fire to get dry and had the pleasure of seeing a Swiss volunteer fire department in full operation. There were thirty-five doughty firemen arrayed in shining new helmets, and they were so busy admiring themselves that they had no time to devote to the fire. A youth, who held the hose and played on the crowd whenever anybody happened to be working the pump, did good service, though it was scarcely necessary, for the rain had already made the crowd wet enough to be entirely inflammable. Either there was no captain or they were all captains, and they devoted themselves to argumentation in a manner which suggested that the volunteer fire department was only one form of the village debating society. In short, the cottage burned down and nearly everything in it was lost.

A few miles farther on we passed through a convenient gap in that line of hills and came to the famous Falls of the Rhine at Neuhausen. I always approach a celebrated waterfall with fear and trembling, lest the reality should not equal the expectation, but the Rhine Falls are as good as their reputation. They are not high and the total drop of a hundred feet is broken into so many steps that it is more like a very steep set of rapids than a genuine cataract. But the current is so swift, the volume of water is so great and the whole river is churned into such a mass of foam that the effect is as of a force at once impetuous and irresistible. Niagara is vastly larger, but slow, and many a little waterfall is swifter, but comparatively feeble; but few can vie with the Falls of the Rhine for speed and power combined. A large rock rises in the midst of the stream at the foot of the fall and one is rowed out to it in a slender gondola. It looks like a dizzy undertaking, but is said to be quite safe. I spent an hour watching the boatmen fighting their way with their little craft through waves and foam, in the expectation of seeing something happen. But nothing happened. The falls are well harnessed to furnish water power for many mills, but happily without seriously marring their scenic value.

From Schaffhausen, which is only a mile from the falls, we journeyed south toward Zurich and stopped over night at a village inn midway. As an inn it possessed no special characteristics to distinguish it from a German house of the same class, but it served to give us an introduction to the linguistic peculiarities of German Switzerland. The country has no language of its own, but the several cantons use German, French or Italian, according to their proximity to one or the other of these countries. The German that is spoken among the country people is a most appalling patois; I have reason to suspect that the French of the western cantons is not of Parisian purity, and it is to be doubted whether the Italian, is much better, though that is a mere guess. At all events one who is not notably fluent in any of those tongues cannot always tell at once which of the three languages is being attempted. Worse still, the three are apt to be very badly mixed, as in one case in the upper Rhone valley where, on entering a shop to make some purchases, I addressed the woman in German, received my reply in French and got my change in Italian money. But this is anticipating. In Northern and Eastern Switzerland there is no language but very bad German. It is a comfort for the traveler to persuade himself, when he fails to make himself understood, that it is because the other man does not speak the language correctly. There was a girl who kept a lemonade stand in a small town. We partook of her wares and then undertook to bargain about the price. The girl not only spoke Swiss German in all the manifold imperfections, but also had some kind of defect in her vocal organs which ruffled her speech without retarding it. This personal equation in addition to all the national peculiarities made about the hardest combination I ever came against and really left us no chance at all in the argument. Finally, it occurred to me that if I spoke English as fast as she spoke her horrible lingo the result couldn't be any worse than a drawn battle. It dazed her a little at first, but she braced up to the situation wonderfully well and we both talked against time for the space of five minutes. It was a dead beat so far as talk was concerned, but I didn't want to run the risk of cheating a poor girl, so I gave her the amount she seemed to be trying to demand. I believe it is said that the only important rule for a street fight is to strike first. So, in a street argument with a foreigner the battle is half won if you can get the other party to admit that he doesn't understand English and then talk to him in it. Nothing makes a man appear at less advantage than to stand helplessly asserting that he can't understand. Give the other fellow something he can't understand and make him admit it!

At Zurich one gets his first real panoramic view of the Alps, though they claim one at the Falls of the Rhine, and may perhaps have it in perfectly clear weather. Even at Zurich it is distant and low, but there is no mistaking the fact that genuine mountains are there. Zurich itself is a large, thriving and beautiful city, situated, like Geneva and Lucerne, at the end of a lake with a river flowing out through the city. Like Geneva, too, it was the home of one of the great reformers, but Zurich is almost as destitute of memorials of Zwingli as Geneva is of memorials of Calvin. Zwingli came down from the mountain parish of Einsiedeln to the cathedral church at Zurich; we reversed the route by riding from Zurich along the shore of the lake of the same name and climbing up to Einsiedeln. This was our first taste of Alpine climbing, but it was a mild and easy introduction. We reached Einsiedeln in the evening and stopped at the "Inn of the Pilgrims." This town contains one of the most famous and popular shrines in all Europe. A hundred and fifty thousand persons annually make the pilgrimage of this out-of-the-way village in the mountains to visit the miraculous black image of the Virgin, which is supposed to be almost as efficacious as Our Lady of Lourdes in curing the sick and lame. The shrine is in an immense and gorgeous church, which was proclaimed to us as the most beautiful church in Europe. It was certainly impressive when we first visited it, late at night, deserted and dark save for the votive candles of the faithful burning before the various altars, but when viewed by the common light of day its grandeur dwindled into mere grandness. Three-fourths of the buildings in the town are hotels for the entertainment of pilgrims, and the others are shops for the sale of crucifixes and countless other "objects of devotion." In front of the church are two curved arcades, like those of St. Peter's, occupied by venders of similar wares, and the salesmen (who are all women) drive their business with the keenness of auctioneers. The whole town of 9,000 people is absolutely dependent for its existence upon that little gold-covered, diamond-studded, black image. The situation was just the same in Zwingli's day, four centuries ago, that it is now, and it is not strange that, when he stood in the church and denounced the worship of images in general and the adoration of this image in particular, a tumult was raised like that of the silversmiths at Ephesus.

Leaving Einsiedeln, which is high but still in a valley, we were soon involved in our first struggle with a genuine mountain road. There was a stretch of five miles where we had to walk up, then the crossing of the ridge where we came suddenly upon our first near view of snow-clad Alps, the Rigi and all the mountains about the lakes of Lucerne and Uri, then six miles of steep, winding desert, part walk and part coast, to the shore of the lake. There is no doubt now about being in the Alps, and if there were it would be dispelled as one starts south on the Axenstrasse along the shore of Lake Uri, which is the eastern arm of Lake Lucerne. The mountains rise like walls on both sides of the lake and the road for eight miles is hewn in the cliff, sometimes at the water's edge and again rising by an easy grade to a height of three hundred feet. The great St. Gotthard Railway winds its way along this same cliff through cuts and tunnels. At the end of this narrow lake the mountains seem to cut off every hope of escape except over their white summits, but as we ride, gradually a winding valley discloses itself, up which we proceed for twenty miles with only an occasional serious hill. But the swift current of the little River Reuss, which flows down the valley, and the corkscrew tunnels of the St. Gotthard Railway assure us that we are gradually climbing. At Goeschenen the railway plunges into its nine-mile tunnel to emerge on the other side where the Alps slope down toward Italy. From this point on the wheelman needs nothing to tell him that he is climbing. With almost incredible windings the road makes its toilsome way up a steep and rugged granite gorge. The cyclist need not be ashamed to turn pedestrian here, and even then the four-horse diligences are easily left behind. The gorge narrows as it ascends. Iron gates are set in the wall so that the way may be completely barred to hostile invaders. Forts, half of masonry and half of living rock, command the entrance and rapid-fire guns show their slender muzzles at points where one gun might stop an army. Passing through the gateway of this granite gorge, one comes suddenly into a broad, green, level valley lying a thousand feet above the center of the great tunnel. All the climbing so far has been only the approach to the three great passes which lead out of the valley, east to Chur, south over the St. Gotthard to the Italian lakes and west over the Furka to the valley of the Rhone. For the present we choose the last for a circuit of four hundred and fifty miles through Western Switzerland. Later we will return this way, over the Axenstrasse and up the valley of the Reuss again, and over the St. Gotthard to Italy.

It was a welcome relief to be able to stretch our legs and make fast time through this high-lying valley, but soon the ascent began again, and again there was much walking to be done. The view increases in extent and the scenery in grandeur with every bend of the road. Snowfields appear at first far above us, then around us, then far below us. It was intensely hot until the sun set prematurely behind the towering mountains, but we snowballed each other, ate ice from the miniature glaciers which we passed and pushed on up the pass. It was nearly dark when we reached the top of Furka Pass, 8,000 feet above the sea and 6,500 above our starting-point for that morning. After an excellent dinner at a mountain hotel, which is an honor to its profession, we went out to ramble about the mountains and view the Rhone Glacier by the light of the full moon. Close to the hotel is a narrow edge not ten feet wide from which the valley slopes down both ways. On both sides there is snow which, melting, sends a stream one way into the Reuss, the Rhine and the North Sea; the other into the Rhone and the Mediterranean. The real source of the Rhone River is the Rhone Glacier, a mass of ice several miles long, from which issues the stream almost at the top of Furka Pass. Seen by moonlight, the glittering peaks of the Bernese Alps and the end of the still more glittering glacier made a picture not to be described or reproduced. Next morning we spent some hours exploring the glacier, which was even more interesting upon closer acquaintance than it had been at a distance. (The picture herewith reproduced shows the Rhone valley looking down from the glacier.) Down the valley from the beginning of it to Martiguy, where the river turns sharply to the northwest, is an easy and pleasing ride, practically all downhill for ninety miles. The scenery gradually becomes more tame, and at the same time one has an opportunity to observe the life of a Swiss agricultural district. Here, as in Germany, one of the most striking phenomena is the disposition of society to accord to the women the right to do most of the heavy work. Toward the western end of the valley French becomes the prevalent language and our troubles increased on that score. A couple of young Frenchmen on bicycles challenged us to a race that day and when last seen, after ten miles of it, they were behind.

At Martiguy, where the river turns north, we left the valley and continued southwest over the Tete Noir Pass to the Valley of Chamonix and Mont Blanc. It rained. Hitherto we had enjoyed the best of weather in the mountains, but now it rained heavily off and on all day. This meant another climb on foot, but even under these adverse conditions I am prepared to admit that the Tete Noir is the most beautiful pass in Switzerland, so far as my observation extends. Besides, there is this advantage in a rainy day on a bicycle trip, that when one is as wet as he can get and his wheel is so muddy that no more mud will stick on, there is no longer anything for him to fear of the weather except earthquake and lightning stroke. So, in this reckless state of mind we coasted down the muddy road into the valley of Chamonix at the foot of Mont Blanc. The valley was full of seething clouds like a teakettle full of steam, but presently the clouds opened slightly and the first of the four glaciers of Mont Blanc shone through. Then the second appeared, the famous Mer de Glace, and finally the summit of Mont Blanc itself burst into view. After that I don't know whether it rained or not, but we stopped at Chamonix that night at the foot of the highest mountain in Europe. Next morning it was still raining, and after waiting in vain until noon for it to clear off, we rode on, fifty miles, to Geneva.

Cleaning Silver.

Instead of scouring and rubbing each piece of silver separately, the whole service can be cleaned in a few minutes as effectively. After each meal the silver should be put in a pan (kept especially for the purpose), and covered with lukewarm water, to which a teaspoonful of Gold Dust Washing Powder is added; set the pan on the range until the water gets to boiling point, then lift out each piece with a wire spoon and lay on a soft linen cloth, wiping them quickly with a chamois skin. The pieces so cleaned will be highly polished and look like new.

New York Letter.

The great Prohibition cyclone in the person of the Hon. John G. Woolley struck the Sing Sing camp yesterday. Immense audiences greeted the distinguished speaker at both the afternoon and evening services, and deeply were they interested while Mr. Woolley poured forth broadside after broadside into the non-prohibition elements in the churches. The afternoon address was an hour and a half long and was one of the most incisive, convincing and eloquent ever made at this famous camp ground. Mr. Woolley says his distinctive mission is to that great and good class of men within the Church of Christ who do not see aright as to their individual and personal responsibility on the question of the liquor traffic. In his addresses here he placed the awful responsibility of the American saloon's existence, not on the minister, or the foreigner, or the saloonkeeper, or the brewer, or the party boss, or the old political parties, but upon the moral, praying, upright Christian men who on election day train with the saloonkeepers, bums and party bosses. He compelled hundreds of men to face the issue and look at themselves and measure with him the distance between the awful ravages of the infamous saloons and themselves. In reply to the oft-repeated excuse that we can not stop the liquor business, even though we vote for Prohibition, he said it may be we can not, but it just takes me a half a minute on election day to put a stop to my proportion of the responsibility for it. And after all this is the sum-total of what God requires of us. He says the Lord will give us victory in this contest whenever there are enough men he can entrust with the responsibilities that grow out of the success of the Prohibition cause. Mr. Woolley declares that the outlook for the great issue of the Prohibition movement all through the North and West was never so bright as it is now. May the Lord and good men hasten that glad day when our beloved land shall be free from the blighting curse of rum!

Since writing the last letter I have a communication from Bro. E. L. Kelland, 24 North 7th St., Newark, N. J., informing me of the effort being made in that important city of more than 2,00,000 souls to establish a church after the primitive order set forth in the New Testament. The number of the Disciples known to exist in that city is small, but it is confidently believed that many are there who in other places have affiliated with us, and who if they could be found would be pleased to do so again. Will any one, therefore, who may happen to know the name of a Disciple living near Newark, N. J., or a suburb, please communicate the same to Bro. Kelland at the address given above? A church of the Disciples should have been inaugurated in Newark years ago, and now that a start is about to be made it should receive all possible encouragement. It is my purpose to go over and look into the advisability of establishing a church in Newark early in the autumn, and to assist all I may be able in the work.

The Congress of Zionists, now being held at Basle, Switzerland, is attracting considerable attention from the Hebrews of this city, where the object of the movement, the resettling of the Jews in Palestine, is regarded with decidedly mixed feelings. It is reported that 2,000,000 of that race, or one-eighth of the Hebrews of the world, are ready to start for that land of their fathers as soon as the way is made ready for them; but few of these would-be emigrants, however, would be found from America. However great the sentimental inducements may be, the practical difficulties are many and grave. The Holy Land would have to be purchased from the Turkish Empire, which would be a matter hard to negotiate, as the Sultan is an avaricious sovereign. And when this were e the new Hebrew race would have to be put under the governmental protection of England or this country, and this step would arouse the jealousy of Europe and Asia. Some also think multitudes of Christians in many lands would protest against the putting of the places sacred to Christian history, such as the Holy Sepulchre, the Mount of Olives and Calvary into the hands of a race whose religion denies all sacredness to Christianity. And in case all these difficulties had been surmounted the form of government for this new nation would in all probability prove a cause of everlasting internal disturbance. The rabbies would want the old hierarchy restored with a ruling priesthood; American, French and Swiss Hebrews would contend for a republic; Spanish, German, Austrian and Russian Jews would plead for a monarchical form of government. These difficulties have all been discussed at the Zionist Congress and disposed of, no doubt, to the satisfaction of all the delegates, among whom Prof. Richard J. H. Gottheil, of this city, is an untiring leader. Some students of Old Testament prophecy think they see in this movement the coming fulfillment of many important predictions concerning the Hebrew race becoming a Christian people. If the Jews as a people accept their Messiah they will become the mightiest factor yet known in the evangelization of the world. S. T. WILLIS.

Persian Letter.

DEAR BROTHER GARRISON:—I believe God in his infinite goodness created a friend and helper for those who are miserable and unfortunate among his children everywhere on earth, and I believe you will not feel tired and indignant seeing I am not ceasing to bother and annoy you continually by my sad letters of appeal for help. You cannot do that as long as you keep loyal to the glorious motto you have adopted—

"For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong;"

and therefore permit me to call once more your kind, fraternal attention to very terrible conditions in which I am sighing and suffering endlessly without a hope for help from any one of those in Iowa who sent me to this field. Of course, I cannot compel them to do their duty in helping me to come out of this unfortunate situation they ted for me. All my pleas in the past to induce their hearts to have mercy upon me failed hitherto to make them pity me, their own unfortunate brother and missionary in this field, and our condition is getting day by day more difficult and troublesome; yes, threatening to end by a disaster unless a merciful hand is ready to reach us and serve us. Oh, my dear brother, do believe me, I beseech you, in the name of the Lord, whose colaborer and minister of the gospel you are, and I implore you for his sake whom you love, adore, honor and serve with so much zeal and enthusiasm, and so mightily by your able pen in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, to believe me kindly that I did really nothing to deserve such a terrible punishment as I am enduring now, being fully as a castaway in this corner of the world and doomed to a most terrible fate, with a wife and two children left here strangers in a strange and famine-stricken land, entirely without support, helpless, friendless, destitute and hopeless! Think of it, I pray you, dear Bro. Garrison, and tell me, please, what would you do in such a dreadful situation as this? Would you not write to the editor of the dear CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST about your agonies and implore him to help you in any way he could? Let me assure you, dear and noble friend, that I certainly do not like to trouble you, neither do I desire to bother any one of our great brotherhood, and were I a single man I would have already and long ago gone away from Persia, seeing that those by whose command I came so far in the world are unwilling to be faithful to their own word of promise, "to provide for me" (I have documents in my hands to this effect), but I have a family and cannot move from this place without help. Then again I would certainly not plead and appeal for help so continuously if I could by any labor make a living here, but everybody knows me as a Disciple of Christ and a missionary, too, and other denominations will certainly refuse to give me employment unless I will comply with conditions which are generally of a most revolting character to a man who will remain true to himself and loyal to the gospel of Jesus Christ. Such a thing would be simply an apostasy shameful equally to me and to all my brethren and friends in the United States. Was I trained, ordained and sent by the Church of Christ in Iowa for such a dreadful thing as that? Oh that the brethren in Iowa would think a moment about all this thing and give the matter a serious, honorable and just consideration, and surely their hearts would be moved toward me in these endless sufferings! But who will induce them to take that step—who else if not the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST? Dear Bro. Garrison, I know you love me and that your noble Christian heart does ache and bleed for me, and therefore I implore you, have the firm good will to save me; and I do firmly believe the Lord will surely show you some way to help me. I plead for an honorable, dignified and fair retreat from Persia and I believe every one ought to help a poor Armenian brother like me in such a dreadful situation, in this great and memorable Year of Jubilee. We are in a most distressed condition here at this writing, because I am in great penury actually, and by and by I must begin to sell our beds and carpets and other few furniture we have to buy bread for my family; then we shall be thrown upon the street, because we cannot pay the rent of the house we occupy; then we shall have to apply to the United States Legation at Teheran for help as citizens of the greatest republic on earth; then there will be trouble, shame and scandal so painful and disastrous to us all to avoid and prevent, therefore all these dreadful things of the coming troubles we have got to enter the way of retreat, and I believe by every law, Christian, heathen or Mohammedan, especially by the unique law of Christ given us in Matt. 7:12, I am entitled to this right which I hope and pray most earnestly you will sustain and support vigorously standing by and pleading—

"For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong."

Dear Bro. Garrison, I have exhausted all my eloquence in this long letter, written by a sad, sorrowful heart, and feel myself tired and exhausted, too. Oh, do have mercy upon your poor brother and help me in any way you can and write me soon, if possible by return mail, some cheerful words of Christian sympathy, love and charity, so that we may be consoled and cheered up and strengthened to endure sufferings of which you have never had an idea in your whole life. Oh, let me throw myself upon your kindness, pleading once more to be an instrumentality in the hands of our merciful Father in heaven to save us in this dire hour of need, suffering and trouble, and may the Lord bless you! With fraternal greetings,

Yours in the Lord,
MICHRAN BAGHDASARIAN.

P. S.—I may add a few words to explain what I claim at this most critical moment. The brethren of Iowa can of course say that I was sent in that time as a single man, and they could not, therefore, bring out of this field a whole family, and I agree with them fully in this objection, but reply: Let the brethren do their duty to help me leave this country and get out of this narrow way which has no other issue but sorrow, trouble and shame for us all, and by the mercies of God I can take care of my family myself afterwards. I may thus be enabled to go away to some part of Europe, leaving my family for the time being here, and as I am willing to do any kind of labor, I hope and trust I shall find soon some employment in some place to make an honorable living for myself and family, and finally I can provide for my wife and children to come and unite with me under the home shelter where I may labor and live as an honest man, true to myself and loyal to Christ. M. BAGHDASARIAN.

Notes of Travel.

STRONG CONTRASTS BETWEEN SCOTLAND AND THIS COUNTRY.

I have a friend, Capt. Howland, with whom I am associated in the government service here. He and his wife have just returned from a trip of several weeks to Scotland, while I have but lately returned from a trip to Misouri. I took the B. & O. R. R. westward and he the same road eastward, and the capabilities of modern travel in about nine days placed us between four and five thousand miles apart. Since the Captain's return I spent some time in conversation with him in regard to his trip. I wish especially to place before the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST what this observing gentleman says about life in the old world, among the common people. I think perhaps I can make it as interesting, if not more so than otherwise, if I put it in the Captain's own words, while I draw some contrasts from his remarks and his answers to my questions.

T. Well, Captain, I know you have a tact for observation, and also the Yankee inquisitiveness, in a high degree, so I conclude you must have picked up considerable knowledge of the region wherein you visited lately. Now in what way do you think you could make your account of Scotland of any more especial interest than the ordinary published letters of tourists?

H. I will answer that by saying that the ordinary tourist from this country "doing" Scotland usually skims things, and has presented to him only the "company manners," so to speak, and that aimed-to-be cosmopoitan aspect afforded strangers at places especially gotten up for their entertainment and information, while I did not skim things, but visited during my stay among the common people, and tried as best I could, with eyes and ears open, to get at the common, every day life of that class.

T. That's just what I want to get at, for I've been disappointed with tourists' letters from their lack of this very essential feature, which affords our average citizen opportunity for contrasting life here with it in the country which the writer is describing. In what part of Scotland was your visit made?

H. In the city of Glasgow and Southern Scotland generally.

T. To sum up, what is the most lasting impression made by your trip?

H. That I'm better satisfied than ever with citizenship in the United States of America.

T. Can you give me, now, the more interesting details of your trip, which will present the most salient points of contrast between life there and here, in any phase ordinarily encountered by a traveler in that country or a dweller in that country?

H. I think I can, and I'll note some incidents of travel on the way.

Wife and I took passage at New York on the fine steamer, "Teutonic," of the White Star Line, for Liverpool, and we were elegantly quartered and cared for generally; cost us $45 each, each way. We were eight days making the trip to Liverpool. We went some four hundred miles southward in our course in an effort to avoid the fog, but still were delayed about three days by it. A ludicrous incident, to me, occurred at Queenstown, Ireland, where the gangplank was lowered for the purpose of landing passengers and luggage. The plank hung at an angle of about 45 degrees, and sailors were stationed on each side of the passageway, to aid passengers in their descent. The slipping, sliding and falling of some fat, elderly people and their frantic efforts to help themselves made us bystanders fairly yell with American mirth.

A fine trunk was let drop overboard, but was fished out of the briny deep with a perfect sluice of salt water issuing therefrom. A pretty state its contents were doubtless in.

T. What about the railroad travel there?

H. Well, we took the North British at Liverpool for Glasgow. They make good time, but the arrangements for travel on these trains are decidedly un-American.

The taking of one's baggage is a care indeed. You give a porter a shilling, about a quarter in our money, to transfer your trunk from one line of travel to another. No checks are given. Sometimes this porter marks it, and sometimes he does not. If he does not, then you have a time searching, and may be telegraphing, to find said piece of baggage. The passenger cars are divided into eight compartments, each seating eight people, four on a bench, two facing each other. These four couples in this little stall, face to face, are locked in until their destination is reached.

No tickets are taken up on the train; a ticket taker stands on the platform at your destination and takes your ticket. At the smaller towns I noticed that no one inspected our tickets before we entered the car, showing a somewhat loose manner of doing business.

There is absolutely no provision at all, as compared with this country, for the comfort of passengers. No toilet room, no drinking water, but you are just simply locked in for safe transportation, as any ordinary consignment in this country would be.

They have no conductors or brakemen or porters, as we have, but a "guard," who locks you in and lets you out, is what we would call the conductor.

A porter is along, but he rides in the baggage car, the hindmost car. The cars run exactly reverse to ours; passing, you are always on the left instead of the right, as in this country.

T. What a contrast to railway travel in this country! Take, for instance, the great Burlington Route, in Missouri, on which I traveled, with its elegantly appointed coaches, finely upholstered reclining chairs, superb toilet arrangements, the coldest and clearest drinking water, polite and accommodating conductors, brakemen and porters, windows to view the country and doors affording ingress and egress from car to car. Verily, the United States leads the world in railway accommodations!

H. It does, indeed.

T. What about the country along here in the south of Scotland?

H. Finely appearing country, gently undulating, well cultivated, mostly in wheat and oats, but quite a good many truck farms were to be seen near the larger cities.

T. Did you have an opportunity to mingle with the daily life of the people, out among the smaller towns and rural districts?

H. I did, and took due advantage of it. For the most part the houses in the country are small stone houses, with from two to four rooms. These are tenanted by laborers who work for the "Farmer," who is a person of prominence in the community and lives in the "Farm Steacting," as the big farm house is called. This is a large stone building with wings, and under its roof are all the family—servants, horses, cattle, sheep, pigs and poultry—of the entire holding.

These other houses only shelter the families of the laborers. These working people have no gardens, no dooryards, no flowers, no fruit trees—nothing but the bare walls, floor and roof of their plain stone dwelling, and that is always owned by some of the landed aristocracy, the land monopolists of the British Empire. In the smaller towns, as also it is in the larger cities, in a more rigid and confining way, the people live in houses built on the tenement or apartment plan, in blocks, generally two to four stories high. The one in which I visited was three stories high, three rooms on each side of a hall from front to back, one family to each three rooms; so there were six families in this "close," as it is called there. At the back of this "close" is a common washhouse for the use of all the tenants, and each family must use it the day set apart by the landlord for it, and on no other day. No dooryard in front or backyard in the rear. It abuts on the public road in front and the alley in the rear.

T. What about the wages of these people?

H. Well, the wages of generally about four people, hired by the farmer and kept at the "Steading" all the year round, is usually about £25, or say $100 per year, or $8 1-3 per month, and the others are only hired from time to time as the farmer needs them in his crops or other work at different times in the year. There is a curious method of hiring these laborers, who are retained by the year at the "Steading." On a certain day, especially set for this purpose, all over a certain district, the people seeking a job assemble at a given place and are met by farmes on the lookout for hands or servants, and there the bargains are made for the year, and during that year no servant can leave his master nor master discharge a servant till the year is up. This is due both to long established custom, which in these old countries seems to hold people as with bands of iron, and to certain rigid laws enacted for this special purpose.

T. Look here, now, Captain: what do these people eat, these common people around in these two to four-room country houses and in the apartment houses in these smaller towns that you have been describing?

H. Well, I'll tell you this to begin with: I did not have a cup of coffee while I was gone except on the steamer, going and coming, and as for vegetables, I saw none on the table except twice in my entire stay. Potatoes, bread, eggs and ham, with tea, was the fare, over and over again, unvaryingly; but I infer that the ham was lacking many times on the table of the common people, and may be the eggs.

They are great tea drinkers, those South Scotch, and always have the teapot at hand.

T. What a contrast, my friend, to the surroundings of the common people back in Missouri, where I have been!

There is the small village I call my home. I think I can show why so many people want to come to this country and stay. Take, for instance, my home, a representative one in that section, both of village and country. I have a comfortable farm dwelling of five rooms, and three quarters of an acre of ground with it, a small barn, and all such necessary outbuildings, a splendidly productive kitchen garden of good size, a fine lot of fruit—apples, cherries, pears and plums—besides an ample dooryard running around the entire house, with a rose garden and shade trees in front. Thus we house the common working people of the United States, with their great variety of food, opportunities for recreation, etc., etc., contrasted with the pent-up, cramped, bound-down existence of the people of Scotland, if not of all Europe.

T. What about the wages of those irregularly employed laborers and the prices of provisions with them?

H. Well, during harvest time the best wages are from three to four shillings per day, or say from seventy-five cents to one dollar per day. The prices of provisions are about what they are here, with transportation to that country added; so you see that with less wages than are made in this country they have to pay a little more for their food staples.

T. Yes, for ordinary farm hands out in Missouri get from $12 to $20 per month and board, and harvest hands usually twice that, while the staple foods are always lower in the rural districts than anywhere else.

T. Was there anything about the habits or morals of the common people of Scotland with whom you mingled which afforded a contrast to our people?

H. Yes, and that was, to use a terse expression, whiskey. I know we are bad enough, but when I say next to the tea drinking habit whisky drinking seems fastened on the entire common people, I speak the truth. Nearly every house has its bottle, to be brought out for every caller, or to be apologized for if it is empty; and in Glasgow, in a very populous section of that great place, are to be seen, every hour of the day and most of the night, dozens of women lugging children along, too small to walk by themselves, and most likely with one, a baby, strapped on their shoulders in an old shawl—these will be seen lined up at the bars, drinking whiskey and giving it to their children! I was told that the women seemed, if anything, to be worse than the men as topers. Many a one of these women is said to pawn her husband's Sunday suit on monday morning when her man goes to work in his working clothes, and to spend the proceeds derived therefrom during the week in whisky drinking, and when her husband turns over his wages to her Saturday evening she takes it and uses the most of it to redeem his clothes again!

T. Don't they drink beer to any great extent?

H. No. They say it is too thin and weak. Well, I will say again, we are bad enough in some respects as a nation, but compared with what I saw of Europe we are Utopia itself.

When baby comes to the home it will bind the wife closer to the husband, or it will gradually tend to cut her off from his companship. A sickly mother loses in physical charm, and often in temper and disposition. A fretful child is a trial, even to loving parents. The use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription prepares the wife for motherhood. It strengthens the body, and induces a healthy condition of mind, free from anxiety or fear. It makes the baby's advent practically painless. The mother being healthy her child is healthy, and a healthy child is a happy child, a joy to the parents, linking them together with a new bond of affection.

There is no opium, cocaine or other narcotic in "Favorite Prescription."

"I read what your medicine has done for other people," writes Mrs. Edwin H. Gardner, of Beechwood, Norfolk Co., Mass., Box 70, "so thought I would try it, and I found it a blessing to me and family. I took your medicine a year when I had a ten pound girl. I had the easiest time I ever had with any of my three children, and I have been very well ever since. I took three bottles of 'Favorite Prescription,' three of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and three vials of 'Pellets.' Before I took your medicine I only weighed 135 pounds, and now I weigh 175 pounds."

Los Angeles Letter.

The eleventh annual convention of the churches of Christ of Southern California is a matter of history. It was held at the Tabernacle at Long Beach, Aug. 10th to 20th. It had several unique features. It lasted ten days. Sessions were held only in the mornings. The afternoons were given up to bathing, fishing and other kinds of recreation. The evenings were devoted to preaching. The first two hours of each day were given to lectures on special themes and Bible study. F. M. Dowling gave four lectures on missions. W. E. Crabtree gave four studies on the Gospel of John. The writer gave four Bible studies on four great books of the New Testament. J. W. Ingram was to have given four lectures on Christian union, but was absent on account of the illness of his wife. The singing, under the leadership of Mrs. Princess Long, was most excellent. As a singer of distinctly gospel hymns and sacred music, I have seldom, if ever, heard Mrs. Long equaled. The enrollment of the convention was 660, 25 per cent. larger than at any previous year. This represents about 15 per cent. of our numerical strength in Southern California. Reports from the churches showed a generous increase in all lines of Christian work. The convention was harmonious, inspiring, spiritual, helpful. F. M. Dowling was elected president of the evangelizing board for another year, and steps were taken to annex Arizona to our Southern California work.

There is a great deal of interest taken on the Coast in the Jubilee Convention. There will be at least a car load of delegates from the Golden State. The convention raised money to send Mrs. Princess Long as a delegate from Southern California to sing at the convention; and also H. Elliott Ward in recognition of his services as the secretary of our Southern California work for the past five years. The preachers from Southern California that are going are W. E. Crabtree, San Diego; J. W. Ingram and H. Elliott Ward, Pasadena; F. M. Dowling, Pomona and the writer, from Los Angeles. There are quite a number from Northern California who expect to attend this great feast. We are anticipating a glorious trip. The influence of such a gathering can only be for good.

Southern California is rapidly getting advertised as a winter resort. People come here from all over the United States to spend the winter, and a delightful place it is for that purpose. I have always thought its qualities as a summer resort surpassed those of the winter season. This has never been more strikingly true than during this summer. The weather has been most delightfully and refreshingly cool. Each night the fog from the ocean drifts in, preceded by that breeze common only to the ocean, and our inhabitants are forced to retreat from verandas and porches to warmer places. At night we sleep under heavy blankets and covers. Southern California is surely unsurpassed in its climate. It must not be supposed that we are without disadvantages. Not the least of these is the long distance from the East, where are found the great centers of our national life.

The importance of the Pacific Coast as a part of this great country is being rapidly recognized. The extension of our possessions in the Pacific Ocean has greatly magnified our national life. The indications are that in the future our Coast will be as thickly populated as the Atlantic Coast is to-day. This emphasizes the importance of this section of our great country as a mission field. We ought to enter every village and town and plant a church in them and our Coast cities ought to be entered at once for a strong effort to plant our churches as lighthouses in this great and growing historic country. Our mission boards ought to give more attention to the West. Very little money is being expended on this field. In order to make this possible we ought to have generous offerings for Home Missions and Church Extension and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Let all our churches awake to the land that is yet unpossessed by our great cause and enter upon this work with an ardor yet unexampled.

A. C. SMITHER.

An Open Door.

After much prayer and consultation, the church at Palo Alto, California, has decided to make a strenuous effort to build a house of worship. We are at present meeting in a hall, which is not only inconvenient, but insufficient. This places us at a decided disadvantage; and unless this can be overcome, our influence will be seriously if not permanently crippled.

We have about fifty-six members in all, most of whom are poor. They have made a brave, consecrated struggle to establish primitive Christianity in this great educational center; but the limit of our financial capacity has been reached, and the only alternative left is to appeal to our great and generous brotherhood for assistance, believing that the Father of us all will not allow our prayers to go unanswered.

This work was begun by our state board about three years ago. Since then, those who have acted in that capacity have rendered all the assistance in their power. This has enabled us to keep a minister most of the time. We have grown both in numbers and influence by this timely assistance; and the one thing that impedes our further progress along these lines is a suitable house of worship.

We know that many appeals are made for help; but we believe our condition warrants us in making this one. We believe that this is truly "an open door" which cannot be neglected with impunity. We believe it to be an opportunity second to none presented by the various inviting fields of our country at large.

The location of Stanford University at this place makes it one of more than ordinary importance. This institution has many advantages which in time must attract, not only a large student body, but a large resident population as well.

First of all, it is located in a town where by the express command of the charter no intoxicants can ever be sold.

Then the climate is unsurpassed in the whole world. No educational institution anywhere has a climate better adapted to the needs of all classes.

It has an excellent location, being about thirty-five miles from San Francisco and about twenty from the ocean. It is one of the prettiest spots in California.

Stanford University is the most richly endowed institution of the kind in the world. Its own permanency is thereby insured as well as the permanency of the city of Palo Alto.

As an institution of learning it takes rank with the first, embracing as it does within its curriculum about all that young men and young women need in preparing themselves for professional life.

These advantages must in time make this one of the great educational centers of the world. When the buildings now under construction are completed, it is estimated that from six to eight thousand students will be in regular attendance.

A good, strong church here, loyal to Christ and his Word, could certainly exert a wide influence for good. Students come from all parts of the country, and through them the gospel seeds may be down in almost every state in the Union. Surely, this is an opportunity we cannot afford to neglect. When the doors of the nation are thus thrown open for our plea for a return to apostolic Christianity, it really seems that our stronger sister churches should lend us their assistance that we may avail ourselves of the opportunity thus presented.

Not only have we an opportunity to reach almost every part of the country; it is an opportunity also to preach the gospel to those who are in the future to be our educated men and women. This is a class which must not be neglected. They must be reached and saved, or their talents will be a total loss to the church. Has not the time come when a greater effort should be made to win the educated minds and hearts to Christ? Is the future of the church insured if we neglect them?

The educated are to be the leaders of the future, as they are of the present; and while they are young is the time for us to win them to Christ. The gospel has lost none of its winning power, and will, if faithfully presented, win the educated as well as the uneducated.

Our religious neighbors are beginning to realize the importance of getting a strong foothold here. The opportunity that is now presented to us will never return again; the field will be possessed by denominational churches in a short time. If an effort is ever made to establish a good, strong church here, it should be made now.

Feeling, therefore, that the circumstances warrant it, we make this appeal. We do not believe that, when these facts are known, the members of our stronger sister churches throughout the country will hear our appeal in vain.

Every cent contributed, either by individuals or churches, will be gratefully acknowledged and sacredly used. Send all contributions to A. W. Mills, box 307, Palo Alto, California.

NO FAITH CURE

ABOUT STUART'S DYSPEPSIA TABLETS.

They Cure Stomach Trouble and Indigestion Anyway, Whether You Have Faith in Them or Not.

All physicians agree that the element of faith has a great deal to do in the cure of disease.

Firm belief and confidence in a family physician of the same confidence and faith in a patent medicine have produced remarkable cures in all ages.

This is especially true in nervous troubles, and no field offers so prolific a harvest for the quack and charlatan as the disease arising from a weak or run down nervous system.

Nevertheless, the most common of all diseases, indigestion and stomach troubles, which in turn cause nervous diseases, heart troubles, consumption and loss of flesh, require something besides faith to cure.

Mere faith will not digest your food for you, will not give you an appetite, will not increase your flesh and strengthen your nerves and heart, but Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will do these things, because they are composed of all the elements of digestion, they contain the juices, acids and peptones necessary to the digestion and assimilation of all wholesome food.

Stuart's Dpspepsia Tablets will digest food if placed in a jar or bottle in water heated to 98 degrees, and they will do it much more effectively when taken into the stomach after meals, whether you have faith that they will or not.

They invigorate the stomach, make pure blood and strong nerves in the only way that nature can do it, and that is from plenty of wholesome food, well digested. It is not what we eat, but what we digest that does us good.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by druggists at 50 cents for a full sized package.

Little book on cause and cure of stomach troubles mailed free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

Annual Meeting.

The 41st annual meeting of the Disciples of Christ in Benton County, Iowa, will be held with the church in Union, September 8-11. An entertaining and profitable program has been arranged for the occasion.

Annual Convention.

The annual convention of the Churches of Christ in Western Pennsylvania will be held with the East End Church, Pittsburg, Sept. 26-28. A fine program is being prepared for this convention.

Convocation Service.

Remember our grand convocation service, to be held first day of the fall term of Eureka College at 7:30 P. M. F. G. Tyrrell will speak. Other attractive features. This will be a splendid greeting for our students, which are even now beginning to come in. We invite our friends everywhere. We expect splendid opening. J. H. HARDIN.

Atlantic Coast Delegates, Attention!

The official route for the delegates from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Virginia and eastern sections of North Carolina to the Jubilee Convention will be by the picturesque Chesapeake & Ohio Road. Arrangements are now being made for a special train, stopping over night of Oct. 11th at Gladys Inn, Clifton Forge, thus making the whole trip by day. A four-page illustrated circular giving schedule of train, rates, side trips, etc., will be sent upon application. Address E. B. Bagby, 631 8th Street, N. E. Washington, D. C.

Railroad Rates to the Convention.

The following roads have now been heard from on railroad rates: M. K. & T. M., Mo. Pac., C. & A., Port Arthur Route south of Pattonsburg and the Fort Scott and Memphis. These all make rates of one fare for round trip from all Missouri points to Jefferson City; tickets on sale Oct. 2-3-4, good to return including Friday, Oct. 6. Other roads will be heard from. Watch the papers.

Dedication.

The church at Broad Ripple, Ind., has completed and dedicated their new house of worship. After meeting in a hall for years they were permitted on Lord's day, Aug. 27, to sit down under their own vine and fig tree and worship the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Dedication day was a red-letter day for the brethren at Broad Ripple. The giving was generous, and all greatly rejoiced in the completion of a work that had caused them so much hard word and anxiety.

Wabash, Ind.

Important Notice for Central Illinois.

We have arranged for a special reclining chair car from Springfield, Ill., to the Cincinnati Jubilee Convention, to go via Wabash over I. D. & W. from Decatur. We invite Disciples of Central Illinois to join our party. The car will be attached to the regular train, No. 4, and will leave Springfield at 9:55 A. M., Thursday, October 12th, reaching Indianapolis at 4:40 P. M., where we join the Chicago delegation, arriving with them at Cincinnati, at 7:45 in the evening. The fare will be one fare for round trip, which will be $9.05 from Springfield, and other places accordingly. Tickets can be purchased at any station on the Wabash or connecting lines. The advantages of a special car are many. The car will go through without change, will be comfortably equipped with reclining chairs and will afford a delightful fellowship. If you want to have a chair reserved for you in this car please send your name to J. E. Lynn, Springfield, Ill., stating at what place you expect to get on the train. Please inclose stamp in writing for further information, which will be cheerfully furnished.

That Reunion in Cincinnati.

There are few things more pleasant in this world than the pleasure of meeting and greeting old friends. It is sweet to make new ones, but is sweeter to meet and greet old ones. And for this reason, though I might name weightier ones, I would like that Bros. Van Horn and Martin, of Ohio, would go ahead and complete arrangements by which all our English, all our Scotch, and all our Scotch-Irish converts, and all the brethren who have labored in England, might meet and dine together and talk over the victories of the gospel in "merry old England." Such a meeting, I am sure, will add to the joy of that jubilee occasion for not a few of us. JAMES SMALL.

State Mission Notes.

A NOTABLE EVENT.

The great event of the year among our people in this state will be the State Missionary Convention at Jefferson City, Oct. 2-5. This is the year of our great Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati, Oct. 13-20, and all of the state conventions that have thus far been held have felt the power of the wave of enthusiasm that is sweeping so grandly on to the Jubilee gathering. Missouri must not be one whit behind her sister states in having a great convention; the greater our home convention the more sure of greatness will be the one in Cincinnati.

Everything is being done to make the Jefferson City convention one of the greatest in the history of our people. The leading railway lines of the state have granted the rate of one fare for the round trip, tickets on sale Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, good to return including Friday. This is the best concession in the number of selling days we have ever had, and we ought to profit by it.

Jefferson City people, irrespective of church connection, are preparing to give the convention a royal welcome. Governor Stevens and lady have signified their intention of tendering a reception to the delegates and visitors, and the entertainment is to be free for all.

The program committee have had the matter in hand for a good while, and the result of their deliberation will be seen next week when it is published. Thus everything is tending towards a representative gathering. If there is a failure it will be because the people are not fully informed in regard to these things. A poster has been prepared and sent to 500 churches in the state. If they are used as they ought to be, there is no doubt that it will largely increase our attendance.

So much depends, yes nearly

on the ministry throughout the state; the preachers can make or mar this or any other convention. If they manifest interest and enthusiasm their people will catch the infection and go, but if they are indifferent and neglectful so will their people be, and stay at home. Preach convention sermons to your people, talk convention in their homes, urge going as a duty, a privilege, a pleasure, and the result will be one of the greatest gatherings of our people in recent years.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

LaBelle, our frriend always, sends word that their proportion will be paid and that we can depend on it in our estimates of expenses for this year, but it is not surprising where J. B. Corwine holds the lines.

The Monroe county meeting at Oak Ridge, C. H. Strawn, preacher, was one of the best meetings in years, while the entertainment was first-class. C. H. and the church had all things well in hand and most every one glad of their presence. In the chart drill many took part, and the following schools will pay apportionments for the year: Paris, $50; Monroe City, $50; Middle Grove, $10; Santa Fe, $10; Antioch, $5; Victor, $5; Woodlawn, $5; Granville, $5; Pleasant Grove $5; Oak Ridge, $5.

In the interest of Christian education wish all could see the handsome building going up at Columbia, and all of us should see that it is filled this fall with the pick of the girls of Missouri, for that is the kind we have.

At the Audrain meeting our chart work was so acceptable that several of the schools will use it this year, and it is to be hoped that the results will justify their use for all time. At the request of fellow-workers I remained over Lord's day, and the brethren paid last year's and nearly all of this year's apportionment, for we have no truer friends than in that godly band on whom the failure in crops has fallen heavily. J. D. Greer is their minister, and was to follow with a meeting, and I pray for their success.

At Midway, by the favor of my brother, C. H. Strawn, I met the workers and talked with them of the kingdom of God and their work in it for the children, and at the close sought their help in forwarding the work in other parts of Missouri, in which appeal Bro. Strawn favored me greatly, and the brethren were very generous in their responses; thanks to all. But their great need is more of the parents of the community in the Bible-school.

Those of the brethren who think our work is slow in its results should consult others, for a Cumberland Presbyterian year-book shows 1,525 of their congregations with schools and 1,400 of them without schools, while in our ranks we have 1,238 Bible-schools to 1,481 congregations, and this according to the last printed statistics, and if our worthy secretary of State Missions succeeds as he hopes in getting reports from all the states, it will be even better than that. But, brethren, Bro. Abbott nor any other living man can give you these statistics if you do not assist him; so you can only blame yourselves.

The Louisiana (Pike county) meeting got a move on and raised nearly $450 for county work, while nearly every school in the county gives to our work. Bowling Green, $25; Paynesville, $30; Clarksville, $15; Frankford, $10; Louisiana, $10. You see, E. J. Lampton was president, and "Billy" Mayhall stirred with a stick, so he did.

More good news, for M. H. Wood has just closed a meeting at Crocker with a Bible-school, a reorganized congregation, over 20 additions and the money for a new house of worship, making five new houses for the first quarter's work on the present year. Are you putting your money anywhere with better results, brethren, and do you believe you could do it? Nearly $5,000 for permanent places of worship and work among the poor and needy servants of God in three months, and that, too, at an expenditure that would surprise you, and given by the schools of Missouri in such sums as hinder no other cause in this world.

But now, all for Jefferson City at the one fare via the M. K. & T., the Mo. P., the C. & A., and the Port Arthur Route. Brethren, you ought to go there if you have to deny yourselves other meetings, and the preachers ought to buy round trip tickets. Do we appreciate what Bro. Abbott does for us, and will we show it by our going to Jefferson City and buying round-trips? Trust we will.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Since Bro. Fred Dysart's removal to Solomonville, your readers have not been kept posted on the doings of the Phœnix Church. And we pause right here to say that the church has suffered an irreparable loss in his removal, for he was actively present at all its services as well as at Sunday school and Endeavor meetings, and was chorister for all. But after we had become somewhat accustomed to his absence—got weaned as it were—he returned for a brief visit and bore away as his happy bride Sister Stella Clanton, president of our Y. P. S. C. E. and one of our most efficient Sunday-school teachers. They were accompanied to their new home by Miss Zella Dysart, our organist for the three organizations, and who never missed a meeting of either. And so we are broken-hearted, but not despondent.

While the outside world has heard little of this church during the past year, its silence has not been the result of inactivity, but exactly the reverse. The fact is, we have all been too busy to blow our horn and proclaim the work that has been wrought. A brief synopsis covering ten months may not be uninteresting.

Oct. 9th, 1898, Bro. L. O. Ferguson, of Los Angeles, Cal., began his labors as pastor of this church. It was apparent from the beginning that the old house was not large enough, and also that it was in the wrong part of the city except for a mission. So it was decided to sell it and build in a more desirable locality. The Ladies' Aid Society had accumulated some $500 in a building fund during the preceding year and that was all we had in sight. As most of our members were poor, it required an exercise of considerable faith to launch out on the stormy sea of church building. First, we must sell the old property, which was not easy to do, as the real estate market was dull, and the old building added no value to the lot for business purposes. But at this time the Lord sent the Rev. Mr. Byers, of the African M. E. Church, to Phœnix (he said the bishop sent him, but no matter), who proceeded to organize the colored brethren into a church, and then to preach for them in a rented hall. In looking around for a suitable location, he was favorably impressed with ours and opened negotiations. After considerable dickering a bargain was struck for $1,800 (it cost us about $3,000), but of this they could pay but $600 down, and wanted easy payments on the balance. Here was a snag, for we must have the cash to put into a new house. The A. M. E. could not borrow the balance on the property, and so we were stuck. But finally we borrowed $1,000 on a mortgage at 8 per cent., payable in five annual installments, and gave the African Church a bond for a deed with like terms and conditions attached. This gave us $1,600 in cash, we waiting one year for the remainder. We have given these details to show how the church had to scheme to attain the ends sought. We then bought the finest corner in the city for a church for $1,800, the lot being 75x137 1-2 feet, with beautiful rows of ash trees around the street sides. Subscriptions were taken, plans adopted for the building, the contract let and negotiations opened with the Church Extension Board for the borrowing of $2,500 to complete the building, which will cost about $5,000 when finished. But after the work was well under way we were informed by the board that they could not let us have more than $1,500. That would not suffice, so we borrowed $2,500 here at 8 per cent. for a year, and by that time hope to have the amount reduced to such a figure that the Extension Board will carry the loan for us.

The building is pronounced by all to be the handsomest structure in the city and is in a sightly location; but two blocks from the electric car line, two blocks from the Presbyterian Church, three from the M. E. Church he same from the new Grand Operahouse.

Besides the main auditorium there is a Sunday-school room separated from it by heavy curtains, a parlor, a pastor's study, a basement, a vestibule and porch at entrances, and a stone baptistery that will never be covered over by a platform and which will be entered from both the parlor and the study. The seating capacity will be about 400, but an addition may be made at slight expense with a capacity of 150 more. The first service will be held in it on August 6th, but it will not be finished for two or three weeks later. It would have been completed a month earlier but for the dilatory tactics of the men having the plastering contract. The foundation is of black volcanic stone and the walls brick, rising 17 feet from the pavement.

Bro. C. F. Curtis is the architect and builder, and has certainly given the church more than its money's worth.

The church will be dedicated sometime in October by Bro. A. C. Smither, pastor of the First Church of Los Angeles, who has been loaned to us by his church for the occasion. Keep your eye on Phœnix.

A Good Convention.

The annual convention of Clark and Decatur Counties, Ia., was held with the Church of Christ at Leon, Aug. 22-24. There was a good attendance, and a good convention was the result. All the papers and addresses were excellent. All departments of church work received the attention that their importance claim. Of the ministry there was present the Lyon Bros., Bros. Wright, Castor, Stout and the pastor. Much credit is due the president, Bro. A. E. Pine. Friday night Bro. Wright gave a fine patriotic lecture, illustrated with stereopticon, under the auspices of the C. E.

Names Wanted.

EDITOR EVANGELIST:—We kindly ask your readers who know of a member of the Christian Church that has come to Newark or vicinity to send their name and address to me. A number of us desire to start a church here, but we do not feel warranted in the undertaking with the present number. We have inserted notices in the local papers and hope to reach some that way. As there is only one small church in the state, we presume some have joined other churches, and if we have their names we may be able to induce them to join us in the undertaking. Trusting you will favor us and thus advance the good work, I am

Yours most sincerely,

Corinth, Sept. 2.—A few days' meeting at Baldwin resulted in two baptisms. Prof. J. D. Patton, of Dalton, Ga., conducted the singing. Bro. Patton is one of the most efficient singing evangelists in the South. He used his book. We like it very much.—JAMES H. BROOKS.

Frankfort, August 29.—I recently returned from a two weeks' meeting at Ghent, W. J. Loos, pastor, where 24 were added—16 men and eight women—and the church very much revived and strengthened.—GEORGE DARSIE.

Samuel M. Bernard, of Louisville, Ky., recently closed a stirring revival at Mt. Carmel Church in Owen County, in which there were 15 additions.—S. M. B.

Lexington, Sept. 1.—W. T. Brooks, of Ladoga, Ind., closed a two weeks' meeting, Aug. 31, for Pres. J. W. McGarvey at Bethlehem Church, Clark Co., with 60 additions. R. B. Givens, of Lexington, was singing evangelist. Crowded houses and splendid interest throughout the meeting.—REPORTER.

Morgan, August 28. — We closed a two weeks' meeting here August 20th. The interest was good from the very first. The last night the crowd was estimated at about 700. Bro. C. M. Schoonover, of Bethel, Kentucky, did the preaching and won the esteem of the people by his excellent sermons and his consecrated Christian life. There were 42 accessions to the church; one from the Methodists, one reclaimed and 40 by obedience. In many respects this was one of the most successful meetings in the history of the Morgan Church.—WALTER P. JENNINGS.

ILLINOIS.

Dorchester —On account of a sudden call, due to sickness at home, I closed my meeting at Wyanette, near Princeton, Minn., Aug. 27th, with 14 additions; eight by confession, one M. E. probationer, one Lutheran and four by fellowship (unidentified with the church). Upon request of the congregation we organized with 27 members. The church is in good working order. Arrangements have been made to build a house of worship, and material is on hand to begin the work. A sister and two nieces of ex-Governor Claugh have have been the means of establishing our plea in that section of the country. With the assistance of the state society and the encouragement of Bro. E. T. Gadd, corresponding secretary, our people begin to see the result of their earnestness and activity. We are the only people that practically believe in "Christian union." Minnesota is a great mission field. The Methodist Episcopal Church is predominant in many localities. Many of their preachers misrepresent the Christians and are ignorant of the facts of the Current Reformation. It requires hard work and prayerful efforts to undo the doctrines taught by the different denominations. The people have been taught to come to Christ in a denominational way rather than in the New Testament way. Brethren Slick, Harmon, Shellenberger, Gadd and others are toiling hard in the Masters's vineyard. Their labor is not in vain in the Lord. Men of business ability and sound in the Christian faith, prepared to tell the gospel story in a loving way, will find plenty of work and reasonable compensation for their labors. The harvest is truly plenteous, but the laborers are few. Only the ones who are "willing" to make "a living sacrifice" can do the Master's bidding. May God bless all the noble workers in that great state and may their numerical strength be increased by those who volunteer to assist in its evangelization.—JNO. G. M. LUTTENBERGER.

Carrollton, Sept. 2.—Last Lord's day two added to the church by primary obedience; both adults.—J. SEYMOUR SMITH, pastor.

MISSOURI.

Marceline, Aug. 30.—Had five additions at the regular service Sunday; four by confession and one from the Baptists. Our Christian Endeavor is growing rapidly. Six new members at last meeting and four the meeting before.—ISOM ROBERTS.

Tarkio, Aug. 28.—Glad to report seven good additions here at regular services during August. Everything promising.—A. R Hunt.

Neosho, Aug. 28.—Lone Star meeting cloed, after 15 days, last night; 15 by confession and three restored. Preaching done by Bro. W. S. Deatherage, of Mountain Home, Ark. Bro. Deatherage is a young man of ability and promise. Meeting closed with a good interest.—A. C. MATHIS.

DeLassus, Aug. 22.—I. B. Dodson has just closed a meeting at my home, five miles south of DeLassus. There was only one addition, but certainly much good seed was sown by our dear brother that will result in good to the cause if the field is not neglected too long. Bro. Dodson's six sermons here were not delivered in close succession, as he was gone three days on a trip to Pleasant Hill in Washington Co., where he preached three sermons and baptized two persons. He preaches two nights this week at DeLassus, at the home of Bro. Eugene Burr, and then leaves for his home. The writer has been with Bro. Dodson in more than a dozen meetings, but never did hear him make a stronger presentation of the primitive gospel than in the above discourses.—S. W. ROBINSON.

Springfield.—Elder Jos. Gaylor, district evangelist for Christian, Tany and Douglas Counties, reports 93 accessions to the churches and three congregations organized since May first. Also, five boot-legging whisky shops broken up.—JOSEPH TAYLOR.

Holt, Sept. 1.—Closed here last evening, seven additions. Go to Plattsburg the 3rd inst. The great evangelist, S. M. Martin, will do the preaching.—V. E. RIDENOUR, singer.

TENNESSEE.

Tracy City, Aug. 30.—Just closed a meeting with 22 additions at this place; two from Baptists, four restored and 16 by obedience.—ROBERT LORD CAVE.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT? For the same reason that Christian Churches support Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. The first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

C. A. VANNOY.

A beam of the sunlight so tenderly smiled,
As it buried itself in the sea, wide and wild,
It was caught up again in the mist and the cloud,
And proclaimed by their trumpeting, long and loud,
Till it fell to the earth in a torrent of rain,
Refreshing and rip'ning the grass and the grain.

But even then it could find no repose,
For tiny hands from the river arose;
In their fingers they siezed the diminutive drops
And conveyed them away through both forest and copse,
To the place where was turning the turbine of might;
When through dynamo stately it passed into light.

Though my life may be buried in sorrow and pain,
With God's love in my heart, it will spring forth again,
By his help, I will mold my afflictions and deeds,
So that others may know that the Lord Jesus leads
In broad pastures of green, and by still waters bright;
To the land where ne'er gathers the shadows of night.

A Story of Missionary Heroism.*

BY MRS. J. H. WRIGHT.

Heroism is not confined to battlefields, where cannons roar and rifles speak. Bravely borne home burdens, where self and pleasure are sacrificed on the altar of domestic service, bespeak the hero. When heavy feet and heavier eyes and still heavier hearts ceaselessly minister through nights and days of suffering, as loved ones go down to the silent river, there is heroism. And when man or woman takes up the mission of bearing to others the story of God's love, leaving loved ones and risking pain or death itself, there, too, is heroism.

Nor is heroism of the past alone. One who stands close by the mountain may not see it in its true perspective, and so one may fail to do justice to the hero of his own day. The mists of years seem necessary to a right appreciation of sacrifice. I come to-day with a simple story of things which befell a missionary of our own generation, one still living, hoping that its recital may bring us into closer sympathy with missionaries and broaden our ideas of their worth.

On the 24th day of May, 1824, John G. Paton was born. His father was a pious, faithful Christian and their home, Dumfries County, Scotland, was a consecrated, Christian home. Here our hero was carefully, religiously trained. It is said that but thrice in forty years did the father miss the service at the kirk on Lord's day. And in the evenings he would gather his family about him, have a Bible reading and a study of "The Shorter Catechism." Mother, children and visitors would read in turn and ask and answer questions. In this way they became familiar with God's Word and created that spirit of piety and reverence and faith in God which gave to the church one of its noblest heroes of the cross.

An eager longing for an education was also instilled. He was studious even in childhood. And when but a youth he went to Glasgow to compete for a position that had a small salary and the chance for a year's training in the Free Church Normal Seminary. Forty miles he trudged on foot before he reached the railway. Six miles his father walked beside him and then they parted, each in tears. At the summit of the next hill he turned his eyes to see once more his beloved father. There he stood where they parted, hat in hand, praying for the boy whom he had now committed to the guidance of the Heavenly Father. With waving hand and weeping eyes the final salute was given and the boy bravely faced the future, secretly hoping that God would guide him to his service at home or abroad. He was willing to go anywhere if Jesus led. At the competitive examination the two candidates were so well matched that the prize and the work were divided between them. Hard study undermind his health and, spitting blood, he was sent to his home heart-broken at the seeming failure of his plans. But health came back and by teaching and hard struggles he was finally enabled to begin his chosen work.

For two years a call had been printed for volunteers for the new mission field in the far-away New Hebrides. At last Mr. Paton offered himself and was accepted. It was a serious step, yet he took it, believing in God and his providence. You have heard of the sailor's reply to the landsman who said, "I should think you would be afraid to go to sea since you tell me you have lost grandfather, father and brothers by storm at sea." "And I would think," said the sailor, "you would fear to go to bed, since in bed have died all your ancestors!" In some such way as this Mr. Paton silenced one who tried to discourage him. "The cannibals! you will be eaten by the cannibals!" said a friend. His answer was: "Mr. Dickson, you are advanced in years now and your own prospect is to soon be laid in the grave, there to be eaten by worms. I confess to you that if I can but live and die serving and honoring the Lord Jesus, it will make no difference to me whether I am eaten by cannibals or by worms, and in the great day my resurrection body will arise as fair as yours in the likeness of our risen Redeemer." At this, with uplifted, deprecating hands, the old man left the room, saying, "I have nothing more to say."

Friends plead in vain for him to stay in Scotland. In vain all their talk of "heathen at home." His ears had caught the Master's words, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." "These are my marching orders," he said; "I must obey them." But so many were the hindrances interposed that at last he laid the whole matter before his parents, and this was their reply: "Heretofore we feared to bias you, but now we must tell you why we praise God for this decision you have made. Your father desired to be a minister, but was compelled to give it up from other duties. When you were born you were consecrated by us to become a missionary of the cross, and our prayers have ever been that you might be prepared, qualified and led to this decision. And we pray God to spare you and give you souls from the heathen world for your hire." From that moment every doubt left him and he felt sure he was following the divine guidance.

I cannot take the time to tell of his long ocean voyage nor how, in company with his young wife, and his colaborer and his wife, they landed on the island of Tanna, one of the Hebrides group. He says: "My first impressions drove me to the verge of utter dismay. On beholding these natives in their paint and nakedness and misery my heart was as full of horror as of pity. Was it possible to teach these degraded creatures right and wrong; to Christianize or even civilize them? But when he saw some of the converts from other islands he renewed his hope. Among their first experiences was a battle fought between rival factions on the island. Their servant, a native convert from an adjacent island, came to them with rueful countenance, saying, "They are eating the slain and have spoiled our water!" To him the greater wrong seemed in the washing of the blood off the slain bodies in their spring, for what could be more natural to one born a cannibal than to eat a slain enemy! Christianity had not had time to raise the servant to a vary high conception of the sacredness of the human body.

Imagine how hard it was to learn that savage tongue! No written words, no grammar, no dictionary! He would point to objects and then write, phonetically, of course, what they called it. Laboriously they toiled until at last the language was learned, and after years a translation of the gosples followed. But long ere that time came he was called on to endure the saddest affliction that comes to man. Four months had scarcely gone by ere he bade farewell to his young wife and their first-born. If bereavement be terrible among friends and kindred in native land, what must it mean among cannibals, with no one to speak a word of sympathy? Many of us, I feel sure, would have turned back in dismay. And who would have blamed us?

The natives took advantage of every opportunity to steal from the missionaries. As they had no fireplace in their mission house they were compelled to hang the bedding out doors to dry after the rainy season. At one time, when all their bedding was on the line and they were watching lest it should be stolen, Miaki, the chief, came running in and saying, "Come into the house quick. I want to tell you something." While they were talking, Mr. Paton's servant rushed in crying, "Missi, come quick." Miaki's men are stealing your sheets and blankets." And sure enough they were. The chief pretended to be very angry and said they would return everything that had been stolen. A little later they stole all his chickens and broke into his kitchen and took away everything. There was not even a kettle left. Mr. Paton offered a blanket in exchange for a kettle. It was finally brought—but minus its lid! One morning the Tannese came running in great excitement, saying, "Missi, there is a god or a ship on fire or something of fear coming over the sea." He told them it was probably one of Queen Victoria's men-of-war coming to see if they were treating him fairly, stealing from him or threatening his life. He took a great deal of care in dressing himself, saying that he must be ready to meet the great chief of the vessel. Then they asked, "Will it be a ship of war? He told them that he thought it would be. "And will they ask if we have been stealing from you?" "Yes." "And what will you tell them?" "I must tell them the truth." "No, Missi, tell him not. Everything shall be brought back and no one will be allowed to steal from you any more." He told them to be quick, then, as everything must be returned before the man-of-war arrived. Away they ran and in a short time they came back carrying pans, kettles, blankets, knives, forks, plates and all sorts of stolen articles. Then they anxiously inquired if everything was there. Mr. Patton said that he did not see the lid to his kettle. The chief told him it would be brought the next day as he had sent to the other end of the island for it. Mr. Paton then told the three chiefs that they must not run away when the captain came ashore and he would not punish them. They were afraid, but stayed. When Capatin Vernon landed he was accompanied by his officers, dressed in uniform and armed. The captain was a tall, handsome man and, dressed in their splendid uniform, he and his men made an imposing apparence. As they landed one of the chiefs left Mr. Paton and ran toward the village with great speed. He soon returned with an old red soldier's coat buttoned tightly around him. This amused the captain, who asked, "Who is this?" "He is our great war chief," was the reply. The captain warned the chiefs to treat the missionaries well, else Queen Victoria would send her men-of-war and destroy them. Thus the British flag protected the missionaries of the cross. Would that our own government would as carefully protect our own missionaries!

One day Mr. Paton, preaching in one of their villages, urged them to worship God, who would deliver them from all their enemies. Three of their sacred men were present. These were chiefs and feared by all the natives, as they claimed power to kill any one by sorcery or witchcraft if they could only secure a piece of fruit or other food he had been eating. They now declared that they could kill the missionary in spite of his Jehovah whom he worshiped. Mr. Paton accepted their challenge and, praying to his God for help, he determined to strike a blow against this sorcery or witchcraft. A woman was standing near with some native fruit somewhat resembling our plums. Mr. Paton took three of them and, taking a bite out of each, handed them to the sacred men. The natives were horrified, thinking it meant sure death to the missionary. The three chiefs retired to the sacred tree to begin their ceremony. They rolled the fruit in dry leaves taken from the sacred tree. They then kindled a fire near the roots of the tree and set fire to the leaves enclosing the fruit, waved them in the air, uttering cries and watching Mr. Paton as if expecting his sudden annihilation. But as it had no effect upon the missionary they declared that they would call all their sacred men together and before his next Sabbath should come he should certainly die. But the missionary did not die! This deeply impressed the natives with the power of the missionary's God.

The missionaries on the other side of the island were in poor health. At one time they sent word to Mr. Paton that they were out of flour and wished him to send some if possible. The journey was perilous, whether undertaken on the rough sea or by journeying across the island amid hostile tribes. They ventured out beyond the coral reefs, keeping near the shore, and were drenched by the surf which dashed over their boat. At last, when within two miles of their destination, the men were so exhausted that they declared they could row no farther. They waited until they saw a lesser wave coming. Then they tried to make the shore, but were capsized. Mr. Paton finally reached the shore in safety. The flour, protected in advance for such a possible disaster, was found uninjured when the boat was rescued. The native crew determined not to try a return trip until the sea grew calmer. Mr. Paton decided to return home afoot, during the night. The natives refused to go, as they said it meant certain death. He kept along the seashore lest he might lose his way. When he heard voices he would hide in the bushes until they had passed and then he would hurry on. At one time he came to a steep rock with the sea roaring at its base. He succeeded in reaching the top and then, to avoid a village, he crawled along a ledge of rocks with the sea just below him. This he could not have done, even in daylight, save for the excitement. He had to leave the shore and follow the bank of a deep ravine to a place shallow enough to cross. Then he tried to return to the seashore, but missed his way and found himself near one of the most dangerous of the heathen villages. Quietly turning back, he reached the rock, but in the darkness could find no path leading down. He groped in the darkness, fearful of falling; but feeling that discovery would be fatal, he determined to let himself slide down the steep face of the rock, commending his soul to the God he served. After throwing rocks down, but hearing no splash in the waves, and judging that the tide was out, he fastened his clothes about him, let himself down as far as he could by a bush and then dropped into the darkness below. He reached the bottom safely, waded the low water and found an easy path along the shore. A few hours later he reached his home in safety. When the natives heard how he had made the perilous journey alone in the dark they said, "Surely, any of us would have been killed. Your Jehovah God brought you home."

One of Mr. Paton's most touching stories is the death of Kowia, a Tannese chief of the highest rank. In his youth he had gone to Aneityum and had there become a true Christian. He married an Aneityumese Christian woman, with whom he lived happily, and they had two beautiful children. He had come back to Tanna as a teacher and healper to the missionaries in their work. The natives tried to win him back to the worship of their gods, and even threatened to take away his land and chieftainship. He said, "Take all, but I will stay by Missi and the Jehovah worship." Insults were heaped upon him, but these he patiently bore for Jesus' sake. One day he bought some fowls and an impudent fellow took them and tried to sell them again to Mr. Paton. "Missi," cried Kowia, "do not buy them. I have just paid for them." Then the fellow began to mock at him. Kowia, with flashing eyes, said, "Missi, they think that because I am a Christian I am a coward. I will show them." Snatching a club from one of the men and swinging it in the air he said, "Come any or all of you against your chief. My Jehovah God makes my heart and arms strong. He will help me in this battle as he helps me in other things and he inspires me to show you that Christians are not cowards, though men of peace. Come on and you shall yet know that I am your chief!" They all fled, and he cried, "Where are the cowards now?" After this he was left in peace. Kowia was a faithful helper. Once Mr. Paton grew ill. Regaining partial consciousness, he heard Kowia sobbing and praying for the "Missi." Measles had swept off half the Aneityumese helpers and poor Kowia's wife and two children were dead. And now he was saying, "All the Tannese men hate us on account of the worship of Jehovah, and I fear that God is going to take all his servants away and leave my people to the evil one and his service." And then followed an earnest prayer that God would not forsake his people nor leave them to die in darkness, but that he would make the hearts of his people "soft to his Word and sweet to his worship." He also prayed God to restore Mr. Paton to health and save Tanna. All this deeply touched Mr. Paton. A few days latter, as Mr. Paton grew better, Kowia came to tell him good-bye before going away to die. He told him of the death of his wife and the others and said, "I shall soon see Jesus. I will not die here, but will go down to the grave of my wife and children that Abraham may bury me by them, so that we may be together in the resurrection. One thing grieves me. I fear God is taking us all away and will leave my poor people in darkness. O, Missi, pray for them and for me before I go." Then they prayed together, and after this prayer, in spite of the protest of Mr. Paton, he went away to die, leaning on the arms of Abraham, Mr. Paton's servant. "Farewell, Missi, we will meet again with Jesus," were his parting words. With many tears he dragged himself away. Mr. Paton says that he felt like all his heart-strings were tied around that noble, simple soul and that they were breaking one by one, as he left him on his bed of fever to go down to the grave of his beloved. Abraham sustained him to the sacred spot. There Kowia knelt and passed at once away, and there the faithful Abraham buried him. Thus died a man who had been a cannibal chief, but by the grace of God and the love of Jesus he was changed into a character of light and beauty. What wonder that Mr. Paton should say, "In him I lost one of my best friends and most courageous helpers; but I knew that day and I know now that there is one soul at least from Tanna to sing the glories of Jesus in heaven, and O, the rapture when I meet him there!" For this the missionaries toil in hope. And such a hope kindles a heroism unknown on earth's battlefieds, but known in heaven. Heroism? Yes, like that of Adoniram Judson and his wife. He came part way home with his sick wife, and at her request was about to turn back to his beloved Burmah, when she penned these words while they rested St. Helena:

We part on this green islet, love;
Thou for the Eastern main;
I for the setting sun, love;
Oh, when to meet again?

When we knelt to see our Henry die,
And heard his last, faint moan,
Each wiped away the other's tears;
Now each must weep alone.

And who can paint our mutual joy
When, all our wanderings o'er,
We both shall clasp our infants three
At home, on Burmah's shore?

But higher shall our raptures glow
On yon celestial plain,
When the loved and parted here below
Meet ne'er to part again!

Too soon the parting came. She died and was buried on St. Helena, and he sailed back to Burmah, while his "infants three" cried, "Mamma! mamma!" Heroes? Yes, sun and heaven-crowned, as are our own missionaries, who have fallen asleep. Heaven's heroes. Our heroes.

Have Faith in the Boy.

Have faith in the boy, not believing
That he is the worst of his kind,
In league with the army of Satan,
And only to evil inclined;
But daily to guide and control him
Your wisdom and patience employ,
And daily, despite disappointment
And sorrow, have faith in the boy.

Have faith to believe that some moment
In life's strangely checkered career,
Convicted, subdued and repentant,
The prodigal son will appear;
The gold in his nature rejecting
The dark and debasing alloy,
Illuming your spirit with gladness
Because you have faith in the boy.

Tho' now he is wayward and stubborn,
And keeps himself sadly aloof
From those who are anxious and fearful,
And ready with words of reproof.
Have faith that the prayer of a mother
His wandering feet will arrest,
And turn him away from his follies
To weep out his tears on her breast.

Ah! many a boy has been driven
Away from the home by the thought
That no one believed in his goodness,
Or dreamed of the battle he fought.
So if you would help him to conquer
The foes that are prone to annoy,
Encourage him often with kindness,
And show you have faith in the boy.

Have faith in his good resolutions,
Believe that at last he'll prevail,
Tho' now he's forgetful and heedless,
Tho' day after day he may fail.
Your doubts and suspicious misgivings
His hope and his courage destroy;
So, if you'd secure a brave manhood,
'Tis well to have faith in the boy.

With The Children.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

The Son of Gideon.

IN SIX CHAPTERS—V.

In silent haste Tola and his children gathered up what articles they could conveniently carry. Esther filled a bag with provisions and Caleb took pains to hunt out his favorite steel bow, the present from Gideon. Then they crept cautiously to the mouth of the cave and looked out. The man who had so alarmed the children was not to be seen. The three passed through the bushes and wound their way among the high stones. When they had gone a great distance they came upon the camel which was slowly returning as if to meet them. Then Tola, Caleb and Esther mounted the great animal and they swung along in the gloom at a rapid rate.

After Jothan made his address to the men of Shechem he fled from the flat rock which overlooked the town. He had seen Zebul and the soldiers coming after him, and he knew if he delayed he would be devoted to the vengence of Abimelech. The boy ran down the mountain slope till he heard the thunder of approaching hoofs. He was near a great rock that towered high above his head. He threw himself flat upon the ground. Scarcely had he done so when Zebul and his men appeared far down in the valley. Their faces were direcred toward him. Their eyes scanned narrowly the mountainside.

Jotham had fallen among a clump of mallows. He was not more than ten yards distant from the great rock and he began to drag himself toward it, while the mounted soleiers rapidly approached. The men of Zebul now spread out that they might thoroughly examine the entire scene. Zebul himself, with ten men, rode directly toward the clump of mallows.

Jotham was now close enough to the rock to find that it offered him an excellent retreat, if he could only gain it before he was discovered. By the side of the rock stood another one about ten feet high. They were close together, yet between there was more than enough room for him to be at ease. Caleb dragged himself forward.

"Look!" cried Zebul to his men. "Saw you not the mallows move?"

"It was but the wind blowing in the leaves," said a soldier.

"Watch," said Zebul, drawing his bow; "let us see if this wind hath a voice!"

Jotham hugged the earth as the arrow sped toward him. He heard its keen, shrill song as it cleaved the air, then the puffing sound as it buried itself in the earth just before his face, throwing the dust in his eyes. But Jotham did not move.

"It was nothing," said the soldier. "For what man could lie so quiet with death tickling his nose in this fashion?"

"But if I had placed my arrow in his heart, would he not lie as a stone?"

"Not so! For when a man is struck he leaps up and throws his arms thus—and he screams out and topples forward."

"Come, come!" said Zebul. "Do you think to teach me? Has not Abimelech made me governor of Shechem? Hold your tongue before the king's governor!"

"I doubt not you know how to govern," returned the other. "As for me, I know how to fight. How say you for me to hold my tongue? You asked me a question. When I am asked questions my tongue leaps forth to reply. It is not enough to hold it, but it must be locked and chained when so provoked."

"Villain!" roared Zebul, "will you never cease your much talking? Another word and this through thy stubborn tongue!"

Zebul drew his spear with so sudden a motion that his horse started and wheeled to one side. The soldier, immovable upon his steed, eyed the governor with great contempt. But he spoke in a gentle voice. "What have I done, O Zebul? I pray you be not angry with a simple soldier. I will speak no more. But do not draw your spear again, else you are like to have your neck broken."

Nothing could have been more fortunate for Jotham than this quarrel, for while it was in progress he had contrived to drag himself to the rocks unobserved. Now that he was in their protection he studied them carefully.

He found that there were three rocks instead of two, so placed as to form three sides of a natural room. The fourth side was open, but so small that there was not very much danger of discovery. Once through this narrow doorway the room widened to a generous extent. Jotham threw himself down upon the sandy floor, where he could not be seen unless a face was thrust through the opening. Several hours passed by, but no one came to molest him. He fell asleep, and when he started up it was night. Now was his opportunity to go back to Tola's cave. But when he looked out of his rock house he was dismayed to find that a line of camp fires shut off his escape. Weird forms flitted back and forth between the fires. The soldiers were on guard! Jotham's heart sank. He felt chilled from the night air, for there was no roof to the natural room. But he scooped out a hole in the dry sand under the edge of the highest rock and slept till morning.

He was awakened by voices on the other side of his wall. "He is somewhere on the mountain side, that we know," said the voice of the soldier who had angered Zebul the day before. "We are to guard the base till he comes down to us, starved and desperate. It is the king's order."

"Long live King Abimelech!" cried another.

"The soldiers are put under me," the soldier continued. "Let Zebul govern Shechem, and dabble no more in matters he knows not of. I would you had seen him try to draw his spear yesterday to smite me! My heart rose to my throat, so fearful was I that he would cast the weapon and smite himself."

"Have you looked behind this rock?" inquired the second voice. Jotham held his breath.

"What am I?" returned the other. "I am the captain of the army! Is it for me to thrust my nose behind every rock that stands in my way? And is it for you to give advice to the captain? Come away! He can never pass the guardline, no matter what rock hides him now. Can he dine upon pebbles? Can he gnaw rocks? He must grow hungry and give himself up at last. Then woe to him!"

Jotham heard their retreating footsteps. When they were gone he ventured to look forth. Again his heart sank; for at the foot of the mountain was a line of tents, and about them stood soldiers upon duty. To take his mind from his danger, Jotham turned his attention to his house. He found that great pieces of the middle rock had been torn away, thus leaving a kind of staircase. The boy climbed to the top of the rock by means of the steps and found that from here he could reach a platform in the great rock. To himself he named the three rocks that formed his home. The smallest was "baby." The middle, with its rough steps, that afforded a splendid exercise at climbing, he called "the rock of steps." The huge wall that towered above the others, was "the elephant." As he gained the platform which extended across the middle of "the elephant," a flock of birds flew out of a recess just above the stone platform. Jotham drew himself up in this little cave, not without some danger of being seen by the distant soldiers. But once in the little room he was secure. He made this his bedroom.

But Jotham was now confronted by another enemy; this was hunger. It had been many hours since he had eaten, and he felt weak and dizzy. He remembered the mallows. He left his "bedroom," climbed down the "rock of steps," and looked out the opening. From the distance at which the soldiers were stationed, there was no great risk, if he were very careful. He crawled to the bushes, and cautiously gathered a great quantity of the leaves and flowers—the food of the poorest classes. With this prize he regained his home. It was miserable food, but he was grateful for the strength it gave him. He stored away what he did not use in a hole, scooped out of the sand.

A little brook ran down from the mountain top, but it descended on the side of the rock house which was in clear view of the soldiers. From the top of "the rock of steps" Jotham studied this problem, longing for water, but daring not to go for a drink till night time. As he had nothing in which to carry the water he must go thirsty every day, unless he hit upon some plan. That nigh he went for a drink, reeling as he walked, for the fierce tropical heat had been almost unbearable without water. But he had solved the problem in that period of thirsty waiting. With a sharp flat rock he began to dig into the channel of the brook at some distance above the rock house. For hours he worked, while far below him glared the red fires of the soldiers. When, just before day, he returned to his home, the course of the stream was changed. The brook flowed through a crevice between "the baby" and "the rock of steps." In other words, it ran directly across the floor of what Jotham called his "first story"—the bedroom above the platform was the "second." Jotham scooped a great hole in which he caught the water from the stream; and while the soldiers panted in the heat under the shade of their tents Jotham was plunging in the cool water of his "bathtub."

One day some soldiers found this rock house. But Jotham was safely hidden in his "bedroom" and they departed, suspecting nothing. Thus many days passed by, till one night the boy discovered that the campfires burned no more in the valley. The next day he saw that the line of soldiers had been recalled to Shechem. The next night he said "farewell" to his home, not without tender affection, and making good his escape, he went to a distant town called Be-er. There he lived three years, and all this time he heard nothing of his old friends, Tola, Caleb and Esther.

ZECHARIAH'S EXHORTATION.*

At the period when the building of the temple had for sometime been abandoned and there seemed no immediate prospect of resuming operations, the two prophets, Haggai and Zechariah, appeared and took up the task of securing the completion of the structure. Of Haggai's work in this regard we had evidence in our last study. Zechariah appears to have been a younger contemporary and, unlike Haggai, who was a layman, he was of priestly descent, and, therefore, like Jeremiah and Ezekiel, he combined the priestly and the prophetic functions. The book which is called by his name has been thought by various Bible students to contain some materials which date from other periods of the nation's life than that of the prophet himself, but that the first eight chapters are the authentic work of Zechariah there is practically no question, and through these chapters we are able to understand the problems which confronted the prophets in this period and see the difficulties with which they had to contend in the task of securing the gradual revival of national life in Judah.

The character of these writings of Zechariah is somewhat peculiar in several respects. One notices, first, that they deal largely in visions. This was a characteristic of the earliest type of prophecy, but appears to have little part in the work of such great prophets as Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, Micah and Jeremiah, though occasionally even there the vision is the vehicle of prophetic inspiration; but in the later periods of prophecy, in what we may call the declining era, visions and other similar elements reappear in prophecy, and this is particularly true of the book which we are studying. Another characteristic is the apocalyptic symbolism which enters into the visions; and in this respect they differ largely from even those visions which occur in the earlier history of the prophetic order. Here begin to appear the striking symbolisms which appear so frequently in the apocalypses both of the Old and New Testaments. A third feature is seen in the large element of angelic mediation between God and man. The prophet no longer seems to stand in the closest intimacy with God, but is instructed by an angel, who acts as his spiritual interpreter and guide; and many of the actions of the visions are carried forward by angels, representing either human or divine forces, whose workings affect more or less the destiny of Judah. This is in harmony with the growing emphasis placed upon the function of angels as interpreters of God's will, and the consequent distance between God and man which grew up with later Judaism as contrasted with the intimacy of relation enjoyed in the earlier period—an intimacy which Jesus sought once more to restore. It must not, however, be supposed that because the prophecies of the later period move upon a lower level and seem to have lost something of the power and directness of the earlier messages of God, that they are, therefore, valueless, or to be lightly disregarded. The whole condition of affairs in the post-exilic period was discouraging to a degree, and if prophetic activity shared somewhat the depressing influence of Judah's environment, it should not be regarded as strange. It has been universally felt through the centuries of Christian history that such books as Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi offer but limited comparison in sublimity of thought and power of appeal with the great prophetic utterances of the 7th and 6th centuries B. C. Nevertheless, these later prophets had a true place in the series of God's representatives, and but for their presence and encouragement amid the tasks of the time, the hope of the future would have been clouded, if not lost.

The prophet Zechariah appeared, so far as we have record, first in November of the year 520 B. C., just about the time Darius was consolidating his turbulent empire and seating himself firmly upon its throne. The introduction to the book is found in 1:1-6, in an oracle which emphasizes the abiding certainty of the utterances of God. Again, in January of the year 519 B. C., Zechariah appeared with a new message, embracing a series of visions which he had seen and which bore encouraging messages to the people of Jerusalem. These eight visions, which apparently were seen by the prophet in one night, are contained in the section 1:7; 6:8, and deal with the following particulars: Four horsemen who have patrolled the earth report that there is universal quiet, which from the standpoint of Judah, desirous as it was of the overturning of the empire in order that it might be profited thereby, seemed sufficiently unpromising; but to the indignant protest of the angel of God there came the divine answer of comfort in the assurance that God was jealous for Jerusalem and would surely return to help her. In the second vision four horns, which in apocalyptic symbolism stand for political powers or kings, are seen, which, however, are speedily beaten down by four workmen armed with hammers. This vision indicated the downfall of those nations, here described in general as four in number, under whose oppressive tyranny Judah had suffered. The third vision discloses a man, who turns out to be an angel, with a measuring line in his hand, who goes forth to measure Jerusalem for a new set of walls, since up to this time no safeguards of the kind have been erected; but he is assured by another angel that walls are unnecessary and impracticable, both because the city will be too populous to be enclosed within walls and because Jehovah will himself be her protection. Verses 6-13 contain a song which appears to have been an exhortation to the exiles still in Babylon to escape to Judah during the favorable interval of political unrest. In the fourth vision the general poverty and misery of the community is described in symbolic terms. Joshua, the priestly representative of the nation, is described as clothed in filthy garments and accused by the satan, whose business appears to be that of an inquisitor and adversary; but the priest is justified by the divine voice and clothed with rich apparel, while the Messianic promises are given to the people. The fifth vision is the present study, to which we shall return. The sixth is the vision of the flying roll, with its curses on stealing and perjury. This roll proclaims in prominent letters the fate of those who in the community are found guilty of these offenses against its prosperity and peace. In the seventh vision the same thought is pursued. The temptation to false weights and measures was prevalent among a people environed, as were the Jews in this period, with the mercantile spirit, but afflicted still with poverty. There was always danger that those who had a little wealth would use it unjustly and for the oppression of their poorer neighbors. Temptation is, therefore, described as a woman thrust into a measure and held down with a weight, which is then carried far away to Babylon, the land of all iniquity, where it is left. In the last vision the thought returns once more to the broader political horizon, and the chariots of the four winds are described as patrolling the earth to bring word regarding the divine enterprise among the nations. Some recent report of political uprising seems to be referred to in this message.

Returning once more to the fifth of these visions, which constitutes our lesson—the prophet is described as awakened out of sleep, in which he has beheld, and now recalls, a vision of a candlestick of gold with seven lamps, to each of which a pipe brings oil from two olive trees standing on either side. The symbolism is, of course, taken from the golden candlestick of the tabernacle and temple. The reading which appears in our version, that there were seven pipes to each of the lamps, appears to be a misinterpretation. It is probable that there was in the vision only one pipe to each of the lamps, as more than this would have unduly complicated the machinery of the vision. The feature which is added, beyond the suggestion offered by the tabernacle and temple, was that of the two olive trees. Of course, the oil for the candlestick was supplied in the sanctury by means of a special preparation of olive oil. Here the trees are represented as standing in close proximity to the candlestick and, therefore, providing a constant supply of the sacred oil. The angel interpreter asked the prophet if he understood the symbolism of the vision, to which a negative reply was returned. The section 6*b* to 10*a* appears to belong after verse 14, for in its present connection it interrupts the explanation which the angel furnished regarding the vision. It is not unusual to find such displacements of portions of the text, and that they are not more frequently found might be wondered at when one considers the mutations of time to which these sacred records have been subjected. Transferring the section mentioned to the end

Our assertion that Pure White Lead made by the "old Dutch process" of slow corrosion is far superior to White Lead made by patent or quick processes, has been demonstrated by the experience of competent, practical painters everywhere. of the chapter interferes in no sense with the effect, but removes the difficulty imposed upon the whole passage by the present apparently unfortunate arrangement. In accordance with this change, the angel's explanation, which begins with verse 6, would read: "Then he answered and spake to me, saying, These are the eyes of the Lord. They run to and fro through the whole earth." According to this explanation, the seven lamps of the candlestick represent the divine wisdom and activity in the community of believers. The candlestick as a whole undoubtedly stands for the reviving nation, and especially for its religious organization, centering in the temple, towards whose erection the prophet was bending the energy of his ministry. It was in this temple that Jehovah was to abide. It was out from it that his messages were to go and from it he was to observe the movements of the people. But the prophet had still to receive information regarding the two olive trees and their function as related to the candlestick. Of course, it was apparent that they were the sources of supply for the light which burned upon the candlestick, but the angel declared that they stood for the two "sons of oil," the two anointed ones, referring, of course, to Zerubbable, who represented the kingly office, and Joshua, who was the ecclesiastical leader of the reviving state. The emphasis of the vision is upon the fact that the whole success of the enterprise of building the temple and reconstructing the impoverished community with its center at the sanctuary must rest with the two leaders of the people, the prince and the priest. No doubt there was a double effect derived from this message—that of quickening the zeal of these leaders in behalf of the task of erecting the temple, and also of rekindling the loyalty of the people themselves to their leaders, which may have slackened somewhat during the depressing period through which they had passed.

Returning to the section 6*b* to 10*a*, which has been reserved for consideration, we notice that it is a message of encouragement to Zerubbabel, the prince, who appears to have been a man somewhat lacking in the aggressive characteristics of leadership, but was necessary to the community on the political side by reason of his representative character as a member of the royal family and the surviving heir of the Davidic dynasty. He may have argued the impossibility of attempting so great a task as building the temple under the present circumstances; but the prophet assures him that it is not through external resources nor by political power that such tasks are accomplished, but by the Spirit of God. Mountains of difficulty, which appear to loom up before the enterprise, would become level to faith and courage. Zerubbabel had been present at the beginnings of the house (Ezra 3:8-13). The project had been abandoned; but Zerubbabel was promised that he should live to complete it and to put on the capstone of the building amid the glad shouts of the people. This would prove conclusively the presence of God in the community, for no other power could have availed to complete the structure in the discouraging conditions which prevailed. The day of small things, then, was not to be despised, and this fact should be recognized in the day when Zerubbabel with the instruments of a workman in his hand presided at the ceremonies of completion.

In this study will be seen another of those proofs which lie so numerous upon the surface of the Old Testament record, that the prophets were the real makers of the nation; that when kings and priests turned indifferently away from the divine enterprise or thought only of selfish interests, the prophets, with unwearied effort, recalled the mind of the people to its supreme duty and encouraged the leaders and the nation alike to the high tasks committed to them of God. The lesson of power through the Spirit of God may most appropriately be impressed from this Scripture. The men of power are the men of prayer and of faith and of the Spirit. The day of small things is, in the nature of the case, the time from which all enterprises, however great they may become, must start. All beginnings are small, but their smallness does not augur failure nor atone for indifference.

TOPIC FOR SEPTEMBER 17.

UNHESITATING CONFIDENCE IN CHRIST.

(2 Tim. 1:1-12.)

When Paul wrote the words which head our lesson for the week, he was showing the last strength of that confidence in Christ that had been with him all these years of his life. In the prison at Rome he sits penning these lines alone, deserted of all who should have been his helpers in time of need; cold, so that he implores that his cloak be sent to him to help him bear the winter; lonely, so that he asks for the books to bear him company, for none but the beloved physician is with him. Such is the picture of the grand old man, prematurely old with scourgings and persecutions, as he awaits the dark end—but with unhesitating confidence. He is ready to be offered, he has fought his fight, finished his course, kept his faith.

The confidence that is worth while is the confidence that does not waver, even at critical moments. In the great power houses of the cable street railways, is a vast balance-wheel, weighing, they say, twenty tons or so, which revolves steadily, one might almost say noiselessly, on its way, no matter if sixty cars grip the cable all at once. The wheel is precisely for that purpose, for such emergencies. It is not merely for the ordinary moments. So is our confidence in God. It is for the moments of trial, when suddenly and all at once the weights come upon us. It is not the ordinary but the extraordinary moments which test machinery and test one's faith. Unhesitating must be the confidence, though storms come.

Electricity is not always to be trusted. When lightnings flash, telephones and electric lights often suffer. When we have learned more of it, we may be better able to control it. We are yet without confidence in it. Many people are like electricity: they go on nicely so long as there is no commotion; but let trouble arise, let unforeseen circumstances develop, and you can never count upon them. We have not confidence in them, because their faith, their confidence in God, and goodness, and the triumph of the right, is not unhesitating.

It is easy enough to trust God as long as skies are blue and everything pleasant. It is easy enough for the butterfly to be an optimist; but as has been so well said, the fool can tell the butterfly where each tooth of the harrow goes. It is hard for toads to have unwavering confidence. Nevertheless, even those whose way is dark can, if they will, preserve unfaltering trust in God. The philosophy of trust in God, of sane optimism, if you will, is the growing philosophy.

Paul trusted to the end. Job trusted, though the prospect that God would slay him was present. Jesus trusted God and was willing to drink the bitterest cup, if it was the Father's will. Shall not we, too, have confidence in our Father?

A father who has been a father indeed is afraid ta hold out his hands to his little children in the second story window for fear they will come to him in an instant.

Have we such unhesitating confidence in our Father? If we had, do you suppose that any one of us would remain away from him to-day?

HAMPTON AND HIS CAVALRY. By Edward L. Wells. B. F. Johnson Publishing Co., Richmond, Va.

Among the heroes of the war between the North and South there is none more loved than General Wade Hampton, and none more worthy of the homage of the Southern people. The gifted author having conceived the desire to place before the country a true history of General Hampton, sought the use of his valuable records, which was cheerfully given. Since this biography was written, nearly all of these records and the valuable library have been destroyed by fire, which makes this history doubly valuable from a historical standpoint. The author wrote this book with the unalterable purpose of giving the profits to General Hampton, and now that the devastations of fire have left him homeless, the profits will go into the fund being raised to rebuild his home. The things related in this book are told in a fascinating style, and once engaged the reader can hardly find a stopping-place till the end of the book is reached.

BY WHAT NAMES SHOULD FOLLOWERS OF CHRIST, and Congregations of followers of Christ, be Called? By Clark Braden.

When we have said of this pamphlet that it is as bad in spirit as it is inconsequential in logic, and that it is as untrue to the spirit of this Reformation as it is unjust in its attack on Alexander Campbell, we have said of it all it deserves. It is an unprofitable contribution to an unprofitable subject, in the form discussed, and is likely to prove an unprofitable investment by the author.

BOOKS.

We have received copies of the following helpful books recently from the press of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston, Mass., and Chicago, Ill.: "The Missionary Manual," by Amos R. Wells. This is a valuable handbook of methods for missionary work in young people's societies. "The Spiritual Life of the Sunday-school," by J. Wilbur Chapman. This is a timely book emphasizing as it does the vital element in Sunday-school work. "The Secret of a Happy Day," also by J. Wilbur Chapman. This is a beautiful application of the 23rd psalm to the days of the month, a part to each day. We can heartily commend these books to all searchers after helpful spiritual literature. They are small books but large in their importance and helpfulness.

TRACTS.

Our Animal Protective League, Mrs. Miles Standish, president, New York City, N. Y., has begun the publication of a series of short stories, leaflet form and size, in the interest of greater kindness toward animals. "Zon-Zon" is the first that has appeared.

ABOUT SEPTEMBER MAGAZINES.

The yacht, Columbia, built to defend the American cup, sweeping before the wind with every yard of canvas filled, is the subject of a beautiful colored picture by the famous marine artist, M. J. Burns, on the cover of the September number of the Ledger Monthly.

The complete novel in the New Lippincott for September is entitled "The Duchess of Nona," by Maurice Hewlett. This is an Italian story of the picturesque and dramatic days of Cæsar Borgia. A young English girl of simple birth ascends the Ducal throne of Nona, and is wretched in her rich surroundings. The passion of an Italian lover brings on a crisis which has the charm of a great stage picture. Mr. Hewlett's handling of the plot is masterly.

Among the magazines for September the Woman's Home Companion stands out as an unusually brilliant number for its entertaining and varied contents, its artistic cover design and its profusion of superb illustrations. Under the title, "An American Palace in Paris," Edward Page Gaston tells of the handsome residence, reproducting the famous Grand Trianon, just completed by that part of the Gould millions that were the share of the Countess de Castellane.

A most interesting article appears in the September number of the Missionary Review of the World on "Prison Reform in Japan." It describes graphically and fully the rise of the movement which forms a chapter in the modern marvels of missions, and gives the history and present status of the work for prisoners and ex-convicts by Taneaki Hara, the "John Howard of Japan." Rev. Geo. C. Needham gives some of his impressions of the Sunrise Kingdom in an article on "Kaleidoscopic Japan."

President Charles Kendall Adams opens the September Atlantic with a review of the irresistible tendencies, the spirit of the ages, the great movements of centuries or generations, which change the face of the world; instancing chiefly the spirit of individualism, to which he attributes the wonderful advances in liberty and progress of the last four hundred years. He claims that the fundamental fact is that the whole of this vast movement is the advance of civilization upon barbarism. He maintains that it is the ever-irresistible encroachment of the modern spirit upon the spirit of antiquity; electricity driving out the rush light; the white man ever civilizing the red man or pushing him out of the way. And this great movement is in the interests of a larger and a richer and a higher humanity.

The American Monthly Review of Reviews for September contains a remarkably attractive group of contributed articles. The timeliness of the subjects treated is seen by a glance at the table of contents. The war in the Philippines is summed up by John Barrett; the outcome of The Hague conference is set forth by W. T. Stead; the subject of trusts is discussed by George E. Roberts and by Henry McFarland; Hezekiah Butterworth writes of "The Future Value of the New England Farm," while Prof. L. H. Bailey answers affirmatively the question, "Does Farming Pay?" Sylvester Baxter tells of the progress made by the state of Massachusetts in her public library system, and Gilbert K. Harroun describes the work of the Cuban Educational Association of the United States; a sketch of "The New Secretary of War" is contributed by Henry MacFarland, while Dr. William Hayes Ward writes of Colonel Ingersoll, and Eric Glenton of the late Grand Duke George, of Russia.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for September is a bright, breezy salt-water number. Rear Admiral Winfield Scott Schley, "A Naval Hero of To-day," figures at the front in a capitally illustrated biographical sketch, followed by a supplementary article, telling what "Admiral Schley Said——," in his own picturesque and energetic language.

Self Culture for September contains very interesting and instructive articles on "The American Type;" "University Settlements and the Social Question;" "Theories of the Origin of Life," and "Twenty-five Years of Johns Hopkins University," the latter handsomely illustrated with portraits of President Gilman and several of the professors.

The September Century is a salt-water number. In a general sense this may be said to be apropos of the international interest in the yacht races for the American cup. The special feature of the magazine is the first of a series of four papers in which Captain Joshua Slocum narrates, in a humorous and individual style, the story of his successful circumnavigation of the globe, alone, in a forty-foot sloop, the Spray, constructed by himself. This unprecedented achievement involved two crossings of the Atlantic, and the rounding of Cape Horn and the Cape of Good Hope.

The September St. Nicholas is not, like the September Century, an avowedly "salt-water number," yet many of its pages are redolent of the briny ocean and its sandy shores. The frontispiece illustrates the lines:

"Hey for a bucket, and hey for a spade, Hey for the silver sea!"

from "A Song of the Sea," by Eric Parker, with which the magazine opens.

Mr. Walter H. Page has resigned the editorship of the Atlantic Monthly, and has accepted an invitation to take a prominent post in the direction of the literary work of the allied houses of Harper & Brothers and the Doubleday & McClure Co. His successor in the editorship of the Atlantic is Mr. Bliss Perry, known in literature as the author of two novels and a number of essays and stories. Since his graduation from Williams College, in 1881, Mr. Perry has been in the department of English, first at Williams, and afterwards at Princeton University, where he was lately appointed to the Holmes Professorship of English Literature.

September is the month for fishing and outdoor sports, and is the beginning of the hunting season in Canada and in Maine. Scribner's for September has a number of articles with an outdoor flavor to them. It opens with an account by Frederic Irland of what he calls "the finest canoeing country in the world." He made a five-hundred-mile journey from Mattawa to the headwaters of the Ottawa and Gatineau Rivers, through a region abounding in fish and moose. It has been for centuries and is now the home of the Algonquin Indian. The region through which Mr. Irland traveled, with Algonquins for guides, is the best sportsman's haunt left in America. Much of the wilderness is as yet uncharted. The illustrations are made from the author's abundant photographs.

The Bookman for September presents an inviting table of contents. With this number this ably edited magazine enters upon its tenth year. As its title indicates, it is a leading authority on new books. The themes treated by able writers on its pages places it in the front rank as a literary journal.

The September issue of The Ladies' Home Journal is an unusually attractive number. On the first page is given a series of pictures of "The Wayside Inn of Sudbury Town," made famous by Longfellow. Barton Cheyney contributes an instructive article on "The Young Man and the Professions," telling young men how to take up the study of law, medicine, architecture, etc. Charles T. Broadhead has an illustrated article on "The East Side Girl of New York," and Patti Lyle Collins tells "Why Six Million Letters Go Astray Every Year," and many other interesting, valuable and practical articles and features.

BARNES.

Mary Esther Barnes was born in Marion County, O., Jan. 16, 1862; June 2nd, 1899 she gently fell asleep in Jesus at the family home in Saunemin, Ill. Oct. 13, 1853, she was united in marriage to Elder W. P. Carrithers. She was the mother of 10 children, two having preceded her to the heavenly home. Her aged husband, five sons and three daughters remain to mourn her departure. She was a faithful member of the Church of Christ for more than 40 years and died as she had lived, a Christian. What more could be said? A. E.

BETHEL.

Bro. Bluford Bethel was born in Nelson County, Va., and died at Hannibal, Mo., aged 74 years. The funeral was conducted at his home, the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. Coulter. He leaves six children, who are nearly all members of the Christian Church. He was a loving father, a kind neighbor and a thoughtful friend. He was at one time well-to-do, but financial reverses came and made him somewhat sensitive to appearing much in company. The family have the sympathy of many friends. LEVI MARSHALL.

BIRD.

Nannie E. Bird, wife of S. P. Bird, of Dallas, Texas, died at her home, July 11, 1899, in her 69th year. She was born in Kentucky, but when quite young moved to Missouri. When 17 years of age she was married to Bro. Bird at St. Charles, Mo. Soon after their marriage the young husband, with thousands of others, crossed the plains in search of California gold, while the brave wife made the greater sacrifice of the separation, and waited patiently for his return. In a few years, after a thrilling and dangerous experience, he did return; and for almost 50 years they were not separated. But death, at last, took her away and carried her up into a realm richer far than all the goldfields of the world; the Father's house on high. For 37 years she was a devoted Christian woman. Naturally she possessed a lovely disposition, which was easily transformed into great spiritual beauty by association with the Savior. When looking into her face I have often thought it must have resembled the face of Stephen when facing his foes, which Luke said was like "the face of an angel" (Acts 6:15). This marriage was blessed with two children: a son and daughter; but the daughter preceded the mother into the heavenly world about a dozen years. The husband, the son, two families of grandchildren, with a host of friends, are left to mourn her loss. May the "God of all comfort" be their God. M. M. DAVIS.

COX.

Mantie May Cox, daughter of Elder and Mrs. C. M. Cox, died August 15, 1899. She was in her 13th year, and in every way a most dutiful and pleasant child. Her funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Elder E. W. Hookings. The body was gently laid to rest in the cemetery near their home at Park, Texas. The bereaved family have the sympathy of every one. T. F. WEAVER.

DOLPH.

Osaman Dolph died in Rock Creek, O., Aug. 13, 1899. He was born in Fort Ann, Washington County, N. Y., Aug. 8, 1830. His parents moved to Ashtabula, County, O., when he was about nine years old, and he has made it his home nearly ever since. He served through the Civil War, enlisting in Ashtabula under Capt. Kinney in Battery C, First Ohio Light Artillery, and remained at the front until he received injuries which finally resulted in his death. He was a charter member of Harvey J. Covell Post, No. 546, G. A. R., at Rock Creek, serving as commander four terms. He was also an honored member of the Masonic fraternity, being a charter member of Tyrean Lodge No. 362, Erie, Pa., filling the Master's chair for three years. In 1861 he joined the Congregational Church in Ashtabula. He became acquainted with "our plea" and united with the Church of Christ in Erie, Pa., in 1864, and lived a consistent Christian life unto the end. He was buried by the G. A. R., many posts being represented. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by J. E. Courter, pastor of Congregational Church at Rock Creek, and was attended by a large concourse of citizens. The wife and two children will be greatly comforted in their bereavement by the memory of the life and noble character of husband and father, and that he is now at rest in the paradise of our God. A. B. WADE.

Saybrook, O.

GROVES.

Mrs. Jane Groves, the last surviving charter member of the congregation of the Church of Christ at Mayslick, Ky., departed this life August 8th, at the advanced age of 92 years. She was the youngest of 12 children. In 1828 the beloved Warder conducted that memorable meeting in the Baptist church here, which continued almost two years, and during which nearly 500 souls were added to the church. One of those was the subject of this sketch. She was baptized in 1828, not on an "experience," but on confession of her faith "unto remission of sins." When, in 1830, the Baptists brought forward their famous, or rather infamous, "Preamble and Resolution," Sister Groves refused to sign it. According to her own words she tried ineffectually to remain a Baptist, and in a short time repudiated the "Philadelphia Confession of Faith" and took her stand with the people of God who chose to be called "Christians" and to take the Bible alone as the rule of faith and practice. She lived a consistent Christian life for 71 years, and has gone to a Christian's reward. At the age of 26 she was left a widow with two children, one of whom, Sister Fannie Chinn, an invalid, survives her. This community has been blessed by her long Christian life. Her remains were laid to rest August 9th, the services being conducted by the writer. Thus ended the earthly career of the last witness of the stirring events that followed the Campbell-McCalla debate in 1823. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, for they shall have a right to the tree of life."

HOLLIS.

C. P. Hollis, of Kahoka, Mo., died Aug. 28 at 3 A. M., at the age of 80 years and 13 days. For over 45 years he has been a successful preacher of the Word. Several thousand have been converted under his efficient labors in 11 states of the union. Another veteran of the cross has therefore put off his armor, having fought the good fight, and finished his course in the faith, well kept to the end. He was ready and watching for the change to come. His wife and several children remain to mourn his absence. Buried at Hamilton, Ill. A. J. CARRICK.

LOVE.

W. H. Love was born June 15, 1821, in Patterson, New Jersey, removing from thence to New York state and in 1828 coming to Illinois. First locating in Scott County in 1833, he came to Pike County, locating near Perry, and in 1846 he moved on to a farm six miles west of Perry where he died, Aug. 12, 1899. Seventy-eight years, six months and 27 days of age. He was married March 30th, 1843, to Harriet E. Bentley, who died Sept. 12th, 1885. He was the father of nine children, seven of whom survive him. Again he was married, Sept. 14, 1886, to Mrs. L. Dabney, who with the surviving children, grandchildren, one half-sister and a host of freinds and relatives remain to mourn their loss. At the age of 22 he became a Christian and from that day to his death he lived a practical Christian life. All classes, both young and old, appreciated him and he was ever faithful to the church, never slighting or neglecting his duty. For years one of the deacons of the Church of Christ in Perry, Ill., where his funeral was held, Aug. 14th, conducted by J. E. Deihl, of Griggsville, Ill. A noble life has been ended here only to be taken up for eternity. J. D. DABNEY.

McDANIELS.

On August 7th, at Cawker City, Kansas, age two years, one month and 23 days, Etna Ruth, the only child of Phœbe and Lemuel McDaniels. Dear little Ruth! She was one of the fairest and sweetest flowers that ever started to bloom in this world. Though but a babe, her greatest and most constant joy was the bringing of sunshine to those about her. She was so bright, so sweet and so full of promise. Are there not gardens fairer than the fields of earth, where these garnered buds open their beautiful petals and pour out their heavenly perfumes?

"I cannot say and I will not say
That she is dead—she is just away.
Think of her faring on, as dear
In the love of There as the love of Here."

Chicago, Ill. S. HOWARD MOORE.

OLIVER.

Bro Walter Oliver died Aug. 19, 1899, of typhoid fever, after a protracted illness. He was but 25 years old, and was a consistent disciple of his Master, Christ. He was laid to rest in Antioch cemetery, near Williamsburg, Mo., the funeral services being conducted by the writer, assisted by Elder John Coggins. We invoke the blessings of the Heavenly Father upon the bereaved family.

Movements of Missionaries.

Miss Emma Lyon, missionary at Nankin, China, has just returned to her home at Washington, Pa., this country, for a year's rest.

Dr. James Butchart, of Lu Cheo fu, China, who has been home spending a vacation, sails from Vancouver, Sept. 11th, for his field of labor.

Miss Carrie E. Goodrich, of Cleveland, Ohio, who has just been appointed a missionary to Tokio, Japan, sails from San Francisco on Sept. 19th. The Euclid Ave. Church of which she is a member, will provide for her support.

Miss Mary Rioch, missionary to Japan, who has been home on a year's vacation, sails from Vancouver, Sept. 11th. Her friends live at Hamilton, Ontario.

P. A. Davie, of Charlestown, Ind., a graduate of Kentucky University, has been appointed missionary to Japan, and will sail from San Francisco on Sept. 19th.

F. E. Hagin and wife, appointed missionaries to Japan, but cannot go out for about a year, will take charge of the church at Stanford, Ill., in the meantime.

Lowell C. McPherson and wife, of Buffalo, N. Y., and Melvin Menges and wife, of Stanford, Ill., will depart for Havana, Cuba, immediately after the Jubilee Convention.

Mrs. Dr. Nina Stevens and Baby Henry, of Akita, Japan, have just reached this country for a year's vacation. Bro. E. S. Stevens, her husband, could not return at this time for the reason that there was no one to take his place. She was accompanied by her sister, Miss Jessie Azbury, who has been doing missionary work in Japan for three years.

Two Japanese young ladies came to this country with Mrs. Stevens to study medicine.

Miss Kate V. Johnson, of Tokio, Japan, is at her home in Madison, Ind. In the future she will be supported by the church at Springfield, Ill., and the churches in Sangamon County.

Miss Bertha Marshall, of St. Louis, who has recently been appointed missionary to India, will sail from New York by way of Liverpool, Sept. 30th. She will go to Hurda.

Miss Effie D. Kellar, of Kansas City, Mo., a member of the South Prospect Church, will sail from Vancouver, Sept. 11th, for China. She will be associated with C. E. Molland, of Wuhu, China. She will probably be supported by the churches in Kansas City.

John G. McGavran and family, of Damoh, India, are now in America, sojourning at Limaville, Ohio. They will attend the Jubilee Convention.

G. L. Wharton and family, of Hurda, India, are at present sojourning in Detroit. Bro. Wharton is visiting a number of state conventions and will be present at the Jubilee Convention.

G. N. Shishmanian, of Constantinople, has recently returned from an extended visit to the churches in Turkey.

For Foreign Missions.

Comparing the receipts for Foreign Missions for the month of August with the corresponding month, 1898, shows the following:

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

CURRENT EVENTS.

It is reported that the corn crop in the United States for the present year will exceed anything in the way of a high record which this country has ever made. The bulk of the corn crop in this country is produced in eight of the states. The following table, showing the corn crops for the years 1898 and 1899, in eight states of the Union, will indicate something of the enormous yield:

States.	Bushels in 1899.	Bushels in 1898.
Ohio	110,000,000	102,828,439
Indiana	150,000,000	129,154,572
Illinois	230,000,000	199,959,810
Missouri	190,000,000	154,731,486
Kansas	340,000,000	132,842,048
Iowa	260,000,000	254,999,850
Nebraska	310,000,000	158,754,666
Texas	135,000,000	105,336,700
Totals	1,725,000,000	1,238,607,571

It will be seen from this table that Kansas leads all the states in this crop, with Nebraska for a close second. When it is remembered that this is only one of a great variety of productions in these states, the reader can form some idea of what it would mean to the country and to the world for the United States to miss a crop. Agriculture is the foundation of the country's prosperity, and we all have reason to be grateful when the tillers of the soil are repaid for their labors in abundant crops. This means that much of the money now resting in bank vaults will be distributed through the country in exchange for these surplus commodities.

Something of a sensational story was published in the papers last week, from the Associated Press, which has an important bearing on the Dreyfus case, if it turns out to be true. One Charles E. Bentheim, who served during the war with Spain as private in a New York volunteer regiment, claims that he was recently employed in the German war office as a translator of documents and map engraver; that during his service there he several times translated papers containing information concerning French fortifications, arsenals, warships and land plans, and that he knows all those who were concerned in the purchase of this information. He gives the names of a number of men, on both the German and French side, who were connected with these transactions. Most of this information came through a German who was recommended by the German Government to the United States as consul for this country, and appointed as such. This information was sent to the German war office under the American consular seals. Bentheim even goes on to tell how the aforesaid German, acting as the American consul, secured this information in Paris. He says that during all the time of his presence in the office he never heard of Captain Dreyfus, and never knew of such a person until he heard of his arrest. This story, which Mr. Bentheim expressed a willingness to swear to before a notary public, will make interesting reading for the French Government. It will not be assuring to the French to learn how readily information concerning forts, arsenals, guns, etc., can be purchased by foreign nations.

Labor Day, September 4, seems to have been quite generally observed throughout the country. Each year a larger number of the working men participate in the exercise of Labor Day. The demonstration usually takes the form of a parade of working men who display on banners their grievances or the rights for which they contend. Sometime during the day these workingmen are addressed by prominent speakers on themes in which they are interested. These parades and assemblies are of an entirely peaceful character, there seldom being any disturbance connected with them. It is altogether creditable to the workingmen of the country that these large numbers of people have gathered together in so many places with so little disorder. The day gives the laboring men an opportunity, not only of rest from their usual labors, but to set forth their aims and principles in a peaceful way and to call the attention of the country in a very striking manner to the abuses which they claim should be righted and to the reforms which should be instituted. More and more the day acquires a distinct character and will be used in behalf of those industrial reforms which affect the life and well-being of so large a part of the population of the country. There is an advantage in this combination of forces which, if wisely used, cannot fail to improve the condition of labor and of workingmen.

Recent statistics which have been published in books on China by Mr. Colquhon and Lord Charles Berresford, as reported in the Outlook, present some facts connected with American commerce in that country which will be surprising to most Americans, and which show that American commerce has taken on new dimensions, and that the United States is very deeply interested in the question of the "open door" in China. The Outlook says that "in the column of gains made by non-Asiatic countries in last year's commerce with China over that of the previous years, we stand alone. Nor is ours merely a gain where all others lose; it is a gain even greater than the loss sustained by Great Britain, the largest trader in the Orient." It further says that "no longer does Manchester compete with us in the export of cottons to China; we now have the lion's share. While in recent years our rival's interest has declined fourteen per cent. ours has increased over one hundred and twenty per cent. and cotton forms two-fifths of China's entire import trade." According to Mr. Colquhon, our entire export trade with China has increased one hundred and twenty-six per cent. in ten years. China's foreign trade amounts to between $250,000,000 and $300,000,000 yearly. Among the articles it imports from this country are flour and breadstuffs; raw and manufactured cotton; oil, timber, leather, paper, iron and steel products; machinery and hardware; locomotives, cars and rails; sewing machines, clocks and watches; telephone and telegraph supplies; electric railways and lights; chemicals and medicines—a trade which touches every section of our country. These facts indicate that we have no little interest in the question as to whether the "open door" policy or the "spheres of influence" policy is to prevail in China.

There are indications that the Dreyfus trial is nearing its close. The attempt on the part of the defense to secure the testimony of the foreign attaches, Swartzkoppen and Panizzardi, either in person or by the introduction of sworn statements, has failed. These foreigners refused to attend the court, but were willing to give their testimony before a special commission sent to them. This the French court declined to do. Speculation is still rife as to the outcome of the trial, with the general verdict in favor of acquittal. With the end of this trial, however, another sensation is expected in France. It is believed that the French Senate will soon be resolved into a High Court to try the conspirators who recently were arrested for planning to overthrow of the republic. According to an associated press dispatch from Paris, "the investigations that have been conducted by M. Fabre, the examining magistrate in charge of the case, have already resulted in the discovery of compromising documents in Paris and at Caen, which are said to leave no doubt in regard to the existence of the plot, notwithstanding the efforts of the nationalist, royalist and clerical organs, which for the moment are all pulling harmoniously together and ridicule the importance attached by the government to the alleged conspiracy." It is not expected, however, that the trial of Paul Deroulede and his fellow-conspirators will begin until the trial at Rennes has reached its terminus.

Captain Alfred Dreyfus is again pronounced guilty and sentenced to ten years' detention. Such was the verdict of the military court at Rennes, France, at five o'clock on Saturday, Sept. 9th. The vote of the seven jurors stood five for conviction and two for acquittal. By order of the Minister of War the generals who incriminated Captain Dreyfus were not present when the verdict was announced, and extra military precautions were provided against any appearance of disorder. Captain Dreyfus heard the pleading for and against him, but was led from the court room before the verdict of the court was published. The verdict was read to him in another room in the presence of two guards. As soon as the verdict was known in the streets of Rennes there was loud cheering for the army, and during the evening some incipient riots, but these were immediately quelled. There was great excitement in Paris on hearing the verdict, but the military and police precautions prevented any serious disorder. The counsel for the defense immediately set to work on an application to the Court of Revision for another hearing. Should this court confirm the action of the trial court at Rennes it is thought that an effort will be made to bring the matter again before the Court of Cassation on the ground that the trial court at Rennes exceeded its limitations. There is some question, it seems, as to whether Captain Dreyfus will have to again undergo the humiliation of degradation, but both M. Demange and Col. Jouast agree that the the sentence means ten years of additional confinement, but not on Devil's Island. He will be sent to a fortress in Corsica, or in the Island of Marguerite. But the brightest hope of many is that he will be pardoned by the President of France and given his liberty within a few days. In the meantime the world is wondering when and how France will purge herself of the infamy of this unjust sentence.

Some days before the close of the trial of Captain Dreyfus in the military court in Rennes, his friends began to lose hope in his acquittal. The bias of the court in favor of the generals of the army became so clear in its rulings that even his counsel had about despaired of a sentence of acquittal. Leading questions asked by Labori, questions intended to get at the facts, were refused by the president of the court, which led to sharp altercations at times, and finally to what amounted, practically, to Labori's withdrawal from the case; that is, he ceased to question witnesses altogether toward the close of the trial and made no speech for the defense at the end, on the ground that he was irritating the court and probably thereby injuring the prospects of his client for acquittal. A further reason for not speaking at the close is that the senior counsel, M. Demange made such a masterful and convincing analysis of the testimony, such a heart-searching peroration, that it would not be wise to disturb the influences of this speech upon the mind of the jurors. But it was all to little purpose. The verdict of guilty seems to have been the foregone conclusion of the court and no testimony, nor eloquence, nor human sympathy, nor sense of justice, could avert the verdict rendered. It may be difficult for foreigners to appreciate the difficulties under which this court labored, but at this distance its verdict seems to us to be nothing short of a surrender to the demands of the army. Tne life of Dreyfus and of his wife, and the honor of his children, had to be offered a living sacrifice upon the altar of militarism, to appease the wrath of a murderous and infamous conspiracy against a Jew. But the end is not yet. The verdict that condemned Dreyfus in the eyes of the army of France has condemned France in the eyes of the world, and she must now wash this stain from her escutcheon or pay the penalty that comes to every nation that fears not God and regards not his righteousness. Though the innocent suffer, justice cannot always be defeated.

UNIFICATION OF MISSIONARY INTERESTS.

The tendency of the times is in the direction of unity and co-operation. This tendency manifests itself, not only in the industrial world, but is making itself felt among the churches. The call for federation among evangelical churches, with a view of doing more effective work in moral and social reform and in the evangelization of the world, is but a manifestation of this feeling. It would be strange if the same influence was not felt in the internal work in the various religious bodies. That it is being felt and acted upon is a matter of knowledge to those who are acquainted with the religious movements of our times.

For a number of years there has been a growing feeling among many of our wisest pastors and most devoted friends of missions that there should be a closer unification of our missionary organizations. The editor of this paper has shared in this feeling, and has taken opportunity, occasionally, to express himself. It is no hobby with us. It is no pet child of ours. We simply share, in common with an increasing number of ministers and laymen among us, the conviction that there is a more excellent way of carrying on our missionary work than that which we are now pursuing. Unification, as it seems to us, would work improvement in three directions at least: (1) Economy of administration; (2) the avoidance of friction, and (3) an increase of missionary spirit and of missionary liberality, together with a decrease in the number of special calls on the churches.

It would seem to be an opportune time to introduce these improvements. We are about celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of our missionary work, and if there are any better methods we ought to be willing to adopt them, to the end that the second fifty years of our mission work may be a vast improvement over what has gone before. And then our missionary work is growing, and our capacity to do missionary work is rapidly increasing, and methods which have been found satisfactory in the past will not prove adequate in the future. The very fact that our mission work is increasing is urged by some as a reason why we should make no change in existing methods. They say: "See what we have accomplished! Why should there be any demand for a change?" True, we have made gain, and it would be a strange thing if we had not, considering that so few of our churches a quarter of a century ago were committed to anything like regular offerings for missions. With the growth in spiritual life and power there must of necessity have been growth in our missionary offerings. But it ought to be plain enough to thinking people that this gain is not to be continued under present methods. There is too much high pressure, too much "whooping up" in the newspapers, and too many calls upon the churches for the work to go on without a reaction. It requires no prophet to see that unless there is a change of method we cannot continue to make healthy growth.

We believe the organization of the Foreign Society, twenty-four years ago, was wise. We were with those who organized it. It was wise, because the time had not yet come in our history when the churches as such were ready to enlist in the work of Foreign Missions. The work had to be begun by individual members until the churches were prepared to take it up. They are now prepared to do so—those that are engaged in mission work at all. The reasons which made the organization of a foreign society wise no longer exist. The work can now be carried forward by the same organization that does the home work.

We need but one national missionary organization for both home and foreign work, with as many boards or committees to look after the special features of this work as may be found expedient. With one missionary society, one set of officers, one national convention, one set of committees, the work would be greatly simplified. We have already consolidated the work of negro evangelization with the other home work, and this was a move in the right direction. Another move equally wise would be to allow a small per cent. of the missionary offerings to be set apart for Ministerial Relief. This would save a special offering, would put that fund on the basis where it legitimately belongs, and would bring in a steadier income for it. Just as fast as the churches become educated in mission work and make it a matter of their regular, systematic, conscientious giving they will need to make fewer offerings, but they will be larger and more generously participated in. Many of our churches are adopting the plan of taking two offerings a year. These are collections, merely, but special efforts are made to enlist the whole church in making an offering worthy of the cause for which it is made.

Of course, the objection that bequests made to the several societies would be endangered by this consolidation will be made, but it requires no great amount of legal lore to understand how one society can be made the legal successor of another in a way to secure all its bequests. The Congregationalists have a similar scheme of consolidation of missionary societies on hand. The Outlook, in discussing the question, advocates the consolidation of four societies into one, "with one general secretary and one executive committee." Concerning the advisability of this it says:

> There would be some advantages of economy in administration, some saving of duplication in energy, some avoidance of what is now necessary friction; but the great advantage would be that which always comes from unification of work when it is animated by a common spirit and seeks a common end. The Congregational missionary operations are now suffering from the same cause which impedes the efficiency of our army, the various departments of which are not brought into due subordination under one commanding officer. The remedy for those evils, in the one case as in the other, is a radical reorganization of the work so as to give it a single purpose, a single plan and a single supreme executive head.

The Outlook does not seem to have any fears about the forfeiture of bequests to these societies, which must be very large.

The matter at least seems to us of sufficient importance to justify a calm and dispassionate consideration of the subject. There is no need for mere controversy, but if any one can contribute anything toward the solution of the problem, he should do so. We all desire the prosperity of our missionary work, and at most there can be but a difference in judgment as to the best methods of realizing this end. There need be no haste in reaching a conclusion on this question. We should favor the plan of appointing a large committee to consider the problem for a whole year and report at our next annual convention following the Jubilee Convention. Surely, there would be no harm in looking the matter full in the face to ascertain what there is in it.

W. K. PENDLETON'S DECEASE.

We have been greatly touched by the death of our distinguished and venerable brother, Dr. W. K. Pendleton, of Eustis, Fla. Brother Pendleton has filled a very high place in the councils of the brotherhood through the larger part of our history. He was intimately associated with Alexander Campbell, both in his educational and editorial work, and succeeded him as president of Bethany College and as editor of the Millennial Harbinger. He was a Virginian by birth and culture, and no higher type of the true Virginia gentleman have we ever known. He was a scholarly man. His information possessed a wide range. There were few subjects upon which he could not talk intelligently and instructively. He had a philosophic mind, that looked into the meaning of things. He had a passionate love of nature, and we loved to hear him talk of the various kinds of fruits and flowers, their methods of culture and characteristic qualities. He was familiar with the political history of the nation, as well as with its religious development. He was a graceful speaker, but it was as a writer that he excelled. No writer among us possessed a purer literary style than he. He was master of the finest English. He had a comprehensive knowledge of our history as a religious body, and of our principles and aims. His was a broad and generous mind. He could never have been a hobbyist, and his culture was too broad and generous for him ever to have been a sectarian.

Resigning the presidency of Bethany College, he retired to the lake region of Florida, and bought him a beautiful home and orange grove in the edge of Eustis, and on the lake of the same name. It was an ideal home. It was the pleasure of the editor of this paper to visit him and his family there more than once. We were surprised to find on conversing with him—and what a conversationalist he was!—how remarkably he kept up with the best thought of the age. There, in his Florida home, amid his orange trees, surrounded by his books and magazines, he kept in touch with all the great movements of the times, and discoursed wisely concerning them. We can never forget those charming days spent with him at Eustis, nor our long talks together concerning the things of the kingdom of God. No home ever dispensed more genial hospitality than did that of Brother and Sister Pendleton. Through his influence and aid a church was organized in Eustis and a neat church building erected. It was our pleasure to assist in the completion of this building after a visit there, by writing letters to a number of his personal friends throughout the country, asking donations to purchase windows for the building, and especially a memorial window in honor of him. The cheerfulness with which his friends responded was a tribute to his high character and influence.

It was his custom to visit Bethany each summer at the commencement time. He did so in June last, and remained North until the time of his departure. This was as it should be. Where else could the great and good man have breathed his life out so peacefully as amid the beloved hills that surround Old Bethany, and on the scene of his long labors for so many years?

Truly, a great man in Israel has fallen; yea, rather has ascended, but his influence will linger with us and his example and his life will remain a permanent legacy to the brotherhood with which he was identified. At a good old age, full of years and crowned with the love and respect of his brethren, he has fallen asleep in Christ. Our profound sympathy is extended to his beloved wife and family in their bereavement.

INDUSTRIAL EMANCIPATION.

With all the expansion of freedom during the present century in politics, religion and trade, there is still another great achievement before us; that is the phase of the social problem known as the emancipation of industry. The serfdom of the feudal ages has been exchanged for an industrial system scarcely less degrading to the manual worker.

The facts in the case are sufficiently distressing to contemplate. According to English statistics, compiled by Mr. Chas. Booth and others, there are 1,300,000 persons living in London below the margin of poverty, a million persons in Great Britain in a state of chronic want, General Booth's "submerged tenth," another million receiving poor law relief, and multitudes of workers, skilled and unskilled, earning very meagre wages, barely enough to keep body and soul together, when they can get anything to do. In contrast with these facts it is estimated that one million individuals among the rich receive more than twice as much of the annual income from labor as the millions who actually produce it. The distress from existing conditions in Great Britain is appalling.

When we turn to the United States the condition and prospects of labor are scarcely more gratifying. Here the infernal sweating system has its multitudes of helpless victims, and the number of the unemployed is being constantly increased by the formation of "trusts." The Commercial Travelers' Association has recently declared that 35,000 members had thus been thrown out of employment. The slaughter of the innocents, the ruin of the weak, is not less numerous in other departments of the industrial service. The growth of colossal trusts and the control of great railway systems by three or four inordinately wealthy individuals is unfavorable to the well being of the worker. Those who argue that these combinations minister to the commercial supremacy of the nation and to a wonderful development of its wealth should consider if the degradation of a nation's manhood and a new serfdom is not too high a price to pay for concentrated wealth.

The present state of confusion and injustice in the industrial world is marked by an increasing number of strikes and the greater violence that characterizes them. An English contemporary observes that the strike epidemic this summer in the United States has been attended by more than the average of unreason and savagery. It remarks that the acme seems to have been reached in a murderous assault in New York upon a physician, whose offense was that he had dressed the wounds of a non-union man or "scab." In Cleveland two druggists refused medicine to a sick man lest they should suffer from the boycott laid by the Union on all tradesmen who should sell to persons traveling by the cars of the hostile corporation. In the same city a physician called to attend a sick child, was warned by the Union not to go to her, as her father was a "scab." He replied by bidding them serve notice of the boycott on the Almighty, as the child would soon be in heaven. The underlying significance of these incidents, with such others as the use of dynamite, involving innocent lives in the wreck of cars, is the desperately brutal temper revealed among many workingmen as ripe for any sort of revolutionary violence, and needing only favorable conditions to break forth into sansculottism. Indeed, one may hear the remark nowadays at both ends of the social scale, from bankers and day laborers, that a social revolution is nearing.

But notwithstanding these facts on the dark side of the problem, there are at least three considerations that indicate a peaceful and satisfactory solution.

First, ethical considerations are more and more taken into the account. The crystallization of selfishness known as "vested interests" will not at once and without a struggle adbicate its throne, but common justice, the claims of humanity and the rights of Demos, the Old World aristocracies themselves are beginning to recognize. The parable of the Good Samaritan as the exposition of Christian humanity has more significance to the consciousness of the modern man than it ever had before.

Second, the growing distrust of war makes for industrial progress.

Third, to this end also the co-operative movement is contributing effectively. In New Zealand, where co-operation has been carried to the verge of state socialism, there are no strikes and no social problem. The reconciliation between capital and labor lies in this direction. The brutal competition on which our civilization is largely based makes for poverty, strife and revolution; co-operation is a moral force, it elevates the character of the worker. An additional influence making for this emancipation is the sympathy and support of Christianity. It is not too much to say that the church has the power, if she has the grace to use it, to put an end to industrial slavery. On our shoulders, dear Christian brethren, to a large extent, lies the responsibility of its suppression or perpetuity. If the iron of gospel brotherliness and humanity has entered into our souls, we will stand for equality of opportunity and the rights of man as our Brother and Savior Jesus Christ stood for them. The Golden Rule is the solution of the industrial problem.

MACATAWA MUSINGS.

A strong south wind is blowing to-day and the monotonous roar of the waves, breaking upon the beach, sounds like a dirge for the dying season. Bursts of sunshine through the flying clouds fill the lake with changing colors. Gazing out through my study window toward the southwest to the far horizon, the lake presents the appearance, as I have noted before in these musings, of a wide-stretching meadow on which a vast flock of white sheep are feeding and frisking. What a charm and mystery there is about such a scene! I often find myself wondering what mysteries lie hidden beneath these blue depths of water. If the waters were suddenly dried up, what a mighty basin there would be, and what treasures there might be found in it! What innumerable tribes of living things live and move and have their being in these waters! Much of the charm which we find in the ocean, or in these vast inland seas, comes, no doubt, from the mystery connected with them. Is it not also true that much of the charm of life comes of the mystery in which it is involved? Who knows what to-morrow will bring forth? What plummet line has ever fathomed the mysterious depths of the human soul? Whose vision has penetrated into the unseen realities of the spiritual universe which lies all about us? How mean and vulgar a thing life would be, stripped of these mysteries and reduced to some mathematical formulæ which we could readily comprehend! Often I find myself lost in these reveries, under the spell of these surroundings, with "thoughts that lie too deep for utterance."

Speaking of mystery, I can remember the war which some of our preachers used to make against it in the years long past. Some of them had a great passion for dispelling mysteries. Even the "mystery of godliness," before which Paul stood in awe, was dissipated by their touch and became a very commonplace affair. Passages of Scripture whose profound meaning had baffled the commentators for centuries were made plain as daylight by these new expositors. Let one example suffice: That early promise, made in the Garden, that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head, simply meant that whenever a man should see a snake he would endeavor to put his heel on its head and crush it! How simple! The people said he made the Scriptures "very plain." If I should take a bucket of water out of Lake Michigan and call it the lake, I would indeed rob it of its mystery, but my lake would float no commerce, would support no tribes of living things in its mysterious depths, and would fill the soul with no feelings of awe or grandeur, gazing upon its vast expanse and listening to the deep music of its resounding billows. By this same process we can take all the mystery out of godliness. If we could only get God and the supernatural out of the universe, we might get rid of mystery; but as long as God is in the Bible, and in the world which he has created, filling them with his glory and majesty, the shadows of these vast infinities which men call mysteries are bound to fall across our finite minds. Better far the mystery with the faith that accepts that which it cannot understand than to have God and the universe brought within the scope of our finite knowledge.

Speaking of knowledge: How little there is of it compared with what we do not know. We know only a few things and we know these imperfectly. Here we see through a glass darkly. What then? How shall we get on in a world where there are so many things we do not understand? "We walk by faith, not by sight." This is a contrast between trust and knowledge. We cannot be expected to understand here in the flesh all of our Father's dealings with us. His view takes in the eternities; our vision is limited to a few brief years. Walking by faith is a necessity growing out of our limited knowledge. No doubt, too, there is a discipline in it for our spiritual culture which would not be in walking by sight. No doubt our knowledge will increase as the years go by, but we shall never outgrow faith. It will never be "swallowed up in sight." Otherwise, why is it that our faith increases as our knowledge increases? Every Christian is conscious that his faith in God and in unseen realities grows stronger as the years go by, until it becomes independent of many props which at one time he regarded as quite essential to it. This is but a normal develment of a faculty of our nature, under the life-giving power of Christ, and is an essential and enduring element of Christian character.

"But the greatest of these is love," and love is the greatest mystery in the universe. Who can analyze love? Who can fathom the depths of mother-love, to say nothing of the infinite depth of the love of God? It is love that cements and unifies. Where love prevails it isn't necessary that we all see alike and understand alike. This might be necessary in a system where love was not an essential part. It is not so in Christianity. The church is composed of many grades of minds, many degrees of culture, every variety of temperament and taste, and different degrees of progress in knowledge and in faith. Only love can make a unity out of all this variety. Men used to burn each other for their difference of opinion, in their zeal for soundness in the faith, but love never presided at any auto da fe. It would have quenched all the martyr fires with its tears of compassion if it had been permitted to do so. Love does not accuse a brother of disloyalty to Christ because he does not interpret a portion of His Word like his brethren do. It thinketh no evil. The man who loves his brother can conceive of the possibility of himself being mistaken and his brother being in the right in any matter of difference. Faith alone is unequal to that task. Yes, Paul is right: "The greatest of these is love." And John is right: "God is love." And the poet is right:

> "Love is the golden chain that binds
> Our hearts to heav'n above;
> And he's an heir of heav'n who finds
> His bosom glow with love."

The Jubilee Convention comes on apace. How many hearts are turning toward it with great expectation! Let us hope that it will be as inspiring in retrospect as it is in prospect. But we shall have a foretaste of the great Jubilee Convention, no doubt, in the convention of the brotherhood of the state of Missouri, which meets in the capital of the state, October 3. This, and the educational conference which precedes it, will deal with problems of vital interest to the cause of Christ in the state. What Missourian does not look forward with interest to one of her great annual gatherings? There are a number of faces we always expect to meet there, of men and women with whom it is a delight and an honor to be associated in Christian service. There should be a great gathering at Jefferson City, this year, and the representative men and women of the churches of the state should be present to take counsel together concerning the important interests of the cause, and to strengthen each others' hearts for the great work that lies before us. I am looking forward with interest to meeting once more in that convention the men and women whom I have so long known and loved. May the spirit of grace and wisdom rule in its councils, and may its issue be to the glory of God and the advancement of his kingdom.

Hour of Prayer.

CAUSING OTHERS TO STUMBLE.

(Rom. 14:13 23; 1 Cor. 8:9-13.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Sept. 20.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Neither liberty nor knowledge divorces us from the obligation to regard the welfare of others in our personal actions. They emphasize that obligation. We are, in an important sense, our brother's keeper.

It is characteristic of the breadth and all-sidedness of Paul's character that in the midst of his conflict with the Judaizers in behalf of liberty he should pause to drop a word of caution against the abuse of liberty in disregarding the welfare of others. It is well to "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free." It is right to resist the efforts of those who would bind on the church rites and customs not taught by Christ, and to refuse to be limited in our Christian liberty by the opinions and traditions which have been outgrown; but we may not exercise our personal liberty in a way to cause our weaker brother to stumble.

This was a very practical question in the Corinthian church, made up as it was of converts from Judaism and paganism. Was it right to eat meat offered in sacrifice to an idol? It is not wrong in itself, is Paul's answer, but if the eating of such meat is likely to lead your weak brother back into idolatry, it is better to abstain from eating it. It is more Christlike to waive one's right in the interest of a brother's salvation.

The same question, essentially, existed in the church at Rome, and the same advice is given. In this passage from the Roman letter Paul admonishes the church not to "judge one another any more, but judge ye this, rather, that no man put a stumblingblock in his brother's way, or an occasion of falling." He understands that "nothing is unclean of itself," but if any one "counteth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean." If any one performs an act innocent in itself, believing it to be wrong, he thereby commits a wrong in his own conscience. But why should we destroy or even grieve our brother, for whom Christ died, by eating meat, seeing that "the kingdom of God is not eating and drinking, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit?" So this general conclusion is reached: "It is good not to eat flesh nor to drink wine nor to do anything whereby thy brother stumbleth."

It is one thing to acquire knowledge; it is another thing to so use that knowledge as not to make it an occasion for stumbling to others. This is a needed word of caution to all advanced thinkers. It is one thing to maintain our liberty in Christ. It is another thing to so use that liberty as that it shall become neither a cloak for licentiousness for ourselves nor a stumbling-block for others. This is a word of caution to all those who have fled from the tyranny of ecclesiasticism to find liberty in our freer churches. How to use knowledge and liberty so as to be a help instead of a hindrance to others is quite as difficult, and quite as important, too, as the securing of them. Many a man knows how to acquire wealth, but few, comparatively, know how to use it for the welfare of others.

We have in this lesson the elementary and foundation principle of a true sociology, viz., regard for each other's rights and welfare. We cannot act independently of our neighbors. We must consider what influence our actions have upon others. Each one must "look not upon his own things only, but also upon the things of others." This is Christianity; nothing short of this meets the demands of Christ's law of "bearing one another's burdens." This will help us to see how far society is at present from being truly Christian. Our whole social and industrial order needs to be brought into harmony with this teaching of Paul, which is but a reflection of the teaching of his Master and ours.

This mutual regard for each other's welfare is the bond of unity in the local church. Where it prevails there are no church quarrels, strifes or divisions. In such a church the strong will "bear the infirmities of the weak," and all will "follow after things which make for peace, and things whereby they may edify one another."

These passages furnish no warrant for the practice in support of which they have often been quoted, of attempting to enforce one's crochets and opinions on his brethren on the ground of conscientious scruples. They are not a rule whereby the weak may govern the strong, but by which the strong may bear the infirmities of the weak. They are not intended to bind liberty and knowledge in the chains of opinionism and narrowness, but to point out how both liberty and knowledge should be used with due regard to the welfare of others. It is a more serious matter than many of us have imagined to put a stumblingblock in the way of one of the weakest of God's children. Just in proportion as we have knowledge and influence is it important that we seek to avoid this danger and to make our power an unmixed blessing to others.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we thank Thee that Thou didst condescend to take our nature upon Thee and to become one with us, that Thou mightest become our Savior and Redeemer. When Thou wert here in the flesh Thou didst not seek to please Thyself, but others. Thou didst not serve Thyself, but humanity. Thou madest Thyself of no reputation that Thou mightest lift us up to the true dignity of sonship. May this mind which was in Thee, O Lord, be also in us, that we may serve one another and seek each other's welfare. Forbid, we pray Thee, that we should be guilty of putting a stumblingblock in the way of others, but let us seek, rather, to edify one another and to bear each other's burdens. So shall we be Thy disciples indeed, and shall show to the world the beauty, the unselfishness and the power of the religion which Thou hast taught us. For Thy name's sake. Amen!

Questions and Answers.

In a series of meetings conducted by Evangelist W. B. Holcomb (Methodist) he was preaching on John 3:5 and said: "If this passage were translated correctly it would read, "Born of the WORD and the WIND," instead of "water and Spirit." Does Thayer so translate the above Greek word?

2. Is the conversation between Jesus and Nicodemus in figurative language?

Stuart, Va. I. A. Briggs.

No scholar who has any reputation to maintain would venture to give any such translation to the Greek phrase rendered "born of water and of the Spirit" in the authorized version. Mr. Holcomb may be a well-meaning man, and may accomplish some good as an evangelist, but evidently if he had more Spirit and less wind in his theology he would be a more efficient evangelist. Hudor is the regular Greek term for water, and pneuma is the regular Greek word for spirit. There is something very crooked in the theology that requires these words to be twisted out of their ordinary meanings to serve its needs.

2. The spiritual change wrought in a person in becoming a Christian is here figuratively described as a birth, but the terms used in describing how this birth is effected are not figurative.

I recently heard one of our leading evangelists say: "It is foolishness to suppose the apostle Paul was an unmarried man; he was a widower." By what authority is this claim made? A learner.

Weatherford, Texas.

There is pretty clear evidence that Paul was a member of the Sanhedrim. He says that when Stephen was on trial he cast his vote against him, which would imply this official position. It is claimed that only married men were members of the Sanhedrim. In addition to this evidence, Paul's advice on the subject of marriage has been thought by many to indicate personal experience in the marriage state. We think the tendency among scholars to-day is to regard Paul as having been married at one time in his life, though the testimony seems hardly decisive enough to justify any dogmatism on the subject.

Did Paul see Jesus as the other apostles saw him, or does he mean, in 1 Cor. 15:8, that he saw him by the eye of faith?

I. M. Carter.

Ponca City, O. T.

There is no evidence that Paul ever saw Jesus in the flesh. He saw Him, however, in a vision near Damascus at the time of his conversion, and this is what is referred to in the passage cited above. We must regard this as an actual appearance of Christ to Saul, and must understand that Paul actually saw Him with his own eyes, for he was blinded by His glory. This actual seeing of Christ was essential to his witness to His resurrection.

Did not the Jews at the time of Christ believe their own Scriptures? Why, then, did they reject Christ, "of whom Moses and the prophets wrote?" H.

No; it can hardly be said that the Jewish leaders who rejected Christ believed their own Scriptures. They thought they did; they had a superstitious reverence for the sacred writings, and were sticklers for every letter of the law, but they lacked spiritual understanding of its meaning, and hence lacked true faith. They were literalists and legalists. The Savior said to them: "You search the Scriptures, and in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." This is not a command to search the Scriptures, as the common version would indicate, but a statement that they did search the Scriptures and looked to them for eternal life, but eternal life was not to be found in a slavish conformity to the letter of the law, but rather in the hearty acceptance of Him of whom these Scriptures testified. In vain do they study the Scriptures who do not see behind the book "the Man in the Book." The Scriptures are not an end, in themselves, but a means to an end. The men who are the greatest sticklers, to-day, for the mere letters of the Word, and who quote their favorite passages unceasingly to prove their favorite theories, are by no means men of greatest faith. Many of these still reject Christ in spirit in their contention for some favorite hobby or pet theory. There is a class of religionists who believe they are doing God service in breaking up churches by the reiteration and literalistic interpretation of certain passages of Scripture which they hold as the touchstone of true orthodoxy. Beware of such. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of His," although he may have the whole Bible by heart, and hold to the inspiration of its capital letters and punctuation marks.

A preacher recently said, while preaching on the text, "I am the vine and ye are the branches," that this applies only to the apostles; that his disciples to-day are not branches. I did not accept his teaching. Was he right? J. W. Adams.

Lebanon, Kans.

The passage referred to above teaches the vital relationship between Christ and His disciples. This relationship is as true and real to-day as it was in the days when Christ uttered the remark. The point is that as the vine is the source of life to its branches, so Christ is the source of life for men, and those only truly live who are in vital connection with Him. There is a tendency among some teachers to limit many of the promises and truths of the gospel to the apostolic age, to the impoverishment of the Christianity of to-day. According to this theory of interpretation Christianity, instead of being true to the vision of Ezekiel, beginning as a shallow stream and flowing on in an ever-deepening and widening channel, is just the reverse, growing shallower and narrower as the ages pass by. Aside from the miraculous phenomena associated with the introduction and confirmation of the gospel we need place no limit upon the fullness of divine life possible to Christians to-day.

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

CHRISTIAN UNION IN OUR NATIONAL CONVENTIONS.

BENJAMIN L. SMITH.

The Convention of 1890, appointed a standing committee on Christian union as follows:

B. B. Tyler, F. D. Power, C. L. Loos, T. P. Haley, R. Moffett. B. B. Tyler, as chairman, made annual reports on Christian union, of which the following is a summary:

There is an increasing interest in the problem of union. This is manifest in many places and ways. It is expressed in favor of a more intimate union among Christians, and in Christian Endeavor and other similar conventions it is uniformly cheered to the echo. All attempts to apologize is met with an ominious silence. The people eagerly listen to every man of prominence who speaks in favor of a union of the children of God for worship and work. All that is written on the subject by men who are known in the church is read with avidity. The principal Protestant denominations have expressed a desire for a fuller realization of the unity for which the Christ prayed. The Free Baptists, Christians and Congregationalists are engaged in a serious courtship. There is more than a possibility of an open and formal union of these brethren in the not distant future.

Sometime since the Methodists, of Canada, sunk their minor differences to such an extent that there is now simply the Methodist Church of Canada. There is a tendency on the part of those who are most alike to come together in a visible union. It begins to look as if all the Presbyterians will in time unite, all Methodists, Baptists, etc. And while such a union of denominations is not that for which our Lord prayed, it is a step in the right direction and should excite our gratitude and lead us to thank the Head of the body, our Lord Jesus Christ.

There are five definite plans of union before the people:

1. The first to be named in this report is the last that has been presented: it is the scheme of the Pope, and so the Catholic Church. "Submission" is the only word which exactly characterizes this plan. The way to the reunion of all Christendom is for all men, churches and institutions to acknowledge the Pope as the vicegerent of God, and humbly submit to his authority. Submission to "His Holiness" on the part of all who believe will solve the problem of union among Christians.

2. The word "consolidation" describes the plan of union proposed some years ago by the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States and the Lambeth Conference.

So prominent has this scheme been for a number of years that we are generally familiar with its terms. Innumerable articles have been published in newspapers, religious and secular, in dignified reviews and stately quarterly, as well as stereotyped books.

The four articles as proposed by the House of Bishops, and amended by the Lambeth Conference, are as follows:

First. The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, as containing all things necessary to salvation, and as a rule and ultimate standard of faith.

Second. The Apostles' Creed as the Baptismal Symbol, and the Nicene Creed as the sufficient statement of the Christian faith.

Third. The two sacraments ordained by Christ himself—Baptism and the Supper of the Lord—ministered with the unfailing use of Christ's words of institution, and of the elements ordained by him.

Fourth. The Historic Episcopate, locally adapted in the methods of its administration to the varging needs of the nations and peoples called of God with the unity of his church.

An important contribution to the current discussion of the problem of union was the publication of a symposium in the Independent newspaper, March 8, 1894, on "Ministerial Reciprocity," to which only bishops in the Protestant Episcopal Church contributed. There were thirty or more contributors, who with one voice declared that they were willing to recognize as ministers of the gospel only those who have been set apart to this sacred service by Episcopal ordination. This was an important contribution as tending to show how little, after all that has been said, the Episcopal Church is willing to promote unity and union.

3. A plan of denominational confederation has found much favor among Presbyterians. A meeting was held in Philadelphia last April in which representatives of eight Presbyterian and Reformed denominations in the United States considered and agreed on a plan of federal union, which was ordered to be forwarded to the Synods and General Assemblies of the churches represented. The churches officially represented were the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the Reformed Church in the United States, the United Presbyterian Church, the Reformed Presbyterian Church (General Synod), the Reformed Church (Synod), the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and the Associate Reformed Synod of the South.

4. The fourth plan of union is well described by the word "compromise." The Congregational State Association of New Jersey, at its meeting in East Orange last April, said:

We propose to the various Protestant Churches of the United States a union, or alliance, based on—

1. The Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, inspired by the Holy Spirit, as containing all things necessary to salvation and as being the rule and ultimate standard of Christian faith.

2. Discipleship to Jesus Christ, the divine Savior and Teacher of the world.

3. The Church of Christ ordained by him to preach his gospel to the world.

4. Liberty of conscience in the interpretation of the Scriptures and in the administration of the church.

Such an alliance, the report continues, should have for its object, among others:

1. Mutual acquaintance and fellowship.

2. Co operation in Foreign and Domestic Missions.

3. The prevention of rivalries between competing churches in the same field.

4. The ultimate organic union of the whole visible body of Christ.

This action will become the proposition of ten Congregational denominations in the United States.

5. The plan of union proposes to go back to the apostolic age and restore the unity which existed among the believers in the beginning.

In that one catholic, apostolic church we have an example and model of church unity. This model shows that the believers in Jesus in the apostolic age were:

1. United in their creed. They believed in Jesus as the Christ, the Son of God. This was and is the creed of Christianity. The church needs no other.

2. Their ordinances were two—baptism and the Lord's Supper—ordained by Christ, the Head of the body.

3. Those early disciples endeavored to be Christlike, and to do whatever the Master would like to have them do.

If in the apostolic church, as described in the New Testament, we have an example and a model of unity, then this must be the basis and nature of the unity which we would seek in our day.

The Christ said (John 12:32), "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself." This would be unity in Christ.

When Paul discussed this very subject in its relation to the Church of God in Corinth (1 Cor. 3:11) he said: "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus the Christ." Believers need more of the Christ in them in order to the unity desired by our Lord. More of the mind of Christ, more of the Holy Spirit dwelling in our hearts by faith, will promote the cause of unity far more satisfactorily than any of our addresses or resolutions.

"Heaven is the abode of unity, and when the spirit of unity comes into a soul or into a church, it cometh from above." "Discord is of the earth, or from beneath." The divisions of Christians show that there is still much carnality amongst them. The more carnal a Christian is, the more sectarian will he be; and the more spiritual he is, the more loving and forbearing and self-renouncing are you sure to find him. And it is with Christian communities as with individual Christians.

Happy church, where sectarianism shall shall first be swept away in an inundation of love and joy, whose communion shall first break forth into the purest and holiest, and yet most comprehensive of all communions—the communion of the Holy Ghost! Would to God that church were ours.

"THE HIGHER CRITICISM AND THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST."

F. N CALVIN.

I have just read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of August 31st, and find myself involuntarily sharpening my pencil to say some things that press for utterance.

I read with special interest Bro. Assiter's article on "The Higher Criticism," and the editor's reply. I am not a "Higher Critic" because, as the editor says, I do not feel myself equipped for the work, nor have I in addition to my many other duties the time for that sort of investigation. I can say frankly, from what I have already read, that I have no sympathy with "Destructive Criticism." Hence it may not be assuming too much to ask for a hearing on this question.

I have been a constant reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for many years, and feel fairly familiar with the positions taken by its editor. I find myself in as little sympathy with a class of criticism that has been developed of late against the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as with the "Destructive Bible Critics." I recently overheard a conversation in which it was claimed that the attitude of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST toward the "Higher Criticism" was causing it to lose favor and patronage among some of the brethren. I know nothing of the grounds of the rumor, nor whether it be true or false.

It may be mental obtuseness on my part, but I must say that I have been wholly unable to see anything endorsed by the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that should in any way or at any time even tend toward the loss of confidence. I sometimes see statements in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that I cannot endorse. But what of it? Should they have been suppressed for that reason? By no means. They at least stimulate thought and investigation, and I am not compelled to accept them. Indeed, it would be a very dull and uninteresting paper that admits to its columns only what we have all thought out and endorsed. For twenty years I have been charmed with the spirit of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

It has shown the true spirit of liberal, broad-minded journalism. It has brought from its rich storehouse things new and old; it has endeavored to keep its readers posted in not only what is being done, but also in what is being thought along religious lines. It has ever been open and fair in its dealings with different sides of living questions. It has kept up with the age in which it is living; and to do this I doubt not that during the last twenty years it has passed between many a Scylla and Charybdis known only to those behind the engine or in the pilot house. It has brought before us some of the best thoughts of up-to-date thinkers, not necessarily because it has "championed" all they say; but, thanks to its wise management, to let us know what the world of to-day is thinking and saying. I must say that I regard it as being not only unjust, but exceedingly unfortunate that any of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST should so far misunderstand its true position as to get or give the impression that it is the special "champon" of the "Higher Criticism."

As for the Higher Criticism, it, like many other questions that have arisen in this century, is here to stay. It will not destroy it for us to make faces at it, or paint ugly pictures on balloons and send them up to frighten the people.

Nor can we answer its arguments by saying hard things about some of its advocates. For we know that it numbers among its advocates some of the best men in the churches to-day.

I have no doubt that many extreme positions have been taken. I am quite satisfied that the same is true with regard to the "orthodox" view. I have no idea that the last word has yet been spoken on either side of these questions. I have not the slightest doubt but that the truth will endure, and that is all that any of us should ask.

The position taken by the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in his Texas address (which I had the pleasure to hear), is an impregnable position, and is, to my mind, the only one for our brethren to take. We have been wont to condemn others for not being open to invetigation. Can it be possible that we have cultivated the same spirit, so that we become alarmed if one of our papers or scribes calls our attention to a new thought, or takes a position different from the one we have been accustomed to hold? "Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon, lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice." Have we learned all of the truth? Whoever arouses us from our self-sufficiency and makes known to us truth is a helper. Sometimes our enemies are our best monitors. While I would not for one moment depreciate the value of character in a teacher, yet the special and vital point to the Disciple is the truth of the thing taught. Instead of casting reflections upon the character of the teacher, as the opponents to truth have always done, it is the duty of the Disciple to investigate the teachings, and if they be true, accept them, but if false, reject them. It is no credit to any one, nor is it an act of piety, to cling to any view simply because that was his former position.

The columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST have ever been open to the best thought of good men who are trying to advance the kingdom of God on earth. For one, I want to express my appreciation of its course. I am not able to take all of the religious journals that are now being published, but I do want to know something of what others are thinking. I feel under no obligation to endorse everything that appears in it or any other paper, and yet I am glad that it is liberal enough to publish these things, so that I may know the best thoughts of the age.

"WAS JOSEPH SMITH A POLYGAMIST?"

D. H. BAYS.

Under the above headline the editor of the Saints' Herald, Lamoni, Iowa, undertakes to answer certain very significant statements now going the rounds of the press, the burden of which is to the effect that Joseph Smith, the founder of Mormonism, was an actual polygamist at the time of his death. This charge has ever been strenuously denied by the people of the "Reorganized Church," over which Joseph Smith III., son of the prophet, presides, and in the editorial under consideration he tries to destroy the force of the testimony of the witnesses who give evidence in the case now pending.

At Salt Air, a point near Salt Lake City, Utah, June 1, 1899, a celebration was held in honor of the 98th birthday of Brigham Young. At this banquet it is said that no less than six of his surviving "plural wives" were present. Among these were Mrs. Zina D. Huntington Young and Mrs. Emily D. Partridge Young. These women, it is alleged, were once the spiritual or polygamous wives of Joseph Smith, Jr. This, of course, created quite a stir among the faithful of the Reorganized Church, and letters soon began to pour into the Herald office requesting the editor to reply. In obedience to this demand Pres. Smith undertakes the hurculean task, but how well he succeeds in refuting the charge may be seen by what follows. The Herald editor introduces his defense by saying:

"First, we will state that the question as to whether Joseph Smith taught or was in the practice of polygamy or not, is not a material one so far as our faith is concerned; for Jesus Christ, and not Joseph Smith, is the author of that faith, and the conduct of Joseph Smith cannot affect it. Only our estimate of Joseph Smith as a man can be affected by his conduct" (Saints' Herald, Aug. 2, 1899, page 491).

To the above statement several objections may be urged. We are left to infer that the "conduct of Joseph Smith," while it may affect our estimate of him "as a man," yet it cannot affect his standing with God as a prophet. This is the sheerest pettifoggery, and is doubtless intended to serve as a convenient subterfuge behind which to hide in the event that the prophet is proved to have been a polygamist. The position is untenable and cannot be maintained by any scriptural example. No prophet or apostle was ever called of God to reveal a great saving truth, and fell because of his innate corruption. Not one.

Besides this, if the conduct of Joseph Smith cannot affect the cause for which he stood, why does Pres. Smith and his followers persist in maintaining that the conduct of Brigham Young and his followers did so affect the same cause; that God rejected them "as a church with their dead?" The premise is wrong, the argument faulty and the conclusion erroneous.

The Saints' Herald affirms that "Jesus Christ, and not Joseph Smith, is the author of that faith"—the faith of Latter-day Saints. This statement I unhesitatingly and most positively deny, and I hereby now publicly challenge any man among them to meet me in oral or written discussion and try to make this statement good if he can. Neither Christ nor his aposples dreamed of such a system as that offered to the world by Joseph Smith; and no such system has ever been taught by any body of people, either before or since Christ. We shall wait patiently to see what champion of this pseudo religion will take up the gauntlet and enter the field of contest.

As to whether Joseph Smith was a polygamist, the Herald editor says:

"The rules of evidence do not require any one to affirm the negative, hence we do not affirm that he was not guilty, but call upon those making the charge to establish their affirmation; but we claim the right to examine the testimony offered. This we consider legitimate and fair.

"Let us examine the evidence upon which the claim is based, that these two women sustained that relation to Joseph Smith."

The Herald editor then quotes from a work known as "Representative Women of Deseret," page 12, as follows:

"Sr. Zina was married in Nonuoo, and had two sons; but this not proving a a happy union, she subsequently separated from her husband. Joseph Smith taught her the principle of marriage for eternity and she accepted it as a divine revelation, and eternity, after the order of the new and everlasting covenant."

In order that the reader may understand the terms employed in the above quotation a brief explanation is necessary. The term "sealed" means "married" by the authority of the "priesthood of the church." "Sealed for time" means that the persons so married may live together as husband and wife here on earth, but cannot retain that relationship in the world to come. "Sealed for eternity" means that the parties are not to live as man and wife on this earth, but that they shall sustain such relations during "all eternity." "Sealed for time and all eternity" means that the parties so sealed may live together here and through "all eternity." Mrs. Jacobs was sealed to the prophet for time and all eternity. Thus it will be seen that a man under this rule of Mormon law may induce another man's wife to be "sealed" to him for "all eternity;" but this "spiritual marriage," or marriage for eternity, does not, however, release the woman from her legal obligations to the husband. Thus she may have two husbands at the same time. This, as anybody can see, is but the stepping-stone to the ruthless invasion of the sacred precints of home, and the destruction of the peace and happiness of the family. Respecting this very matter, Pres. Smith himself has said:

"That [spiritual marriage, or marriage for eternity] once started, the idea grew; spiritual affinities were sought after, and in seeking them the hitherto sacred precincts of home were invaded; less and less restraint was exercised; the lines between virtue and license, hitherto sharply drawn, grew more and more indistinct; spiritual championship, if sanctioned by a holy priesthood, to confer favors and pleasures in the world to come, might be antedated and put to actual test here, and so the enjoyment of a spiritual companionship in eternity became a companionship here; a wife, a spiritual wife, if congenial; if not, one that was congenial was sought, and a wife in fact was supplemented by one in spirit, which in easy transition became one in essential earthly relations. From this, if one, why not two or more? and plural marriage, or plurality of wives, was the growth" ("Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism," p. 386, as quoted from Tullidge's History, pp. 799, 800).

This is by far the most reasonable theory of the manner in which polygamy grew up in the Mormon Church that I have ever seen; and it seems to me impossible that Joseph Smith could have been ignorant of its existence and growth. In fact, all the evidences upon this point goes to prove beyond the possibility of reasonable doubt that Joseph Smith and his brother, Hyrum, were not only acquainted with the facts of its existence, but that they were both living with several women at the time of their death.

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

THE NEW EVANGELISM.

JAMES SMALL.

Nine years out of the thirteen that I have been in the United States I have labored as an evangelist, and in that field I have been fairly successful. But as I am soon to enter into pastoral work again, and that probably for some years, I am induced to write a few lines on conditions of successful work in the evangelistic field, though I do not claim that my modest success gives me any authority to counsel younger men. Nay, rather, I am somewhat in the position of a father of whom I once heard. He took it upon himself to point out how his neighbor, who had a family of boys, might direct them and make them all what boys should be. The neighbor accepted the advice patiently, but added, "All right, sir; but it seems that your own boys need such counsel more than mine, and why didn't you grow yours up in ways of truth, thrift and soberness?" "Well, sir, that's just it," replied the father, "I see exactly how I missed it, and I am in a position now to give you some very wholesome advice on governing boys." The lesson is easy, and the application is left to each reader.

1. Whether right or wrong, the personality of the evangelist has a great deal to do with the success of the meeting. He must be a man of tact and consummate wisdom. He must have the heart of a lamb, a decent skull and the hide of a rhinoceros. He must count the cost, trust God and not complain.

2. He must be a living example of what the gospel can do for men. His best sermon must be, "Christ liveth in me." He must baptize his audience with the life and fire of the gospel before the pastor baptizes them in water. He must have the power to make men feel the nature and consequences of sin and bring them to genuine repentance before the pastor brings them to the baptistery.

For if the thousands brought into our churches are not brought to repentance they will eventually prove to be a weakness rather than a strength to the congregation.

Every evangelist who expects his work to abide the test of fire, by which it will be tried, should preach at least a week on subjects that would make men feel their need of Jesus, and on themes that would make men's consciences tender in the one thing that God hates. It is an enviable power to make men see the enormity of sin, and at the same time point them to God's dear Son, who has been sent to turn every one away from his iniquities. He who fails here must fail everywhere in the evangelistic field. There was a time when I was opposed to having meetings for men only; of late, however, I greatly favor them. A sober, earnest talk from an evangelist, who will inform himself on subjects that can be handled at such meetings can do great good. Such sermons will give tone to the meeting and will strengthen saints and sinners.

3. He must be a man of great faith. He must believe in men, in congregations, and above all in the far-reaching power of the gospel to save and comfort and bless. He must blind his eyes to all unfavorable conditions and go in to win.

Occasionally he may feel that God has not opened the door; at that rate he must quit as gracefully as he can, so that the congregation may not be discouraged, but may push the battle to the gates at some other time. He who says: "It is impossible to do any good here," will accomplish nothing. He must say: "I believe, and therefore speak." Nothing must daunt his courage. He must laugh at opposition and obstacles. Such faith and such courage, with a loving but powerful presentation of the gospel, must eventually cause more men to submit themselves to the authority of Christ and yield their members as instruments of righteousness. His varied experiences in seeing what the power of the gospel can do, and has done, is a powerful factor to produce faith in his own soul. He knows, for he has seen men made the subjects of the redeeming power of divine love, and he has felt it himself. He must not sidetrack. He must feel that the one thing that man must know is Christ and him crucified. He alone saves, or we are yet in our own sins. In a word, the evangelist must distinguish very clearly in his own mind between things that are vital, fundamental and permanent, and things that are unimportant and indifferent. First principles must take men back of baptism, back of repentance, back of faith even—back to fellowship with God and with the saints in light. There will be a new departure here among our preachers bye and bye. What is faith unless the soul sees the King in his beauty, and what is the confession unless it involves the surrender of the heart and turns the feet in the ways of Jesus? What does faith amount to that does not bring visions of God, visions of service and visions of heaven to the soul? What but sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal is that love that does not make every man a missionary to all about him who is out of Christ?

4. He must be humble. He must humble himself under the mighty hand of God before he can be exalted. He must "stoop to conquer." It is God's gospel, God's grace, God's love, God's kindness, God's Son, God's Word that is God's moving power to turn men from sin to a higher and truer life. The evangelist's sufficiency is of God, and each evangelist must realize it. Paul may plant and another may water, but God gives the increase. Nothing in the meeting should keep him from spending an hour before each service in study, meditation and prayer. Christ was to "see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied," not of his intellect, not of cold logic, not of clearness of definition, not of statement and not of the arts of eloquence. Nothing will take the place of a warm gospel sermon that has been steeped in prayer and preached in the terms of human blood and human life. The sermons that live are the sermons that are red-hot with love for dying men and for Jesus. "To know the book" and to be entertaining, to be logical, learned, to clearly define one's idea, to understand the art of rhetoric—these things are not to be disparaged; but to be on fire for Jesus, thorough conversion and perfect consecration of one's powers to the service of God is the first and most essential condition of evangelistic work. In the meeting the evangelist should mingle with all, but especially with men. A word to the wise is sufficient. It is hard, very hard, to give up the evangelistic field, but it must be done. May the God of all grace, who hath called us into his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, bless abundantly the faithful evangelists who are sowing the good seeds of eternal life, and who are telling the story that will never, never grow old, is my prayer.

Columbus, Ind.

Jubilee Convention Songs.

It has been suggested by some who have seen and heard the new songs of the Jubilee collection that it would be a capital idea if the people who are denied the privilege of attending the conventions could be given a missionary program in their home churches at the time of the great meetings in Cincinnati, using the convention music and taking advantage of the enthusiasm for missions that the occasion will stimulate.

To make this possible Bro. Fillmore will print an extra edition of the thirty pages of new songs of the convention collection, which may be had in any quantities, postpaid, at 2c. per copy.

It would be a grand thing if all the churches all over the land would thus unite with the great convention in its missionary songs, sermons and prayers, Sunday, Oct. 15, and at Echo Meetings after the convention.

I earnestly recommend that our churches order these songs at once and prepare to participate in the spirit of our great Jubilee Convention. BENJ. L. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

Our Budget.

—Church Extension offerings are still in order.

—September is the last month of the missionary year.

—The Missouri State Convention convenes in Jefferson City, October 25.

—The Jubilee Convention takes on larger proportions as the time approaches.

—There will be great rejoicing in the churches if the amount set to be raised by each of our missionary societies this year should be realized.

—There will be great rejoicing in heaven if the Jubilee Convention reveals a substantial spiritual gain in the churches during the past year.

—Are our educational interests keeping pace with our material prosperity and the increasing demands of an unprecedented age in the world's history? If not, why not?

—Have we the same interest in trying to keep the people in the church that we have in trying to get them into it? If not, why not? Or does our interest in getting people into the church end with its numerical increase?

—A certain New York daily paper is credited with an opinion to the effect that religious journalism is on the decline. The opinion is based on the fact that church papers are devoting much space to secular subjects in order to hold their readers. This seems to us to be a weak argument in defense of such an opinion. The great dailies have no monopoly on what they call secular news, that we can see; besides, it comes entirely within the province of, a church paper to present the current events of the day from the religious point of view. If religious journalism is not increasing in popularity, then why are so many of the great dailies devoting so much space to this kind of literature? Certainly the great secular dailies are not an excepton to the universal desire to live.

—The Archbishops of England in court-assembly have decided that the ceremonial use of incense and the processional use of lights "are neither enjoined nor permitted by the Anglican Prayer Book." This step is not calculated to increase the friendship between Romanism and Anglicanism; neither will its trengthen the weakening tie between church and state in England. The unofficial use of these traditional usages is likely to be continued for some time, but some of the leading dissenting ministers of England think that the disuse of these customs by the clergy will decide the question of disestablishment in the near future. This action on the part of the Archbishops stands out in strong opposition to those who talk about the decadence of Protestantism in England.

—Do not fail to read about the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S special train from St. Louis to the Jubilee Convention elsewhere in this paper and drop a card to us at once without fail saying you will join us.

—Beginning with October the Chautauqua will be under new management, with headquarters at Cleveland, O., instead of Meadville, Pa., and promises to permit no modern magazine to surpass it in timely interest or attractive form, while devoting itself to the special needs of folk who seek to educate themselves.

—The church at Carondelet, under the work of our city evangelist, A. J. Marshall, has bought and moved into a good building that will soon be made into a comfortable place of worship. Being housed, the church will prosper more rapidly, and we believe will soon become a self-supporting church. This is a good work for the summer, and shows the wisdom of a man devoted to this kind of work in a large city.

—Our Home Field is the name of a new paper, published in Cincinnati, O., by the American Christian Missionary Society and in the interest of Home Missions. The October number, in addition to calling attention to "Forefathers' Day," Sunday October 22nd, contains a sketch of Walter Scott, G. W. Longan, Thomas Campbell and others. The A. C. M. S. will be glad to furnish, free, a sketch of the lives of any of our pioneers for sermons for Forefathers' Day. Our Home Field ought to become a popular paper.

—Benj. L. Smith, Corresponding Secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, informs us from Alliance, Ohio, that Lathrop Cooley, one of our pioneer preachers, has just given his cheque for $5,000 for a Lathrop Cooley Memorial Fund." The A. C. M. S. will keep a preacher in the field all of his time in the name of this fund. This is now the fourth fund of this kind received by the Home Society this year. The others are the "F. M. Drake," "A Friend," and the "Margaret Oliver" memorial funds. The crowning virtue of funds of this character is the perpetuity of their work. This also helps to bring the offerings of the year nearer the $100,000 mark. It is hardly possible now that the society will fall short of this amount this year, especially as there is prospect of still another memorial fund before the Jubilee Convention.

Our preachers in this city held their first meeting for the season in this office on last Monday and elected officers and a program committee for the fall and winter meetings of the association. Brethren Dungan, Fannon, Moore (S. B.), and Hamann were not present, Brethren Aldinger and McFarland are new members in the association. By next Monday it is to be hoped that all of our preachers in the city will be present.

—In concluding a somewhat lengthy, yet interesting article, on "Trusts—Their Legal Status," the writer, Edwin Burritt Smith, in Self Culture magazine for August, says:

The choice does not lie, as some believe, between excessive competition and uncontrolled monopoly. It is not a question whether we shall have combination; but, having it, whether the few or all shall enjoy its benefits. We cannot go back to a condition of competition mainly local and upon equal terms. We have tasted the tremendous advantages of combination with freedom from destructive competition. Such advantages, once realized, are never surrendered. The problem for solution is how to secure them for all. It is the purpose of the trust to seize them for the few. The struggle is always and everywhere between equal opportunity and special privilege. In such a contest the state, which is but their representative, must stand for all against some. To whatever extent the public good requires, the monopoly corporation must yield to public control.

This, it strikes us, is about as good an interpretation of the industrial and commercial situation as we have yet seen, and yet it points unmistakably toward the government control, or its equivalent, of the things about which the trusts are forming. Strange, indeed, that that for which sociologists in the main are contending should come about most rapidly through those and that against which they are contending!

—A reissue of "The Expositor's Bible," edited by Rev. W. Robertson Nicoll, LL.D., editor of "The London Expositor," is to be publised by Wilbur B. Ketcham, New York City. It is to appear in six volumes beginning with January, 1900. Special prices are offered to advance subscribers.

—Seldom has any age been more fruitful of themes for the student, the scientist, the statesman, the philosopher, the preacher, the diplomat, the reformer, the historian, the journalist, the writer of fiction, the sensationalist and the dramatist, than the present. The next century will be burdened with books written about the things now transpiring before our eyes.

—The effort that is being made to build up a Christian college at Alma, for Southern Illinois, is worthy of the attention of the Disciples of Christ in that very resourceful country. The college has just issued its fourth annual announcement, clearly setting forth the merits and efficiency of this institution of learning, especially under the management of its present president, Clark Braden, to whom a letter may be addressed for fuller information. The fall term of this college begins September 18th.

—The churches at Ft. Wayne, Ind., recently joined forces in a meeting in the interest of "Sabbath Observance." This union meeting was held in the West Creighton Avenue Christian Church and was addressed by various ministers in the city, including an address by R. S. Taylor. The addresses were published in the Journal-Gazette on the following Monday. This, it strikes us, is a good way to create public sentiment for the proper public recognition of Sunday as a day of rest and of holiness unto the Lord. We understand this meeting is to be repeated, and other cities would do well to unite occasionally in this work.

—The catalogue with announcements for 1899-1900 of Christian College, Albany, Mo., makes a creditable showing for its present efficiency and past record. This school is soon to enter upon its eighth year and is now able to present claims to young men and young women seeking an education that is well worthy of their consideration. The fall term opens September 4th, with Zwinglius Moore president of the faculty.

—A writer in the Christian World thinks that we have the "yellow pulpit" as well as the "yellow journal" in the land. Under this head it classes all purely sensational sermons, unripe and unwise attempts at dealing with living issues and cheap humor or wit, which draws only the "fun-loving, ridiculous-loving public." Whatever the moral effect of such sermons, preachers or pulpits upon the public, they are certainly injurious to the spiritual welfare of the church, to the dignity and standard of the ministry and a shameful prostitution of the God-given opportunity for a nobler work. Beware of the yellow pulpit as well as of the yellow journal.

—Paul in his day found something worse than infidelity—a man that would not provide for his own house—but it has remained for a modern religious journal to discover something worse than Higher Criticism—the custom which some churches are urging of having their women remove their hats during worship. It seems that something is always happening to disturb the equanimity of some would-be moral and religious regulators in the church and in the world. From so much watching we wonder that they ever find any time for prayers.

—The last offering for the current missionary year is the offering for Church Extension, the first Lord's day in September. An earnest effort should be made to make this the best offering in the history of this most excellent work. The problem of our growth in the cities is the problem of church buildings. We could organize five hundred churches a year if we could maintain them after they are organized—the securing of the house is the problem of living with these churches. I plead for large gifts to Church Extension, the right arm of our missionary work.

BENJ. L. SMITH, Cor. Sec. A. C. M. S.

We are glad to add the above testimony to the cause of Church Extension. This important branch of our missionary work has the worst time of the year for a favorable collection, and it is but just that the other secretaries should assist in making it a success. Remember that you can make your offering for Church Extension any time previous to September 30th, but the sooner you make it the better it will be for you and the Church Extension cause.

—As Bro. J. B. Briney feels that he is entitled to a second reply to Bro. Jones, space will be granted him in our next issue. We regret that the article could not appear in this paper.

—We are glad to report that our new police board and the excise commissioner is making war upon the winerooms of the city. A number have already been closed and others are under closing orders. These attachments to saloons have been the doorway to the moral ruin of hundreds of the young men and young women of the city and their closing cannot be to highly appreciated by the parents and homes of St. Louis We are glad that the officials of the city have shown this regard for the moral welfare of its citizens and commend their righteous act.

—It is good to know that in our endeavors to know the truth our efforts are so kindly taken, even when not fully coinciding with the thoughts of another, as the following postal card indicates. Investigation in such a spirit as the note indicates is a pleasure indeed:

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—Thank you for the very kind manner in which you deal with my article in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Would that all your contributors would catch more of your kindly and gracious spirit You make it very difficult for any of us to find fault with you. May you come back to St. Louis in the fullness of the divine Spirit

Yours in Christ Jesus,
G. F. ASSISTER.

New Franklin, Mo., Sept. 1.

—Those who are opposing the unification of the various branches of our missionary work do not seem to understand the spirit and purpose of the movement. It is not to raise less but more money for missions. The objection that there would be no time for the special plea of such board is one of the very things sought to be avoided by the movement. These special pleas are not suited to permanent work. The same thing has to be gone over for each offering each year, and of necessity loses its charm. This has been partly avoided this year by the new feature of the Jubilee year. The way in which the boards which really have no part as such in the Jubilee year have leaned on the Jubilee Convention for new life is evidence of the need felt for some new element with which to arouse the people to action in their behalf. The printing and reprinting of so much "special literature," so much alike for each board, year after year, becomes a weariness to the flesh. But a small per cent. of what is printed is read. It is for this reason that a purely missionary journal, the organ of a distinct missionary board, never becomes popular. It is difficult to even get them distributed, much more to get them read. Neither can church papers carry the burden and retain the interest of their readers. It is not that the literature is missionary that it is not read, for some of the most thrilling newspaper articles are from the mission field. It is because there is so much repetition. We are asked at every collection campaign to print column after column of the names of men who say the same thing over and over. The same is also largely true of the majority of missionary collection campaign literature. The real merit of missions in their New Testament sense and spirit is seldom attained in these articles, but a narrow partisan conception only. As a consequence there is but little deposit of the real missionary spirit and education left with any church after the campaign is over, and so the work of arousement has to be repeated when the time for the next offering appears. Surely, there is a better way than this.

—If reports are true, the following from Zola is about the severest comment on the Dreyfus trial we have yet heard. He is reported to have said:

In my studies of human nature I have sounded very low depths of depravity, but this trial reveals lower depths than any the most unbridled imagination could put forth.

If this be true, France is indeed in a deplorable state.

—The Missionary Intelligencer for September contains a number of interesting foreign departments, edited by a prominent missionary associated with each field represented. It is a good number.

—It is said that the quantity of champagne cousumed in the city of New York this year will more than double that of any previous year. This excess is attributed to the celebration of the nation's victories in war. The orders for champagne to be used in the receptions to be given Admiral Dewey on his return are said to be immense. At one dinner in New York it is said that 600 men consumed 900 quarts of champagne. Strange, indeed, that our victories on sea and land cannot be more worthily celebrated and our heroes more nobly honored than by an unusual consumption of intoxicating beverages. If this is the kind of expansion that war brings, then better not expand. If we are to become a nation of voluptuous bacchanalians, then have our victories been won for no purpose. Our glory becomes our shame and our downfall as a nation could not be more clearly foretold by a man inspired of God. How long, O Lord, how long must these floodgates of hell remain unclosed?

—If the Globe-Democrat, of this city, correctly quotes ex-United States Senator Wm. D. Washburn, of Minnesota, he is decidedly opposed to trusts and predicts a tremendous financial collapse unless their over-capitalization can be prevented. He not only deplores trusts on account of over-capitalization, but also because of their influence upon prices and the opportunities of young men to engage in business on their own account; and, being a staunch Republican, he warns his party of defeat unless they part company with this alarming danger. Inasmuch as trusts are now a subject of investigation, it is well to know the views of our statesmen thereon, regardless of their political affiliations.

Rally Day.

The long-looked for Rally Day has come and gone, and it was a treat that all enjoyed. Notwithstanding the very hot weather people began to gather early in the day, and stayed until late at night.

The preaching was done in the morning by Bro. J. H. Garrison, of St. Louis, Mo., in the afternoon by Arthur Garrison, and at night by J. W. Allen, of Cleveland, O. The sermons were practical, powerful and abounded in beauty. Sufficient money was raised to pay off $150 indebtedness which has hung over the church for some time. On Monday evening a large congregation listened to the stereopticon lecture on Japan by Bro. Seimaro Kubota, a native of the Sunrise Kingdom. The lecture was enjoyed by all present and Bro. Kubota won the hearts of those present for his work's sake. The church will take on new life, and we look for great things in the future. Many thanks are due to the brethren named above for their help in making the day a success.

Special Train to Jubilee Convention.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST SPECIAL.

In order to accommodate the large numbers who will want to attend the Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati, October 13 to 20th, and in response to numerous applications from the brethren, in order that we may enjoy the pleasure of the trip together in company most congenial, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is completing arrangements to run a special train, known as "CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special," from St. Louis to Cincinnati at that time.

In order that we may be able to get the lowest possible rates it is desirable that all of those who would like to go with this party signify at once their desire to do so. This is necessary also in order that arrangements may be made to accommodate all comfortably. The time of departure of this Special from St. Louis and arrival at intermediate points where others may wish to join us, together with other full particulars, will be announced in an early issue and in due time, but our efforts will be to suit the pleasure of the majority of those composing the party. We therefore solicit the brethren to let us hear from you at once, stating how many will want to join us from each particular locality and when you will wish to go. Have no fears about the rates, but depend upon our experience getting you the very lowest possible. Parties desirous of buying through tickets from their local stations, but wishing to join our party in St. Louis, can do so. Parties may also join this Special at points along along the route. Full information will be given such parties upon application to this office or to our excursion manager, Brother Oreon E. Scott, 817 Chestnut St., St. Louis, Mo.

Latest Returns from the $100,000 Jubilee Offering.

Upon to Sept. 8th, in round numbers, $80,000 has been received. Only 20 days remain; hence, $1,000 a day must be received from now until Sept. 30th. Of the remaining $20,000 at least $6,000 is pledged. Can that amount be raised? Yes, but all must help to do it. Ten thousand dollars of this will be raised by ordinary methods, but $10,000 must come from a spontaneous outpouring of gifts.

Some have misunderstood a statement which we made sometime ago in regard to receipts. We stated that up to date the receipts were double those of last year for some period, and that rate continued would bring us to Oct. 1st with $85,000; some took it for granted that the doubling had been done and we had the $85,000 on hand. No, we had still to do the doubling and then $15,000 to raise.

We sent out a few days ago a large number of letters, asking for at least $1,000—the first day's mail brought us 77 letters with $86, the forenoon mails of two days bring us 125 letletters with $161—making for a day and one-half 202 letters and $257. Keep up. We feel sure our brethren are not going to allow us to fail for the lack of $1 and if each sends the $1 we will secure the full $100,000.

Lathrop Cooley, of Medina, O., gave $5,000 as a named loan fund, the interest of which is to preach the gospel in America. Bro. Cooley also gave, a few weeks ago, $5,000 to preach the gospel in Northeastern Ohio. He said he had long preached the gospel, and he wanted to think he was the means of preaching it in all future time.

B. L. Smith met with the Preachers' Association of Northeastern Ohio, and gave a jubilee address and conversed with Bro. Cooley in regard to named loan funds, after which Bro Cooley wrote out the check for $5,000 and handed to him. BENJ. L. SMITH & C. C. SMITH.

Belding has lived a long and eful life, which spans almost the entire period our reformatory movement. We are glad to in in the congratulations to this venerable d faithful servant of God.

The Washington Post, Sept. 4th, in speaking the 25th anniversary of his work in Wash-gton, D C, says: "A large congregation tened, yesterday morning, to the anniver-ry sermon of Dr F. D. Power, who entered sterday upon the twenty fifth year of his nnection with the Vermont Avenue Church. he pulpit was beautifully decorated with wers and evergreens in honor of the occa-on. The pastor preached from 2 Chronicles, :5-8. He preceded the regular service with five minute sermon to the children, and also ith the announcement of the death of Presi ent William K. Pendleton, of Bethany Col-ge, who, in 1884, preached the dedicatory rmon at the opening of the Vermont Avenue ouse of worship. Dr. Pendleton died at ethany, W. Va., Friday, and Dr. Power was lled to preach his funeral sermon, but could ot leave the city. He paid his old preceptor glowing tribute."

In the absence of Dr. Dungan, pastor of the Mt. Cabanne Church, the assistant editor of this paper preached to the church at the Sunday morning service. It was intended by the church to give Dr. Dungan a two weeks' leave of absence that he might attend the opening of the fall term of Christian University, visit Sac City, Ia., and dedicate a new house of worship in Plattsmouth, Neb., where his son, R. M. Dungan, preaches, but the sickness of his youngest son, at his home in this city, prevented his going until the latter part of last week. On account of this sickness Dr. Dungan had to cancel his engagement with Christian University and at Sac City, Ia., but went to Plattsmouth to fill his engagement with the church at that place and expects to be at home again by next Sunday.

J. F. Anderson, a young man who has set apart five years of his life for seeing the world, called at this office last Friday. Brother Anderson states that he is a member of the Christian Church in Pomona, Cal., and bears a good letter from its pastor, F. M. Dowling. He also says that he is now in the third year of his travels and in crossing the continent from Lakes to Gulf. In 1897 he traveled from Mexico to Canada, 2,560 miles, in a wagon. In 1898 he traveled from Puget Sound to New York, 3,500 miles, in a wagon. This year he is traveling on a bicycle. The two next years he will spend in travels in Europe and Asia. He expects to visit all of the leading nations of the world. He wants to see people and things as they are, and is taking notes of his travels. At every town he visits he gets the postal stamp of that town as an evidence of his visit, and now has a good-sized blank book filled with stamps made by the postmaster of each place visited. He is also a Christian Endeavorer, and says that he expects to utilize his knowledge for the benefit of the young people. He is in good health, and seems to enjoy the task he has set for himself. He is an interesting conversationalist.

PERSONALS FOR IOWA.

Frank A. Morgan, La Port, Ind., worshiped with the University Place Church on Sunday, August 27th.

Angus McKinnon has moved from Des Moines to Chicago. He has become the business manager of the Oracle Publishing Co.

Pastor H. O. Breeden returned from his summer vacation September 2nd. He is president of the Iowa Christian Convention which meets this week in Des Moines.

C. H. Mattocks of North English, Iowa, is in Woodward to-day and will attend the Iowa convention before going home. He has been doing some heroic fighting with the saloons of his town and country. God bless such men.

Arthur Pratt, a graduate of Oskaloosa College, now an attorney in Traer, Iowa, greeted friends in Des Moines and Adel this week.

Professor Belle Updegraff, late of Oskaloosa College, has been called to Bethany College.

J. Madison Williams preaches to-day at the Park Avenue Church, Des Moines.

John W. Lusher, a live young business man of Denver, and lately of Sac City, is in Des Moines and will attend the convention.

A. J. Marshall, late of Iowa, was left out of the list of preachers which St. Louis had recently called from Iowa. That list had six names.

H. H. Abrams, secretary of the Iowa Anti-Saloon League, was in Des Moines during "Fair Week." With Francis Murphy to assist, much sentiment against the proposed new brewery was created.

James Small has left Des Moines for a home in Indiana. The Iowa people are sorry to lose this genial Irishman and good Christian.

Prof. Edward S. Ames, of Butler College, will preach on Sunday morning, Sept. 10th, at the Dallas County Meeting, Iowa.

Prof. A. M. Haggard, of Drake University, will preach the evening sermon at the same convention.

Pastor I. N. McCash is receiving additions every Sunday. A. M. HAGGARD.

Wheeling Through Europe—VI.

ANOTHER WEEK IN SWITZERLAND.

Geneva is a clean, handsomely built, well-parked and beautifully situated city. The focus of the life of the city, so far as entertainment is concerned, is along the quays where the River Rhone flows out of Lake Geneva, bisecting the city. We arrived late in the afternoon and, after supper, went out to see the town. Every other building along the quays and the adjoining streets is a cafe and every cafe occupies all the sidewalk and half the street adjacent to its premises. The sidewalk tables are filled with well-dressed people and generally there is music of an elaborate and pretentious sort, also on the sidewalk. At one place a string quartet was playing and at another a soprano and baritone duet was being sung in Italian with the accompaniment of an orchestra of six pieces. In both cases, strange to say, the music was really of a high order. It was something of a shock to one's sensibilities to see the soprano, who was attired in a faultless evening gown, step from her place at the end of the song and start to take up a collection. With all my finer feelings outraged by this exhibition of bad taste, I stole away into the night before she reached me. As I passed down that street next morning at ten o'clock, the same woman in the same gown was still singing Italian grand opera on the sidewalk. She must have had a hard night of it.

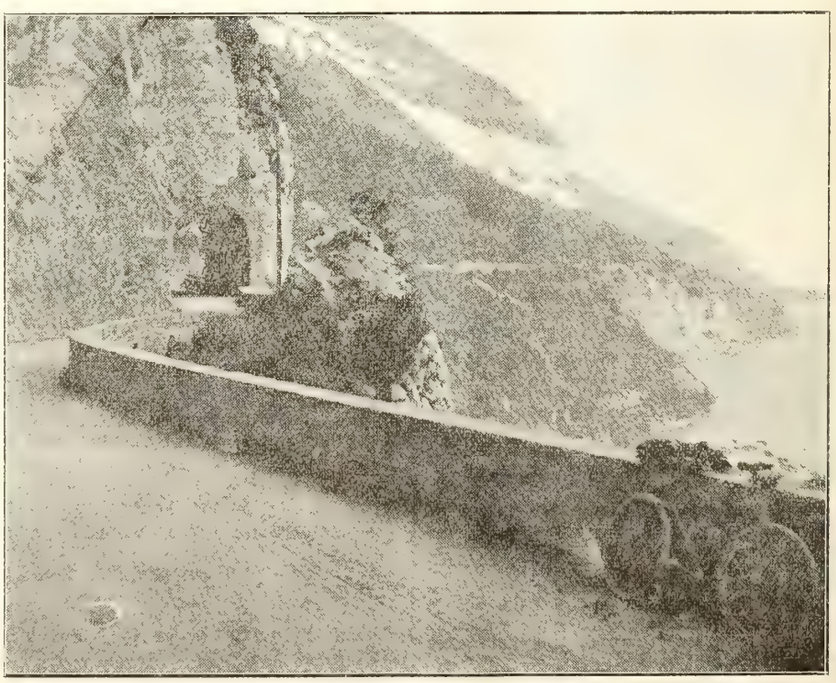
It is generally agreed that the finest thing about Geneva is the distant view of Mont Blanc. This is doubtless true, but we failed to see it. From the day of our arrival in Geneva until our final exit from Switzerland the weather was blue and sparkling, but as we left the city and rode along its northern edge toward the castle of Chillon at the other end, even the hills on the opposite shore were vague and misty. This rather enhanced their beauty, for it gave them a violet hue which varied infinitely with the varying conditions of sun and cloud, but the Mont Blanc range, which should have loomed beyond them forty miles away, was utterly lost.



We had already decided from our experience with the lakes of Zurich and Uri, that in general lakeside roads make the finest easy rides in Switzerland, as the mountain passes make the finest hard rides, and later observation has confirmed this judgment. The fifty miles along the shore of Lake Geneva is to be classed among the beautiful and easy rides. The one drawback was the fact that some of the insignificant villages on the route prohibit bicycle riding within their corporate limits and it was necessary to walk through them. It was not much of a walk in any case, but it was enough to make a cyclist very tired. In one of these towns the only traffic which we saw from end to end of its single street consisted of five dismounted wheelmen walking meekly along and one motor-carriage dashing down the street. Therein was demonstrated the wisdom of that ordinance, for the wheelmen might have run over the motor-carriage if they had not been restrained. In the city and canton of Geneva all wheels must be equipped with a constantly jingling bell like a cowbell, but the wary cyclist can easily evade this requirement long enough to ride through the canton.

At the east end of Lake Geneva is the castle of Chillon, where every one pauses to drop a silent tear in memory of Byron's Bonivard and pretends to have been a life-long admirer of the Prisoner of Chillon, whether he ever read the poem or not. Ruthless historical criticism has wrecked most of the picturesque features of the story about Bonivard's imprisonment and deprived the hero of many of the graces of character which have been generally attributed to him. It now appears that he was in no sense a religious reformer and that his only bond of sympathy with the leaders of the Genevan Reformation was their common hatred for the dukes of Savoy. Moreover, there seems to be no reason to believe that his imprisonment at Chillon was long enough or rigorous enough to call for any special sympathy. But no matter. It is a good story and well told by Byron, and the added interest which it imparts to this beautiful spot is its sufficient justification. There is a unique charm about the place even apart from the Bonivard story. The gently sloping hills, covered with vineyards and basking in the mild sunshine which makes this district a favorite resort for both summer and winter; the grim, gray castle rising out of the water, its walls reflected in the bluest lake in Switzerland, and in the background, the Dent du Midi a dozen miles away looming vast and vague through the hazy atmosphere, with only its snowy summit sharply defined against a sky less bright than itself—all these form a picture of rich and varied suggestiveness.

The road from Chillon to Freiburg marks the western as the Rhone valley marks the southern boundary of the Bernese Oberland. We thought it better to keep to the edge than to plunge into the midst of this mountainous district with only doubtful paths to guide us. Besides, it is worth while to hear the cathdral organ at Freiburg, where the organist plays every evening, and to see Berne, the capital of the Swiss Confederation, and the most mediæval in appearance of all Swiss cities. From a terrace on the high bank of the river at Berne there is a famous view of the Bernese Alps. A glass-covered diagram on a pedestal indicates and names the score or more peaks including the Jungfrau, which are supposed to be in sight, but here, as at Geneva, the haze cut off everything but the foothills, so we passed on to see the public bear-pits. The parents in Bernese have no excuse for taking the children to the circus "to see the animals," for the city has generously provided bears for the free amusement of all comers. The bear is the coat-of-arms of the canton of Berne and one cannot go a block in the city without seeing the emblem in one form or another.

Riding from Berne down to the Lake of Thun, on the road to Interlaken, one comes again into the region of highly picturesque and genuinely Swiss scenery. Again there is a road by the lakeside and again, like the Axenstrasse, it is a road cut in the face of a cliff. It is the existence of such roads as this in the midst of such scenery that causes the discerning traveler to choose diligence, carriage, bicycle or walking in preference to the railway in Switzerland.

A chain of mountains lies along the northern shore of the two lakes, Thun and Brienz, and a chain of mountains along the southern shore, and there, between two lakes and two chains of mountains, lies Interlaken. Just at that point the southern range is broken by a valley which discloses the Jungfrau, distant but lofty. The town of Interlaken bears the marks of a resort more conspicuously than any other place in the country. It is all hotels, cafes and shops for the sale of souvenirs. Half of it appears very fashionable and the other half is like Coney Island, and the two halves are badly mixed.

BY THE LAKE OF THUN.

There are no very tremendous ascents to be made in the immediate vicinity of Interlaken, but it is the starting-point for innumerable excursions among the mountains, and here, as at Lucerne, one continually sees on the street youths clad in mountaineering costume with ice-axes on their shoulders and steel-shod alpenstocks in their hands, trying to look as if they were just starting for a six days' trip over the glaciers, or just returning from one. My private conviction is that most of them are frauds, who never climbed a real mountain, and couldn't if they wanted to. Every summer resort raises a crop of that sort—fellows who wear boating costumes but never row or sail, tennis suits but never play, bicycle suits but never ride, golf suits but don't know the difference between a niblick and a hazard, and the sole scene of whose adventures is the hotel veranda. The resorts from which Alpine excursions may be made seem to be notably infested with this variety of "duffers" of several different nationalities.

Between Interlaken and Lucerne there is a taste of all sorts of riding—a lakeside road, a valley road and a mountain pass. We were nearing the top of Brunig Pass rather late in the evening when my tire received its first puncture for this trip, over thirteen hundred miles up to that point. It happened to be a particularly awkward puncture, which could not be mended in the few remaining minutes of daylight, so it was necessary to walk to the inn at the summit ot the pass and spend the night there. The coast down the pass next morning made a pleasing beginning for the day's work.

Lucerne is a clean, well-built and well-kept place, like Geneva, but sadly infested by tourists, like Interlaken, though in a less degree, and withal a pleasant place to linger. We did not linger long, however, but rode on around the lake, the road following the shore generally, to Brunnen at the head of the Axenstrasse. This completed our circuit in Switzerland, and now as we started south, bound direct for the St. Gotthard Pass and Italy, we had to ride over thirty miles of road which was already familiar to us. But this was no hardship when it meant ten miles of Axenstrasse, which I deliberately characterize as the finest bicycle ride of its length which I have found in Europe or America, ten miles up the level valley from Altdorf and ten miles of more or less constant climbing up the gorge of the Reuss, to the lofty green valley whence the passes go out east, west and south. Here, where before we had gone west over the Furka, we now kept straight on over the St. Gotthard. There was a strong wind at our backs, and as we rode we kept wondering when we would come to the really steep part. Presently the road began to descend in sharp windings, and the valley was so narrow that we could not see a hundred yards ahead. It seemed a pity to make all that descent only to climb up again immediately over the pass, but as the descent continued gradually the truth dawned upon us that we had already crossed the great St. Gotthard Pass, which the railway pierces with the largest tunnel in the world, and were coasting down the Alps into Italy. Although St. Gotthard was unexpectedly easy, still, after riding over five Alpine passes, I have an increased respect for Hannibal and Napoleon and the other worthies who have crossed the Alps in the face of difficulties. Roads may surmount and railways pierce these ranges, but they are still Titans, vast, awful and unsubdued, with whom a battle must be fought each time a traveler crosses them.

It must not be supposed that one is in Italy as soon as he has crossed the Alps. At this point Switzerland reaches down fifty miles farther, and one rides by the shore of the Italian lakes before he has passed from the dominion of the Swiss Confederation. But the very first town south of St. Gotthard Pass, Airolo, where the railway emerges from its tunnel, is an Italian town, and so is every other Swiss town south of the mountains. Churches, people, language, architecture, cookery—all are Italian, and one cannot help feeling that he is in Italy long before he has reached the boundary. But the customs officers let you know when you really enter the kingdom! A long parley, mostly in pantomime, as usual; a leaden seal attached to the bicycle; a formidable-looking document bearing an external resemblance to a life insurance policy, filled out with many interesting details about ourselves and our wheels, which has to be "discharged" (whatever that means) when we leave the country—these are the kindly attentions with which the cyclist is welcomed to "the garden of the earth, fair Italy."

RAPKIN'S NEW BOOK.

Our indefatigable and profoundly esteemed pastor of the church at Margate last year wrote and issued from the press a capital little book on Baptism. For popular use on our own particular lines of presentation of truth I know of no small treatise calculated to be so efficacious for enlightening enquirers. In an amusing paragraph Professor McGarvey spoke of George Rapkin as a crank. I read with great interest everything that I come across from Bro. McGarvey's pen, and I am very anxious to enjoy at least once in my life a conversazione with that honored servant of God and the churches. Bro. McGarvey I shall eagerly look for at the coming Congress. I note that he asks somebody to assure him that G. Rapkin is not a crank. I am happy to be the somebody to furnish the assurance. Not but that in the eyes of certain people Rapkin is reckoned the crankiest of all possible cranks. The Roman Catholics consider him an outrageous crank. A few centuries ago they would have devoted him to cremation, books and all. The Salvation Army people think Rapkin is a real crank. But the reason for this estimate is important. Rapkin was born in the bosom of popery and was brougbt up a papist. He was cranky enough to think and pray and read himself into Protestantism. Joining the Salvation Army, he became through his genuine ability the chief statistician to General Booth and the Army. But while so employed he still read and thought for himself, and he was cranky enough to ask Bro. Walden to baptize him at West London Tabernacle. And as the Army muzzled him in respect to his views as a baptized believer, he became a preacher and pastor amongst us. And yet, I admit that he does expose himself to the suspicion of crankiness. For he has now persisted in writing and publishing a book which shows how he just as before goes on with his practice of independent individualism in religious study.

"GENESIS IN HARMONY WITH ITSELF AND SCIENCE"

is the somewhat ambitious title of this new venture. I did not know that Bro. Rapkin was writing this book until he had actually determined to publish it. I advised him not to put forth a treatise on such a stupendously difficult theme, but he had already completed his task and was ready for print. He had given a few lectures on the topic which drew large audiences in Margate and were fairly reported in outline in the Margate journals. In my opinion the subject is one on which even an expert with little or nothing else to think of cannot write a satisfactory or conclusive treatise. But now that this book is out I have no doubt that it will engage the deep interest of some minds here and there. Bro. Rapkin put on me the fraternal duty of correcting the sheets in proof as they appeared. So that I have per amicitiam read the work before anybody else. I am continually reminded of such books as Pember's "Earth's Earliest Ages," and those two very ingenious and learned volumes, Gall's "Primeval Man Unveiled," and the anonymous "Vestiges of Creation," which made such a sensation about the middle of this century. All these books are exceedingly cranky in the view of ordinary minds which only think in some one stereotyped groove, but they are intensely suggestive and interesting to minds at once open and devout. The main object of Bro. Rapkin is apparent in every chapter. The book is written simply in defence of the Bible against the sceptic. The one portion of the book which I like better than all the rest together is that which deals with the pre-existence of the Logos, the Son of God, Jesus. I wish that this portion could be recast and extended and issued as a separate pamphlet. This subject Rapkin has worked up in a masterly fashion, although he has not put it altogether as lucidly as he would have done ii this had been his main thesis. In my opinion there will at no distant date be a conflict on this foundation truth concerning the Person of Jesus. I am sorry to say that I have known even Unitarians more sound in this direction than many an orthodox evangelical, so called. Rapkin fights traditionalism all along the line with respect to the ordinary views concerning Adam and Eve, Cain, the Creation and the Fall, the Flood and Patriarchal Genealogy. Yet, he is the firm foe of all the particular critical school known as Destructionists. He seems to be profoundly convinced that orthodox traditionalism simply plays helplessly into the hands of the Destructionists. Well, I myself think that we have enough to do in our peculiar work to maintain and enforce our plea. But each man should have full liberty to deliver his soul. I find for myself that my ministry is handicapped quite enough by the unpopularity of our plea amongst the vast and multitudinous sectism of the day. I find that if I preach in protest against the divided Christianity of the age, this brings me into conspicuous view as a religious crank. I and Bro. Garrison and W. T. Moore and E. M. Todd and many others of the like ilk are all cranks to the modern religious and popular world. Bro. Rapkin thinks that he can stand all the sectarian obloquy and incur even more. He will not fail to incur more. But I honor him for his barvery and his straightforward honesty in speaking out according to his convictions. I do not think that he can prove by anything or any means all that he advances. But for enquirers on the problems of Genesis his book ought to be of great value. It will give them a most succinct view of the various questions that have been raised, and it will set them thinking for themselves, if they can think at all, which the majority of people in these days seem hardly capable of doing.

THE CHANGE OF CRITICAL STANDPOINT.

Those who, like myself, engage their minds not so much in taking sides for or against the critics of any particular school as in watching and listening while the conflict goes on, must have been impressed of late with a decided change which has come over critical opinion in regard to the Book of Genesis. By the labors of Quarry and by the studies of the critics themselves it has come to be frankly recognized that one clear and constantly remembered purpose is traceable in the entire structure of the first book of Moses. What the higher critics for a long time little imagined is at length preceived by the latest laborers in the field. In every section of Genesis this wonderful purpose is conspicuous, when it has once been noticed. It makes the book one of the marvels of literature instead of a mere antique rehash by ancient editors of codes and legends. The polychromists have already had their day, and their fantastic and variegated editions, which look like snippets from Joseph's coat of many colors, will be of small use except to the margarin and butter merchants. The latest results of higher criticism make ample atonement for the antics of the Destructionists. I have never joined in any clamor of anticriticism, but have been expectantly waiting for the ultimatum and the residuum. There are signs that the really useful results of all the processes which have created needless alarm are about to be manifested. Dr. Kinns, of the British Museum, has just been telling an interviewer that the studies by Dr. Budge, Prof. Pinches and himself of the masses of the cuneiform stored in the museum cellars from Assyria are yielding fresh results, which give strange confirmation, not only of the Pentateuch, but also of Daniel. Daniel and Moses, Genesis and Deuteronomy, can afford to wait a little longer for final corroborations of their authenticity. There is no need for any student to adopt either a radical or a conservative attitude in respect to the processes of criticism. Therefore I admire the stand taken by the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which is precisely that to which the Christian Commonwealth has consistently adhered. I count it an honor to be connected with both these progressive and aggresssive organs, for in England and in America, respectively, they advocate the cause of truth, wherever truth may lead, and whatever truth may cost. Now, with regard to the purpose of Genesis, it is sufficient to mark one feature alone which stamps it as a wonder even to the most advanced critics. I refer to certain chronological numberings. The numberings of years which were lived by the fathers of humanity and of Israel is significantly confined to certain lines only. The names of Cain's posterity are given. But we do not know the age attained by any of these. We do not know how long Cain lived. But Adam's age is given, then Seth's, and afterwards the age of his posterity, till we come to Noah, the new father of the race. Here is a well defined principle of selection. Cain's line was not that in which God's purposes were to find a helper. This was to be found in Noah alone. So the line that leads to him is the line which is counted in years. This principle is followed throughout. In the section of the "generations of the sons of Noah" not a single date is given. We know not the age of either Ham or Japheth; nor do we know the years lived by any one of the fathers of our own Aryan or Japhetic race. It is only when we come to the "generations of Shem" that the years are again counted. Here every link in the descent is carefully counted. Details are given which show the most careful exactitude. The age of each patriarch at the birth of the son through whom the line of descent is to be carried is given. We are then told how long he survived after the birth of his son. Among the descendants of Shem it is only in that particular line which leads to Abraham that the years are measured. Here is a beautiful proof that the Book of Genesis is an inspired unit. It is dominated by a very decided purpose from which it never swerves. Now, in music, the mind of a master of tone and tune is always manifested by the theme which runs through all the harmonies. A masterpiece of musical composition is one harmonious unit. The critic can at once recognize the genius of Wagner or Beethoven or Schumann by the inspired purpose betrayed in the complex harmony. Genesis is, after the attempts to tear it to tatters in ruthless analytic dissection, coming forth as a matchless and supernatural literary edifice. Of course, it bears marks of editorship. Of course, it was not written in heaven and brought down Jacob's ladder by one of the seraphim. The treasure is in an earthen vehicle. There are iron stanchions and clamps and steps here and there on the Matterhorn. What of all that? God made the Matterhorn all the same. Genesis is the Matterhorn among the books of the Bible. Criticism will end in magnifying its sublimity, and Moses will tower up as a Titan of inspiration as long as this world holds a library.

The SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

New York Letter.

Miss Jessie Ackerman, who has made a circuit of the globe three times as a W. C. T. U. missionary, delivered two excellent addresses at the Sing Sing prohibition camp meeting last week, one of which dealt with her mission around the world and the other with the question of American expansion. Her words are worthy of consideration, especially in view of her repeated world-wide observations. In reply to the question, "What class of people above all others need missionary work?" she replied, "The lawmakers of England and America." To illustrate the truthfulness of this statement she told the story of England forcing the opium curse upon China and of America planting whisky and beer saloons in all lands where the Stars and Stripes float. She said for every convert made by American missionaries in China, American liquor makes one hundred drunkards, and for every convert made by English missionaries, England makes a thousand slaves to the opium habit. American brewers have already established three hundred saloons in the city of Havana, and Manila is rapidly filling up with them. This seems to be a large part of "American expansion" about which many loud-mouthed patriots are boasting. These people would be in a much better condition enslaved to superstition and tyrannical Spain than debauched, degraded and condemned by the deadly American saloon. There is great need of home missionary work in this country, that such things might be altogether impossible.

"There are at least five hundred qualified clergymen in the Congregational Church anxious for work, and the church is so full of preachers that there is no work for them to do. If figures are honestly used they will not lie, and the last yearbook of the church conclusively proves the statement." This is the startling statement made by the Rev. Magee Pratt, in a recent issue of a New England paper, who quotes Dr. Price, of Boston, whom he regards as the best informed man in the country on the question, asserting that "with the exception of the few larger churches, the salaries have been universally reduced." Mr. Pratt also claims that only three-fourths of all Congregational Churches in this country can support ministers. And in order to get this matter before the public he makes the following summary statement which, if true, is as sad as it is bold:

First—That it is not possible for the theological seminaries to introduce young men into the ministry without driving out an equal number of men who are in work.

Second—That there are a large number of men of the highest qualifications who cannot secure a pastorate in existing conditions.

Third—That the appeal for financial aid for the seminaries on the ground that an increase of educated ministers is a necessity at the present time is an attempt to obtain money under false pretenses.

"Fourth—That the present policy of purchasing impecunious students to fill the seminaries is an outrage on decency and justice. If men who study law or medicine must pay for the privilege, and the best men do it and honor their profession by their manliness, why should divinity offer free tuition, rooms, light and heat, and even, if that is not enough, lend or give money to destroy the manliness of the students, when many of the best workers the church has are standing idle in the market place, with empty pockets and aching hearts?

A number of ministers well qualified to speak on this matter have been interviewed with the result that all the great denominations assert, through accredited representatives, that while there are many unemployed preachers among them, it is principally because such ministers are not willing to work where they are most needed, and where the material remuneration is small. And if this is not the case it usually is because the good man has missed his proper calling in life. Some of the very best and ablest ministers of the gospel have fields that are small, and from a human point of view unattractive, but through their own sterling worth they make their charges attractive and prosperous. This discussion has emphasized the fact that men in the Christian ministry should have but one controlling aim—the preaching of Christ unto salvation, and not the securing for themselves fame or positions of worldly distinction. The true minister of Christ says, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel!" for the love of Christ constraineth him.

If the church with which you are affiliated has not made an offering to Church Extension this year, will you not see that your congregation doas so at once? Every church in the land should have substantial fellowship in this good work, which is one of the most effective agencies among the Disciples of Christ in that it renders help to the helpless and makes parmanent the cause of Christ in many places where otherwise it would of necessity languish and die. We must reach the $250,000 total for this fund by the year 1900, and we can easily do so if each Disciple of Christ will come up to his privilege in this matter. I say privilege, for such in reality it is. Any service that may be rendered or money given in Christ's name is a privilege and not a burden to the soul that loves and worships Christ.

Leaves from Mission Fields.

CHAS. E. GARST.—NUMBER III.

"Come! thou messenger of heaven,
Tell of sins by blood forgiven,
Take the heaven-sent message o'er.
Some will listen;
Tell the tidings o'er and o'er."

On the thronging streets of Yokohama Mr. Garst saw strange sights and heard still stranger sounds. His first task was to learn the language in which he was to preach the gospel. He was an apt pupil and soon mastered this most difficult tongue. His desire to make known the way of salvation made him diligent in his efforts to acquire the language. He at once put into practice the knowledge gained. This gave him great facility in the use of the Japanese tongue and strange power on the platform. Many times he spoke for two hours and the people never tired of his discourse. On the contrary, they frequently requested him to continue for another hour. He spent six months in Yokohama studying the language and the mission field. In the spirit of comity he consulted other missionaries as to the best point to attempt a mission. In the spring of 1884 he located in Akita, on the Northwest Coast. At that time there were only 18 miles of railroad in all Japan. Travel was slow and difficult. Life in such a country meant many privations and constant toil. Mr. Garst had schooled himself to hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. He had estimated the cost of a mission to the heathen. Hardships and dangers never moved him from his high purpose to preach Jesus Christ where he had not been named. He had a varied experience in bitter cold and in melting heat, in driving sun and in pouring rain. With eager feet and anxious heart he carried the Word of life to the multitudes who sit in darkness and in the region and in the shadow of death. His life in Japan is curiously suggestive of the well-known experiences of the Apostle Paul, mentioned in the eleventh chapter of the second epistle to the Corinthians. On one occasion Mr. Garst walked 22 miles to conduct the funeral services of a young Baptist minister, who was a native Christian. Mr. Kawamura-san, a distinguished Japanese evangelist, says: "Often when on a trip together I would say to him, 'Mr. Garst, we will not care to go to such and such a place.' 'Why so?' asked Mr. Garst. 'O, the inns are dirty and full of vermin and the food is very bad,' replied his friend. 'Are there people there who have not heard the gospel?' 'Yes, plenty of them.' Then Mr. Garst would say, 'We will go; that's what we are here for?'" He frequently slept in wretched quarters, and ate Japanese food at which many who criticise missionaries would turn away in disgust. He accepted every experience in the best spirit and turned it to good account. Whatever his feelings might have been he made no complaint. Writing to a friend, he said: "Lately, when out evangelizing, we were served dried grasshoppers. After eating about a cupful I felt like John the Baptist!" In him patience did her perfect work. This virtue he taught more by example than by precept. For 18 months he suffered serious stomach trouble, brought on by exposure, overwork and bad food. All the time he was kept on the strictest diet, eating only a little meat, milk and charred bread. He never complained because of enforced abstinence. He ate what was set before him, happy in the hope of returning health and enlarged usefulness. The gentleness of his touch and the tenderness of his heart were felt in his dealings with the new convert from paganism and with those who sometimes lapsed into sin. He managed everything in the spirit of Christ and with consummate tact. Some of the natives who noticed this wondered if he were "man or God."

The hope of the resurrection was the passion of his life. "The Lord is risen to-day," was his usual Sunday morning greeting to his wife, she responding, "The Lord is risen indeed." Jesus and the resurrection were themes in which he delighted to speak. These carried his hearers at once into the very heart of the gospel. His affectionate heart and tender sympathy gave him great influence over those to whom he ministered in holy things. He was a living illustration of the psalm of love in the first epistle to the Corinthians. He became all things to all men, that by all means he might save some. He was deeply touched both at the spiritual blindness and the excessive poverty of the people of Japan. He constantly bore upon his heart this double burden. As he ministered the bread and the water of life to the famishing multitudes, his soul was moved with compassion to do something as well to relieve their temporal condition. Like the Master in the days of his earthly ministry, he was anxious to feed the hungry as well as to preach the gospel to the poor. Telling the story of the cross to a starving man without first satisfying his hunger is like giving a gem to Æsop's cock, who would be better pleased with a barleycorn. Mr. Garst's intelligent interest in the material prosperity of the people of Japan gave him access to the ruling classes, and his influence was felt in the conduct of public affairs. He was devoted to the doctrine of single tax and advocated proportional representation. He lived to see these ideas take deep root in the hearts of the people of Japan. The Kobe Herald says: "Mr. Garst gave himself up, heart and soul, to schemes for the amelioration of the lot of his less fortunate fellows. One of these was the single tax, of the efficiency and value of which he felt as convinced as a mathematician is that two plus three equals five. He gave himself to the ideas into which he had the largeness of heart to move. We should not be at all surprised if the truth revealed that he sacrificed his health for their advancement." Mr. Garst tried to realize in his life and teaching the beautiful spirit of the Sermon on the Mount. His example was a radiant illustration of the Golden Rule. It was an object-lesson on the ideal society which will be realized when all men shall love God supremely and love their neighbors even as they love themselves. This is the blessed life for which the ages have waited, which seers have foretold and poets have sung. For this the good have wrought and the martyrs in every age have laid down their lives. Even the course of nature is touched to this high issue, and serves both the good of the creature and the glory of the Creator.

"That God which ever lives and loves;
One God, one law, one element
And one far-off divine event,
To which the whole creation moves."

Hawaii Letter.

I am visiting at Grand View Ranch, the home of Miss Alice Beard, on the Island of Hawaii, 200 miles from Honolulu and about 50 miles from Manna Loa, where Madam Pile (the goddess of volcanoes) has been displaying her magnificent fireworks since the night of the Fourth. I came over here to assist in organizing the Christian forces of this district for more effectual work and to escape, for a season, from the hot, enervating climate of the capital city.

There are three volcanoes on this island, Manna Loa, 13,675 feet high; Manna Rea, 13,805 feet high, and Haulalai, 8,276 feet high. The latter is in the center of the North Kona district, where I am now visiting. Some of these volcanoes have a number of craters, the noted Kilanea being on Manna Loa at an elevation of 4,040 feet. The eruption which began the night of July 4th was 20 miles up the mountain from Kilanea. In some respects the display was the most wonderful of any known in the history of these great volcanoes. There were several craters erupting, from some of which the molten lava was thrown a thousand feet in the air. Dense clouds of smoke floated out over the sea for several miles, enveloping ships in (to those on board) inexplicable darkness. I was greatly disappointed yesterday to learn that the volcano was "pow" (inactive) as I had planned to visit it next week.

Grand View is on the government road that runs along the mountain about three miles from the beach. The community is very thickly settled, there being a dwelling to about every twenty acres of land in cultivation. The chief industry is coffee-raising, though sugar-cane is now being extensively planted.

Nearly the whole surface of the country is covered with "aa" (soft lava rock) and "pahoihoi" (hard lava rock). The soil is very rich, though generally shallow, the amount being continually increased by the disintegrating lava. No kind of plows can be used, the cultivating all being done with picks and hoes.

Coffee pays from $20 to $80 and sugar from $100 to $200 per acre above the cost of cultivating and harvesting. There are three distinct climates in the district. At the beach it is dry and hot, from two to five miles up the mountain it is cool and wet, above that it is dry and cool. Apples and peaches are successfully grown in the upper belt, and nearly all tropical fruits in the two lower belts. Unimproved land costs from $20 to $50 per acre, and it costs from $25 to $100 an acre to clear and prepare it for planting.

Reno district has a population of 4,500, about 2,000 of whom are natives, 60 whites and the remainder Japanese, Portugese and Chinese. Three years ago Sister Alice Beard, of Modesto, Cal., came here for her health and found very little being done to Christianize the people. She bought 40 acres of land in the midst of the most populous section, planted it in coffee and sugar, built a chapel and parsonage, employed a Japanese preacher and his wife and started the first white Sunday-school, and preaching for Japanese. She has met with and overcome a multitude of difficulties, that would have crushed any other than the consecrated, plucky Christian she is. Recently she has employed Bro. Snodgrass, a a graduate of Kimberlin Heights, and Bro. Ota, a convert of Sister Miller from Japan to devote all their time to mission work in this field. They are both choice men and well suited to the field.

There are ten members of the Christian Church residing in the district. By the request of Miss Beard and under the authority of the Honolulu Church I am here to assist them. I hope to leave them prepared to do more systematic work and partially relieve Miss Beard of the great burden she has so courageously and successfully borne. Up to the present time she has paid all the expense of the mission out of her own private purse. The order of meetings at Grand View Chapel are on Lord's day 10 A. M., Sunday-school for all nationalists; 11 A. M., preaching in English; 3 P. M., preaching in Japanese; 7:30 P. M., preaching in the native language, and every other night of the week a school to teach Japanese men English. Last Lord's day I preached to a very attentive congregation of 36, in which there were seven nationalists represented.

Should any readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST desire to write to Miss Beard, her address is Kailula, North Kona, Hawaii. Be sure to use a five-cent stamp, and if you wish to assist one of the most promising missions of the Christian Church, enclose a greenback or money order.

GREENVILLE CHURCH.

The fourth Sunday of August will long be remembered as a great day by the people of Greenville, and well it may, for it witnessed the opening of the new house of worship in that pretty city of 10,000 people.

On Saturday evening we held a council of war and perfected plans for the battle of the next day, when an appeal for money was to be an important part of the work. Most of the members felt that they had given all they were able. But after much reasoning and exhortation, most of them decided that the shortest and easiest way out of their dilemma was for them to give again, and thus inspire their friende to give; and right nobly did they do it when the call was made.

Before eleven o'clock Sunday morning the house was crowded with an audience of 1,200, while many stood about the doors, and many were turned away. The musical program was good, and when it had been rendered the sermon came. It was an attempt to show that the building of the house was meant to emphasize certain fundamental principles which the world needed: 1. The supremacy of Christ. 2. The supremacy of the Bible. 3. The supremacy of the plea of Christian union. Few sermons ever received closer attention, and it is probable that it did good.

Following the sermon came a business statement which showed that the house and lot had cost $20,000; and a little more than $14,000 had been paid, leaving a balance of almost $6,000. About $1,500 of this, however, was so arranged that it could not be paid for some time, hence it was decided to ask only for what was needed to meet immediate emergencies, or $4,500. After this statement came the appeal, and a few minutes before one the amount had been secured, and the happy congregation sang "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and dispersed to their homes thanking the Father for his continued goodness to the children of men.

In the afternoon there was a sweet communion service, conducted by the pastor, D. W. Pritchett, and at night another large audience and a sermon on "Change of Heart," which seemed to reach the hearts of the people.

Theirs is one of the most beautiful and complete buildings I ever saw. The foundation is of gray brick, the walls pressed brick and the trimmings of stone. The tallest tower is on the northwest corner, with smaller towers flanking the south and east ends, producing a most pleasing effect. The windows are beautiful indeed. The two large windows cost each $1,000. One of them is the gift of Mrs. V. A. King, and is dedicated to her mother, still living, Mrs. Chandler. The auditorium is circular, with inclined floor, the aisles radiating from the pulpit. The pews, of heavy oak, are also circular. The carpet is a handsome moquette. The ceiling is steel and of fascinating design. The Sunday-school room is separated from the auditorium by a solid drop partition. Parlors, dining room, etc., over the Sunday-school room, will be finished later. The pipe organ, the gift of Sister King, was delayed, but will be in place before this is in print. All in all, this is one of the most beautiful, artistic, convenient and commodious churches to be found anywhere, and it does great credit to a little congregation of 250 members.

About 1850 H. O. Polly, now living in Rockwall, held a meeting in Greenville, and his first baptism was that of Mrs. Chandler. Other meetings were held later and the church increased. In 1874 the present organization was effected, and two years later the old house, just vacated, was built. Then came other meetings by M. W. and Clint Matthews, J. M. Pickens, C. McPherson, J. J. Lockhart. Among the pastors I heard the names of S. R. Ezzell, H. Ab Smith, T. W. Caskey, A. C. Henry, J. J. Lockhart, F. L. Young, S. K. Hallam, and the present incumbent, D. W. Pritchett. He is a strong, clear man, and has stood by the work faithfully, and he is rewarded. A meeting is now in progress by Logan and Douthit, and grand results are expected.

The visit at Greenville, in spite of heat, dust and hard work, will always be a green spot in my memory. M. M. DAVIS.

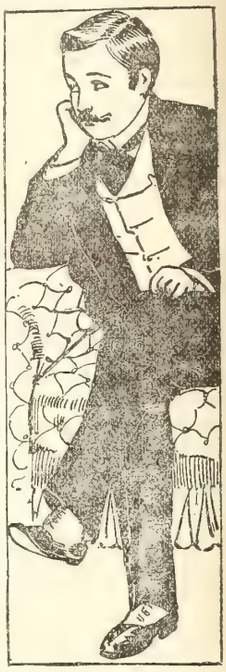
Iowa Letter: C. W. B. M. Convention.

In this state it is the custom to divide the convention week into six sections, as follows: the C. W. B. M., the state work, the Sunday-school interests, the educational and the Endeavor.

The first or C. W. B. M. part closed on Tuesday night, the hottest September day ever known in Iowa. The closing addrss was made by W. W. Rumsey, for six years missionary in Jamaica. He took the island for his theme and proved himself one of the most popular speakers of the convention. For two years this brother has been in the medical school in Keokuk, Iowa. During this time his family has been in England. A glad reunion will occur in a very few days. The new officers of the C. W. B. M. are as follows: Florence M. Haggard, president; Ella M. Huffman, vice-president; Annette Newcomer, corresponding secretary and traveling organizer; Ida Slayton, recording secretary; Letta Page Ashley, treasurer. The district managers are five: Mrs. Sherman Hill, for the Northeast; Mrs. J. M. Hoffmann, for the Northwest; Mrs. N. G. Brown, for the Southeast; Lou R. Brown, for the Southwest; Mrs. G. L. Brokaw, for the Central District. The homes of these managers in order are Hampton, Boone, Ottumwa, Lenox, Des Moines. All the board, save Mrs. Huffman, live in Des Moines. Pressott claims the vice-president. There would have been no change in the presidency but for the removal of Bro. and Sister Wickizer to Nebraska. The C. W. B. M. and the state by this move suffer a great loss. This was expressed by appropriate resolutions. In these resolutions special mention was also made of the splendid services of the retiring treasurer, Mrs. D. C. Bice. The new superintendent of Juuior work is Mrs. D. F. Sellards, of St. Charles. Mrs. I. N. McCash delivered the address of welcome. Alice M. Wickizer delivered the president's address, in which she showed the difficulties which had been overcome and the success which crowned the efforts of the workers. She spoke in her "inimitable way." Mattie Burgess, of Bilaspur, India, who is at home for a vacation, was kept away by the sickness of her mother. But her papers were read by Mrs. Haggard and Mrs. N. G. Brown. One is entitled, "Glimpses of Missionary Work in India." The other is "Orphanage and Building Work of the Junior Endeavor."



This is the nineteenth annual report of the Iowa C. W. B. M. They have striven to make it a "monumental year" and call it our "Silver Year." They have made a splendid increase over previous years. The total amount raised for all purposes is $7,508 63. Again of $1,408 84. This is largely due to the untiring efforts of the corresponding secretary, Miss Newcomer. During the year Miss Crawford resigned as superintendent of the Junior work and Miss Jessie Williams took it up. Her department reports $926.77 raised by 43 bands. The Iowa C. W. B. M. has 2,783 members, having added 261 during the year. Seven new auxiliaries were organized this year. The reports for this convention cover the time from July 1, 1898, to July 1, 1899.

The new board has held its first session to plan for a greater work, if possible, this year. Mrs. Haggard and Miss Newcomer are delegates to the National Convention and will leave for Cincinnati in advance of the body of Iowa delegates to meet the National Board and do their part in the great Jubilee Convention.

A. M. HAGGARD.

Pimples

Are more than a disfigurement of the skin; they are a handicap to a young man, alike in love and business. The pimply face looks dissipated and both merchant and maiden look askance at the unfortunate fellow whose face is his misfortune. An almost certain cure for pimples and similar disfiguring eruptions is found in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It purifies the blood of the corrupting cause of ordinary eruptive diseases, cleanses the skin and builds up the body with sound wholesome flesh. "Discovery" contains neither alcohol nor narcotics.

"I am well pleased with your medicines," writes John A. Calloway, Esq., of No. 218 26th St., Columbus, Ga. "In 1894 I was working at night and I broke out in lumps all over, and when these left the skin peeled off. I took six bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and two of Doctor Pierce's Pellets, and I do believe that I am sound and well. I have a good appetite, but before I commenced treatment I had no appetite at all. My eyes were sunken and my face was pale. I had pimples and brown spots on my face. Now these are all gone. I have used many kinds of medicines but received no benefit. Last year I weighed one hundred and thirty-four pounds, and now I weigh one hundred and forty-five. Please accept my thanks. I am so glad I found the right kind of medicine."

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for book in paper covers, or 31 stamps for cloth, to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Call for Jubilee Singers.

The choir seats at Music Hall accommodate 500 singers. Our local choir will consist of about 100 voices. We desire that about 400 volunteer singers from abroad join us. Those who sing in their home churches will be welcomed. The simple conditions are that they promise to study the music at home before coming, and when here be in their choir seats at 7 o'clock each evening of Oct. 16, 17, 18 and 19.

The collection of songs that will be used at the conventions is now ready and will be mailed, with a choir badge, to each volunteer who sends name, address and the voice-part sung to J. H. Fillmore, 199 W. 6th St., Cincinnati, O.

Further explanations and instructions will accompany the music sent.

The first sessions of the convention will be held at the Central Christian Church, Oct. 13, 14, 15. The instructions to the choir for these meetings accompany the music.

The first mass rehearsal will be held at Music Hall, Sunday afternoon, after the Communion Service.

In studying the new music of the program give strict attention to the words, so that they may be spoken distinctly by the chorus.

Come, and come in the spirit of joyful anticipation. Expect thrills of rapture and delight from the singing of "Our Happy Songs of Jubilee." J. H. FILLMORE, Chairman Music Committee.

A New Order of Service.

Few will doubt the value of the Sunday-school as a factor in the growth of the church, and just as few may doubt that it has its attendant evils.

Superintendents are much perplexed with the difficulties of securing efficient teachers, study of the lessons, enlistment of the body of the church in the work of the school, etc.

What pastor has not been puzzled at his inability to secure the attendance of the Sunday-school at the worship of the church and the prevailing ignorance of the Scriptures?

The recent criticism of the Sunday-school by the Rev. Dr. Pelham Williams in an address before the church club of the diocese of Land Island, holding that the Sunday-school is the cause of the diminished attendance at the worship of the church and the decrease of religious instruction in the family, no doubt has in it a measure of truth.

A very timely article appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in the earlier part of the year, concerning the prevailing ignorance of the Scriptures and the need of some change in the conduct of the public worship, leading to more and better instruction. The writer suggested the advisability of combining the Sunday-school and church in one service; that the regular Sunday-school lesson should be the subject for study as before, followed by a fifteen-minute sermon on the same theme. A similar plan of service had been under consideration by leading members of the Portland church for nearly a year, but had not been tried by reason of its revolutionary ideas.

The article in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was read to the church board and, acting upon its suggestions, advised the pastor of the church to plan an order of service and try the experiment.

The following order of service was put on trial for the month of June:

The church and Sunday-school, assembling at the hour for the regular worship on Sunday morning, began with the usual opening services of the church.

Hymn (choir and congregation).

Concert reading of the Scriptures.

Hymn.

Prayer.

Hymn.

Study of the Sunday-school lesson twenty-five minutes in the regular classes.

Reassembling, announcements and reports.

Hymn, at which time the deacons take the usual offering for the church.

Sermon, thirty minutes on the lesson or kindred theme.

Invitation hymn.

Communion service.

Benediction.

The results have been beyond our most sanguine expectations. At the close of the month's trial the church with hardly a dissenting voice voted to continue the new service.

Comparing the results so far with the same time last year, I find there has been an increase in the attendance at the classes of 52 per cent., which is practically true of all the other parts of the service, and an increase in the offering for Sunday-school of 66 per cent. The Sunday-school has been lifted into the worship of the church and we now have the children to preach to as well as their seniors. The church membership has been enlisted in the study of the Scriptures.

The preparation by the lesson study gives added weight to the influence of the sermons, and the whole service has been shortened from two hours and a half to an hour and forty minutes. We are beginning to have conversions at ou regular services, something very unusual in this church.

Considering that our auditorium only seats 225, with one small adjoining room, and that the average attendance in the classes has been 129, we think the new order of service a great gain, and would not return to the old method under any consideration. G. W. MOORE.

Galveston Letter.

If the shipments of the port of Galveston continue to increase for only four years more in the same way as during the last four years, the total tonnage of the port will pass beyond that of New Orleans, and also Baltimore, and will stand next to that of New York itself. This statement is based upon figures furnished by the Galveston Wharf Company and allows a good growth for the other ports named. This city is destined to be a great one. The present population is 50,000. The port is the natural outlet for the products of the great West and Southwest. It is downhill all the way from Omaha to the Gulf Coast. The shipments of grain from Nebraska and Kansas, that have passed over our wharves during the past four years, show an increase of from comparatively nothing to 15,000,000 bushels annually. The total shipment of cotton last year exceeded that of New Orleans, hitherto the world's greatest port. The government has spent $6,000,000 in the construction of the wonderful jetties for deepening the waters of the entrance to the bay. The Southern Pacific Railway Company has lately purchased wharf frontage here and will transfer its enormous terminal business from New Orleans to this city.

Our A. C. M. S. and Texas State Missionary Board have shown wisdom in the inauguration of the work of establishing a church here. The writer is now in his second year of work under the auspices of these boards. He finds the difficulties almost unparalleled. Romanism, seaside sporting, a transient constituency and a population only one-fifth American render the work of building up a church here one of struggle and great patience. We have a noble band of workers. Final success will reward them. The main struggle at present is to pay the debt upon our house of worship. The work is gradually growing. Nine persons were added during the past month.

Many people are looking this way from the East and North. The fruit lands just across on the mainland hold out the promise of good business and a pleasant Southern home. Among others J. S. Huges, of Chicago, the Earls, of Irvington, Ind., and Dr. Haight, of Peoria, have been investigating the city and rejoice with a view to temporary or permanent residence. JESSE B. HASTON.

Jubilee City Letter.

JUBILEE ENTERTAINMENT.

The one all-absorbing topic now-a-days with those intending to attend the Jubilee is doubtless, "Where will I find entertainment?" If it is not, we would that it was, for a day at least. To care for thousands of people in a pleasing way is a task. Cincinnati people are gifted with much of the Southern hospitality, and what is so genuine? Depend upon them to extend a most gracious hand. But will not our friends be just as gracious? How? Why, by sending your names, the number in your party and just what you want, to Justin N. Green, chairman of committee on assignment, or if you want a hotel, to J. S. Lawrence. That will be gracious, besides it will pay, for all may not be able to get what they want at the last moment.

People of all creeds and none are willing to throw open their homes to our guests. Oblige them by sending in your name and wants now. Then when you alight from the train you may be taken direct to your convention home and be comfortable all the week. There will be no wait at the assignment headquarters and no annoyance possible for either yourselves or the committee. By all means do this if you are expecting to be here throughout the convention.

THE COLLEGE REUNIONS.

One of the happiest features of the whole week will be the college reunions on Wednesday evening the 18th inst. Note that the date is changed from Thursday to Wednesday evening. These reunions will be held between sessions and over the festive board. We preachers are more or less indigent and we are not ashamed of it. We will not have much for incidentals after taking the cream from a year's salary to attend the Jubilee. So it is a happy thing to make banquet out of supper and fill our cups of good cheer to the brim over recollections of those happiest days of them all—the college days. These reunions are not for old students and alumni alone, but officers and close friends of the schools as well. Write to the local chairman and tell him you are coming and make him any suggestion you wish. The chairmen are as follows: Bethany, H. G. Hill, Northside; Lexington, E. K. Van Winkle, Madisonville; Eureka, Geo. A. Miller, Covington; Hiram, J. N. Green; Drake, A. W. Taylor, Norwood.

AN ALUMNI CONFERENCE.

Another proposal that should be fruitful is an alumni conference. There should be more active interest in all our educational institutions by college men. It is proposed to hold a short conference at the close of the educational session on Thursday afternoon. There should be more college graduates on the board of trustees in our colleges. Let that question be discussed along with others. Let us get together as college men and spend an hour or two in open parliament on some such vital themes. ALVA W. TAYLOR.

Norwood, Cincinnati.

Who was Sheshbazzar?

Sheshbazzar is mentioned four times in the book of Ezra: Ch. 1:8, 11; 5:14, 16. The name does not elsewhere occur in the Scriptures. In all the commentaries I have ever seen Sheshbazzar and Zerubbabel are regarded as two names for the same person. The writers on Sunday-school literature are all agreed, so far as I have seen, with one exception. Still, the one may be right and all the others wrong. However, it would only be a mark of ordinary respect, in differing from all other writers, for the one to give some reasons for rejecting the opinions of the many. He may not have respect for them, and in that case is not bound to mention the fact, or give any reason for his new view.

The arguments given by the commentaries in favor of there being but one man, who was named Sheshbazzar by Cyrus, and Zerubbabel by the Jews, are about as follows:

1. It was common for Hebrews placed in power by foreign rulers to have a new name given. This is hardly an argument, and yet it shows how the two names might have been given to the same person.

2. Sheshbazzar is called the prince of Judah, 1:8. From 1 Chron. 3:19 and Matthew 1:12, 13, we are assured that Zerubbabel was the prince.

3. Sheshbazzar was made governor, 5:14. In nineteen or twenty references Zerubbabel is spoken of as governor. Not that he is called by that term that many times, but the position occupied by him was that of governor.

4. Sheshbazzar received the vessels belonging to the house of the Lord from Cyrus, 1:8; 5:14. In the other accounts it is clear that Zerubbabel had entire control of all these things.

5. Sheshbazzar laid the foundations of the house of God, 5:16. In Zech. 4:9, 10 it is stated just as clearly that Zerubbabel laid the foundation. The only way for these statements to be true is found in the fact that the names stand for the same person.

6. Josephus mentions Zorobabel as the leader out of captivety, and knows nothing of any Sheshbazzar. Certainly he knew the use of that name in Ezra, but knew that Zerubbabel was intended, hence used that name only.

I am not sure that these facts will make any impression on the mind of the one writer of whom I have made mention. If he has not seen proper to read what others have said he will not feel under any obligation to read this article. D. R. DUNGAN.

Notes and News.

DEAR FELLOW-WORKER:—I take great pleasure in joining Bro. Gant in his cordial invitation to you to attend the South Kentucky missionary convention, to be held at this place Sept. 26-28. I do this, not for myself alone, or chiefly, but in the name of the church here.

The church at Hopkinsville counts it an honor to entertain this meeting of the brethren and sisters of Western Kentucky. The larger the attendance the better pleased its entertainers will be. We crave guests. We are eager to see you and to greet you. We shall entertain you if you will give us the pleasure of doing so at all, entirely free of cost to you.

We shall look for you on Tuesday, Sept. 26. As soon as you know that you will come write me the fact on a postal card. But whether you write or not, COME. In the confident hope of a great and profitable convention, I am Yours faithfully,

H. D. SMITH.

Attention Eighth District! The Illinois Central Railroad agrees to grant a rate of one and one-third fare for the round trip to those who attend the district convention to be held here the 21st-24th inst., provided that fifty such tickets are sold. Let all those coming over any branch of this road call for a delegate's ticket. You will pay full fare coming and one-third fare returning.

A Dedication.

On the fifth Lord's day in July the writer dedicated the Fairview Christian Church in Shelby County, Mo. A large crowd was present. Dinner was served on the ground, and all had a royal good time. This is a new church having only 33 members, but active and vigorous. The building costing, finished, $1,200 was entirely paid for before the dedication day. Since last reporting there have been five confessions and five by letter at Shelbina and Shelbyville. The church at Shelbina has been painting and papering. The Shelby County meeting was a great success. Sixteen congregations all reporting, 250 delegates from a distance, every church represented, 1,500 members reported and nearly 1,000 in Bible-schools. We have a hustling secretary, W. M. Hanly. There is the secret of success.

Fraternally,

J. H. WOOD.

C. W. B. M. in Nebraska.

The state organization of the C. W. B. M. was effected October 3rd, 1884, at a state convention held in Pawnee City. There were four auxiliaries at that time, viz., Nelson, Clay Center, Lincoln and Beatrice. The Nelson auxiliary is the oldest one in the state, having been organized in 1880. There are now in Nebraska 73 auxiliaries, 10 districts and 1,251 members. During the life of the C. W. B. M. the auxiliaries have sent to the national fund $11,477.63. Since we have no special fund for home and foreign missions, all receipts go to the general fund to be used as the national officers deem prudent.

The enthusiasm of our C. W B. M. ladies at the state convention, which was held at Hastings, Nebraska, August 22–27, 1899, indicates a most prosperous future. The officers for the ensuing year are: State president, Mrs. Wm. Oeschger; recording secretary, Mrs. Mary D. Aylsworth; state organizer, Miss Olive Griffith; superintendent of young people's work, Miss Anna Champion; treasurer, Mrs. Nella Hanna.

History shows that the C. W. B. M. has done much work, but the times demand that much more far-reaching and extensive work is yet to be accomplished.

MRS DEMA OESCHGER.

A Good Work.

Our protracted meeting closed with the best results in the history of the church. Bro. W. A. Lindsey, who was an evangelist in the Baptist Church for 15 years, but came into the Christian Church about two months ago, in company with Prof. Geo. A. Webb and wife came to our city about three weeks ago to hold us a meeting. Notwithstanding the outing season, which had taken many people from the city, also many other attractions, good congregations greeted them at every service. We have at this place a beautiful church building well furnished throughout The main auditorium will seat 500 people; the Sunday-school room about 250; also have parlors and kitchen and everything that goes to make up a modern church edifice The church was constructed last year at a cost of about $7,000, and of that amount our dear Sister L. E Cowls gave about $2,725. Other good members and citizens of the city made up the remainder on the day of dedication, July 30. There was a debt of $2,340 on our building, and through the untiring efforts of Bro. Lindsey our church is now free from debt. He raised the amount in less time than it takes to tell about it.

Bro. Lindsey preached the dedicatory sermon. He is an orator and held his great congregation spell bound. He was to the Baptist Church what our beloved Bro. Updike is and has been to our people He has made our plea a thorough study. We have extended a call to him as pastor for one year, to begin the third Lord's day in this month. We regard him as one of our strongest men. The state convention elected him a delegate to the convention at Cincinnati, Ohio, in October. We were feeling quite blue when they came to us to hold a meeting, but now as the church debt is paid, many souls have been brought to Christ, and we are happy.

Statistical Matters.

A WORD TO CORRESPONDING SECRETARIES.

1. It should be theaim of every state convention to publish full statistics from their churches in connection with their minutes, annually.

2. The annual reports should have a corrected list of all ministers in each state, with post office, and to mark those not engaged in preaching.

3. The ministers and churches of our colored brethren should be placed separate. This should be done for the benefit of both white and colored churches.

4. When a church fails to report for any year, the statistics of the previous year should be inserted.

5. If possible, gather your statistics in June, and continue till completed. But by all means try to have the work done by September 1 of each year.

6 Count all churches who aim to restore the New Testament church, and all ministers who take the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice, however narrow on the one hand or broad on the other, some of these churches or ministers may be.

7. Your reports are now due and should be sent in at once

THE STATISTICS WANTED.

1. (a) Number of churches; (b) number of communicants; (c) number of Bible-schools; (d) number of Bible-school scholars, officers and teachers; (e) number of Christian Endeavor Societies; (f) number of ministers; (g) number of sittings in the churches

2 Value of church property, and church indebtedness (mortgages)

3. Amounts contributed to missions—Home, Foreign, State, District, City, C. W. B. M., and all others.

4. Amounts raised and expended for the local church work, ministry, building and all other matters.

5. Number of missionaries employed in state, district and city missions; time employed and results of labor.

6. The information above should be gathered in June and completed and tabulated by September 1, and sent to the statistical secretary.

7. The correction of the ministerial list should go on continuously and be sent to the statistical secretary, fully corrected, on Dec. 1 of each year.

"HONESTY is the best policy." Nobody contradicts it.

Your dealer can get lamp-chimneys that almost never break from heat, or those that break continually. Which does he get? Which do you get?

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" are tough against heat; not one in a hundred breaks in use. The glass is clear as well as tough. They are accurate, uniform.

Be willing to pay more for chimneys that last till they rot, unless some accident happens to them.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

"Catholics and Jews Will Give You a Welcome."

No doubt it will be of interest to the brethren who expect to attend the Jubilee Convention to know something of the progress of the Assignment Committee.

The "down-town" portion of the city has been canvassed. A vigorous canvass of the suburbs, including Covington and Newport, just across the river, in Kentucky, is being carried on, and we hope to have ample provision for all who come.

Many of the homes and boarding houses make a rate of $1 per day. A limited number will give lodging only for twenty-five cents, or lodging and breakfast for fifty cents. Others demand fifty cents for lodging only, or seventy-five cents for lodging and breakfast

The committee very much prefers that you should wait until you come to receive assignment, but if you prefer to know where you will be entertained, we will send you the name of a suitable hostess and you can make your arrangements with her. Should you do this, do not fail to notify the committee when arrangements are completed.

We wish it were possible to entertain you all in the homes of our own church people, but you are a larger host than we can accommodate, and we have asked our neighbors to give you a home. Many of them are identified with evangelical churches, but not all. Catholics and Jews will give you a welcome.

It will be impossible to find homes for all next door to Music Hall, but if you should not be within walking distance you will find in Cincinnati a splendid street car system, and the most desirable homes are in our suburbs and some distance from Music Hall. We are doing the best we can to entertain you, and we are waiting in our homes to greet you.

JUSTIN N. GREEN,
Chairman Assignment Committee.

What College?

Decision must be made. Our children must be educated. The times, their nature, their future demand this In part, they must be deprived of the society, counsel and love of home. Where shall they go? This is a greater question than you think. It has meant so much that all religious people have established, for the education of their young people, at the cost of thousands and millions of dollars, colleges where healthful influences for proper development could be had. Nor have the Disciples of Christ been forgetful of of this great interest. Alexander Campbell early recognized that without colleges we would mean but little, however orthodox our views. Now the church has colleges in several of the states. Being in Illinois I speak to our families and friends of Eureka College. The education of our children means a great deal more than that they shall know so much mathematics and language. What shall they b ? is a larger question than What shall they know? When both can be adequately considered, which should be done, the education will mean the most. Character and scholarship forms the strongest possible foundation for future building. Christianity furnishes the strongest elements of character. Eureka College is a Christian college, for the education of the whole nature. It does not propose to be excelled in the thoroughness of its teaching in any branch of learning, yet it seeks by its thoroughly imbued Christian faculty to do far more. Does it mean nothing that our children go away to college and become learned, yet lose their morals, or their Christianity? Eureka College is not oppressively strict. The true lady or gentleman only needs guidance to grow. The church of Illinois has provided this institution at great cost. It is a grand old college of more than fifty years of experience Its students have filled the position of United States congressmen, governors, state legislators, judges, lawyers, doctors, principals of high schools, college professors and presidents, and preachers many, besides noble, efficient men in all honorable vocations. No school has a better record nor better surroundings for young people. Tuition and board are as reasonable as anywhere, quality considered. College opens Tuesday, Sept. 12th. Bro. F. G. Tyrell, of Chicago, gives an address the first evening Why shall we not open the new session with 400 students? I am confident there will be that many from our homes and the homes of our friends away in college this fall. Why not have them at Eureka, under the best possible advantages, and by getting the greatest advantages ourselves help to build up a still greater institution for the years to come?

Sunday-school Work and Workers at the Jubilee Convention.

In the splendid and extensive program to be carried out at the great Jubilee Convention, Cincinnati, October 13th–20th, liberal provision has been made for the consideration of the Sunday-school workers. A special session of one-half day will be given to this, and it is desired and expected that Sunday-school superintendents, teachers and many others interested in this department of the work throughout the land will be in attendance and contribute to the interest and advancement of this important session. The Sunday-school Committee of the Jubilee Convention desire to call the especial attention of superintendents and teachers everywhere to this feature of our convention program, and most earnestly request that this matter be mentioned in all our Sunday-schools, and that delegates be appointed The details of this feature of the program will be published later.

P. H. DUNCAN,
Chairman S. S. Com., Jubilee Convention.
Ludlow, Ky.

To the Disciples of Christ in South Kentucky.

DEAR BRETHREN:—You are most earnestly and respectfully asked to consider the following:

1. The next annual convention of our Missionary Association will be held in Hopkinsville, Sept. 26 28. This is no political convention, but a meeting which will be held purely in the interest of the cause of Christ in our territory which embraces 33 counties in Southwest Kentucky. This is a missionary and Sunday-school convention, and should appeal to the heart and conscience of every friend of missions and Sunday school work in our field. We have an excellent program. The brethren at Hopkinsville will be glad to entertain you, and you will have the benefit of reduced railroad fare. Make your arrangements to attend our convention, and send your names to H D. Smith at least a week before the convention.

2. Get certificates from agents at starting-points, that you have paid full fare going, and you will be returned at one cent a mile.

3. All who owe on pledges should pay up at once. Please don't forget this request, as we stand in need of money to meet obligations which were based on your pledges. All moneys should be sent to T. W. Long, Hopkinsville, Ky.

4. We most earnestly appeal to our collectors to go to work at once and collect the balance due on pledges from their congregations. A good collector generally succeeds in collecting the pledges made by his congregation.

5. We ask the aid of our preachers in securing a good attendance at our convention. Brethren, talk it up, both publicly and privately. Let us make our next convention the best ever held in South Kentucky. This with your aid can certainly be done. Our association is helping many of you to preach the gospel at mission points. Will you not give an association which has done so much for the cause of Home Missions your enthusiastic support?

We also ask you to aid our collectors in collecting balance due on pledges.

J. W. GANT,
Cor. Sec.

P. S.—Please distribute.

The Christian Orphans' Home.

For the past seven months I have been in the field, working in the interest of "Our Home." I find that the people generally are kindly disposed toward this good work.

Thus far Poplar Bluff stands at the head of the list, having contributed in cash $70.19 besides $45 in unpaid pledges, making a total of $115.19. Granville enjoys the distinction of standing second in "good works." Granville paid in cash $67.85 with $26 in unpaid pledges, making a total of $93.85.

These congregations are weak, yet they realize the importance of practicing pure and undefiled religion before God and the Father. The world is sadly in need of this article. People are tired of that which seems to be religion. Infidelity has flourished on the mere profession of religion. They can say nothing against the religion that helps humanity now.

There are scores of congregations in Missouri more able to give a thousand dollars than these are to do what they have done. Let them come to the front. Many people think and say that the country is full of prosperity. Let a share of it come in the direction of the Orphans' Home. They are sadly in need of it. It will make glad the hearts of the Christian women who have charge of this work. It will bring happiness to the orphan children.

Brethren, I am coming; be ready to receive me gladly and to contribute liberally, and thus cause joy all around.

In one place I visited a prominent(?) member in the congregation told me that the members were hiding from me. I have heard of some who do not want to know anything about the Orphans' Home. Brethren, don't hide; if I don't find you, the Lord will. Look for opportunities to do good; don't shun them when forced upon you. One other thing, dear brethren—don't make excuses. In the past seven months I have heard enough to last for a long lifetime. "Charity begins at home," "We have orphans at home," "Church debts," etc., etc., have come to be old, OLD songs. Say you can or you can't, you will or you "won't," and that will settle it, and I can go on to the next man.

Brethren, if I delay my coming and you have your offering ready, send it in to Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, 5018 Cabanne Ave., and you will not lose your reward. We are a great people and must do great things for the Lord. He demands it, and the world expects it of us.

State Solicitor for O. H.

Church Extension.

FIRST FRUITS OF THE OFFERING.

The first week's receipts are very encouraging, as shown by the comparative statement given below:

1898, receipts from	30 churches	$116.00
1899, " "	45 "	257.07
Gain	15	$140.18
1898, receipts from individuals		$1,461.43
1899, " " "		1,724.60
Gain		$ 263.17

Total gain over same time last year, $403.35.
Average contribution of churches for 1898, $3.90.
Average contribution of churches for 1899, $5.71.
Total receipts for the first nine days of September, $247.14.
A gain of $483 over last year for the same time.

One of the most encouraging things is that nearly all of the 45 churches have sent all or more than their apportionment.

Bristol, Tenn., is building a new church. Their apportionment was $5, and they sent $10.

Siloam Springs, Ark., was apportioned $5 and sent their full apportionment. This church was aided by the the board.

The church at Hartford City, Ind., was apportioned $5 and sent their full apportionment.

Pine Creek, Ill., was apportionod $5 and sent $10.81, more than doubling last year's apportionment.

Harvard, Neb., was apportioned $20 and sent $22.05.

Monmouth, Ore., was apportioned $15 and sent $20.

Drain, Ore., was apportioned $3 and sent $3.20.

Fourth Church, Indianapolis, was apportioned $10 and sent their full apportionment.

Ridgley Christian Church, Dorsey, Ill., was apportioned $5 and sent $7.

Effingham, Ill., was apportioned $5 and sent its full amount.

Dodge City, Kan., is building a church, was apportioned $5 and sent $10.

Peru, Neb., was apportioned $15 and sent the full amount.

Marlboro, O., was apportioned $5 and sent its full amount.

Bellefontaine, O., was apportioned $5 and sent $10.50. Bellefontaine was aided by the board.

El Reno, O. T., sent $26.80, $5 of which was its apportionment, $21.80 interest on loan made by the board.

Richland Center, Wis., a beneficiary of the board, was apportioned $5 and sent $5.

These letters might be multiplied, but they are an index of how the churches are responding to the offering.

Another fact that should be borne in mind is that the first week only collections from the smallest churches come in.

Our board has aided several colored churches and they are recognizing our work. The colored church at Oxford, O., aided by our board, was apportioned $5 and sent $25. The colored church at Eighth and Everett Streets, Kansas City, Kan., is in debt $800 and raised an offering of $10.

It should be borne in mind that only two Sundays remain for collections in September and that every church should have a part in reaching the $15,000, in order to lift the fund to $210,000 by the Jubilee Convention.

Remit to G. W. MUCKLEY, Cor. Sec.
Kansas City, Mo.

For Foreign Missions.

Comparing the receipts for Foreign Missions for the first eight days in September with the corresponding time, 1898, shows the following:

	1898	1899	Gain
Contributing Churches,	22	09	Loss 13
" Sunday-schools,	16	14	Loss 2
" C. E. Societies,	1	2	1
Individual Offerings,	12	12	—
Amount,	$2,349.30	$2,383.01	$33.71

The receipts to date amount to $132,782.01. We must receive $17,217.99 by Sept. 30, if we reach the $150,000. The time is very short. What is done must be done at once. Let the churches and the Sunday-schools and individuals arise as one man with an offering, to reach the $150,000.

"His Honor is at steak," said the waiter when the county judge was at dinner.

"So they finally froze Johnson out of the company, did they?" "Yes. And I never saw a hotter man in all my life."

Biker. Are the bicyclists in London required to carry bells and lamps? Wheeler (after his trip). No; only fog horns.

Mamma (putting her little girl to bed). Why, Dorothy, I thought you were going to run a race with yourself. Dorothy (undressing very slowly). Yes, mamma, but I'm the one that don't beat, you see.

* * *

After an absence of half a year she had returned. "Did you think of me often, George?" she asked. "Only once, Aggie," he replied, but it was an awful long think—six whole months!"

* * *

First Juryman. What did you think when the judge committed Dobson to prison for contempt of court?

Second Juryman. I was glad he wasn't a mind-reader.

In a case of slander that was heard not long ago, a lady had gone into the witness-box on behalf of the plaintiff, whose counsel was examining her. "Now, madam," the lawyer began, "please repeat the slanderous statements made by the defendant on this occasion, just as you heard them." "Oh, they are unfit for any respectable person to hear!" was the emphatic answer. "Then," said the examiner, coaxingly, "suppose you just whisper them to the judge."

They were building castles in the air as they sat side by side in the gloaming, and there was a far-off look in her eyes as she said: "Yes, Mr. Smithers, I should so love to entertain a great deal, to give lots of parties, to have a salon of my own, in fact." "True," he answered, dreamily, tapping his shoes with his cane, "it would be nice to have a saloon of one's own, wouldn't it?" And the fair creature at his side shuddered, as she detected the odor of a clove in his breath, and she said she would go in, as it was getting a little damp.

A recent discussion at a dinner table whether "gotten" or "got" was the preferable participle, received a practical solution the other day, at least for the telegraph service in the British metropolis, according to a London contemporary, from the experience related of a college professor who preferred "gotten." He had telegraphed to his wife, some miles up town, "I have gotten tickets for the opera to-night; meet me there." The telegraph operator rendered this into: "I have got ten tickets," etc. Mrs. Professor was delighted with the opportunity of entertaining her friends, and accordingly made up a party of eight beside herself, whose greetings to the professor at the rendezvous were perhaps more cordial than his feelings until things were explained. He now makes one exception to his customary use of "gotten."

INDIANA.

Corunna, Sept. 4 —Two additions by baptism at the Cedar Lake Church last Lord's day. Commence a meeting at Waterloo, Monday evening, Sept. 4th.—JOHN J. HIGGS.

VERMONT.

West Rupert, Aug. 31.—We had two additions to the church here last Tuesday by confession and baptism. We expect more.—W. W. WITMER.

MICHIGAN.

Saginaw, Sept. 5.—We held a two weeks' meeting with the church at Fairview, Rush County, Ind., beginning the second Sunday in August. Nine added; eight by baptism, one from Methodists and one restored. Mrs. Pearcy conducted the music. The church is greatly encouraged.—S. W. PEARCY.

KANSAS.

Olathe, Sept. 1.—Two added here since last report. Begin a meeting at Stanley, this state, at once. Work prospers.—C. H. HILTON.

Chanute, Sept. 5.—Three additions by letter and one confession at Yates Center, Sunday, Sept. 3.—W. T. ADAMS.

Cheney, Sept. 2.—I closed with the Bethany Church last Lord's day. Two added the last day; one by confession and one from the Baptists. The church at Cherryvale is also without a preacher and is indifferent about the work. The church at Bethany will employ a minister soon. Preachers need not write either church; they will see to the work when they are able.—C. C. DEWEESE.

ILLINOIS.

Normal, Sept. 4.—One confession yesterday. —E. B. BARNES.

Charleston, Sept. 4.—Two confessions at regular services yesterday morning; $35 raised last week for Home Missions.—F. W. BURNHAM.

Galesburg, Sept. 4.—One addition yesterday; also one addition to the pastor's family, little Miss Dorothy White.—C. H. WHITE.

Watseka, Sept. 2.—After a rest of two weeks I resume my work as pastor of this congregation. One confession at our mission point last evening at the close of the prayer-meeting. A series of Sunday evening sermons on "Popular Amusements," are being heard by many people.—B. S. F., pastor.

Closed meeting at Keithsburg, Sept. 1, 38 additions; 30 by baptism, seven last day of meeting. Am now engaged in a meeting with Pastor W. F. Shaw, at Walnut.—J. E. PARKER.

Modesto, Aug. 14.—I began a course of six lectures in the Christian Church. I followed these lectures with 12 or 15 sermons. I expected and fully contemplated a good meeting at Modesto In this I was disappointed. According to reports no preacher ever held a non-successful meeting. They always have good meetings. But I want to be the exception, and report a meeting that was a failure. The Modesto meeting surely was. If any desire to know the causes of failure I will gladly inform them. I will say here, I regret that I did not do more, that I did not preach better, and more earnestly. Bro, W. Bedall filled my place at Scottville the third Sunday in August. I preach at Palmyra the fourth Sunday, at 11 A. M. and 8 P. M. At 4 P. M., same day Bro. Dapleside—Palmyra—drove me out to Blooming Grove Church. They are repairing the church and will have regular preaching soon. Bro. G. M. Read, Springfield, one of our good men preached for me one Sunday at Modesto, and one Sunday at Scottville. Bro. Read has been resting here, but is now ready to take work again. Churches needing a good man should write him. I report five additions in the Modesto meeting. There ought to have been 25.—O. D. MALPE.

Brockton, Sept. 7. — Two baptisms last Lord's day.—G. A. REINL.

NEBRASKA.

Grand Island, Sept. 4.—Two accessions yesterday; 47 in last nine months.—Z. O. DOWARD.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Kinston, Sept. 9.—Have just closed a six days' meeting for C. W. Howard at River Side, Craven County, with 18 additions.—D. H. PETREE.

KENTUCKY.

Morgan, Sept. 6.—Our meeting at Colmansville, Harrison County, closed Sunday night with 36 additions and a great revival of interest among the members. Lloyd M. Ford, of Lexington, did the preaching.—WALTER P. JENNINGS.

ARKANSAS.

Eureka Springs, Sept. 7.—Eureka Springs has many more visitors than ever before, and church work moves well. Four baptisms; one yet to be baptized, and four by letter since coming here. The church is active in missionary work and will have a delegation at Jubilee Convention.—J. G. BATTENFIELD.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, Sept. 4.—Two united with this church at our regular services yesterday, both heads of families. We had the largest audience last night we have had since our organization, 15 months ago. This church has doubled its membership in the last 12 months; all additions at regular services. We will do it again.—T. HENRY BLENUS.

NEBRASKA.

Douglas, Sept. 7.—The Douglas meeting progresses finely; six added since last report. Church awake and doing aggressive work, is now a leading factor in the religious circles of the town and community. The gospel plea has gotten to the ears of the people as it never has before. The success of the meeting is largely due to the excellent pastoral work done by Bro. Swander. We close this week to commence at Beulah next week. Those wanting meetings should address me at Ashland, Neb. —SAM'L GREGG, evangelist.

CALIFORNIA.

Tulare, Sept. 5.—One addition last Lord's day. Sister Ada Nelson, daughter of one of the leading merchants of this place, made the good confession and followed her Savior in baptism.—EDWARD BEAL.

San Bernardino, Sept. 4. — Five added recently; two by baptism. Next month my son, Paul, now pastor of the church at Redlands, will assist me in a series of meetings at this place. He has the work well in hand there, and is held in much esteem and affection by both church and people. Next Sunday has been appointed for his formal setting apart to the ministry of the Word by imposition of hands, Bro. A. C. Smither, of Los Angeles; F. M. Dowling, of Pomona, and myself co-operating. This, my joy, will be fulfilled.—J. C. MCREYNOLDS.

INDIANA.

Frankfort, Aug. 30.—Meeting at Effingham, Kan., will commence Sept. 10th and continue as long as the interest may demand. At the close of this meeting I would be pleased to hold a few more meetings in Kansas or Missouri before I return home. My terms are the free-will offerings of the people. Address Henry G. Canton, Frankfort, Ind., until the 9th of September; after that date address me at Effingham, Kan.

Corunna, Aug. 28.—Two added at this place and three at Cedar Lake Church since I commenced work here, Aug. 11th. Held a successful rally Bros. T. J. Legg, of Logansport; C. S. Medbury, of Angola; W. C. Boner, of Ashley, and M. P. Hayden, of Eureka, Ill., delivered able addresses. One hundred dollars was raised for church repairs. The work prospers. We are now in a good meeting four and a half miles southwest of this place. This is the first effort of the Disciples of Christ to build up the cause here, and we are hopeful that a good work will be done.—JOHN J. HIGGS, minister.

MISSOURI.

Salem, Sept. 1.—Work is moving on nicely; 24 added here and at Rolla since March.—A. A. BERRY.

DeSoto, Sept. 7.—Closed at Cairo with 39 additions; 35 confessions and the church united. Five last night.—S. J. COPHER.

Cameron, Sept. 4 —Four additions to the church at our services yesterday; all adults, and from three families —S. J. WHITE.

Tuxedo, Sept. 4.—One accession at our morning service yesterday, and one at prayer-meeting Wednesday night.—D. N. GILLETT.

Vandalia, Sept. 9.—J. H. Coil, of Kentucky University, has just closed a very successful three weeks' meeting for me at Union Christian Church, Ralls County, with 43 additions; 35 by baptism. It is a new church, dedicated the third Sunday in July. Bro. Coil left for Kentucky, where he is to hold a two weeks' meeting before entering school.—F. A. MAYHALL, pastor.

Fulton, Sept. 4.—Our meeting at Millersburg continued two weeks and resulted in 10 additions; seven by baptism; two by statement; one by letter. C. H. Winders, of Columbia, did the preaching, and it was well done. The congregation was greatly strengthened.—FRANK J. NICHOLS.

Tarkio, Sept. 4.—Bro. B. F. Clay gave us two strong sermons. Took Church Extension collection. Two men baptized at night. Will open meeting here in October with home forces. H. W. Cies is in a good tent meeting at Lindon. I preach for him Wednesday night.—A. R. HUNT.

Chillicothe, Sept. 6.—Just closed three weeks' meeting at Highland Church (one of my regular appointments since May 1st) with 26 additions; 24 by baptism.—O. L. SUMNER, pastor.

Tulip, Sept. 2.—We closed our meeting here of 17 days with 30 additions. I led the singing and did the preaching. My next meeting will be at Riggs, Boone County, Mo., at which place address for the next three weeks. I hold meetings for expenses and free will offerings and go anywhere in the United States.—T. L. NOBLITT.

E. E. Davidson and D. B. Warren recently closed a meeting at Richland with 48 additions; 33 by baptism. D. B. Warren is now in a meeting at Rolla. Bro. Davidson begins at Jonesborro, Ark., Sept. 6.

Canton, Sept. 7.—Have just closed a meeting at Marcelline, Ill., with four added. This meeting closed the year's work, one of the most prosperous in the history of the church. Several have been added during the year and the work strengthened in every department. With brilliant prospects we enter upon another year.—W. S. LOCKHART.

Kansas City, Sept. 6.—Closed my work as district evangelist for the current year with a meeting at Mt. Zion, Gentry county. There were 43 added to the congregation; 26 of these were new to us. I began a new year's work—my fourth year—as Nodaway Valley district evangelist, Sept. 1. We had a splendid convention at King City, Aug. 29-31.—T. W. COTTINGHAM.

Joplin, Sept. 8.—Evangelist H. C. Patterson, of Irvington, Ind., has just closed a most successful work of two months at Webb City. All old debts were paid, the house repaired, a financial system inaugurated, a successful meeting held with 33 additions, the church aroused to new life and Bro. F. M. Rogers of Edina, Mo., located as minister. We regret to see him leave this section.—W. F. TURNER, 419 Pearl St.

La Monte, Sept. 9.—We just closed a meeting with the Hughesville Church with 19 accessions; 18 by confession, one reclaimed. The song service was under the management of Prof. John Cox, of West Line, Mo. He is a master of song.—PHIL L. STARK & KING STARK.

Kirksville, Sept. 8.—We had five additions to the church here last Sunday; 10 additions the last three weeks. Our work here starts off nicely. This is a large and helpful field.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

SCENES IN THE TROPICS,

OR TRUTH, LOVE AND BEAUTY.*

BY LESLIE COLLINS.

II—Love.

Now do believe me, in this lovely land;
Bewitching beauty smiles on every hand,
And soothing fragrance from the balmy air
Invites a languor, dispossessing care;
While from the torrid sunshine of the day
We seek seclusion from the fearful ray,
And dreamingly await with fond delight
Approaching shadows of most welcome night.
How beautiful the grandeur; how sublime
The luring loveliness of this favored clime,
Where wild-born beauty in profusion lies,
And nature does her best to please the eyes.
The radiant daytime and the twilight night,
The shady woodlands and the valleys bright,
The wealth of colors, ever changing new,
Attract attention and command the view.
The ostentatious birds, so well supplied
With gaudy costumes and with lavish pride,
The fragrant blooms, bewildering and fair,
The pleasing perfume of the languid air—
All, all, inspired my soul to lofty flights,
And while I soar my humble muse indites!

The soul-inspiring rapture, the charming fascination, of my first tropical intoxication was intense. I could but gaze upon the lavished beauty as one in a dream. Such delightful elegance, such infatuating loveliness, my holden eyes had never seen. Oft-times in dreams at night had restless fancy favored me with a few fleeting glimpses of some fair and far-away Elysium, whose Edened bowers were to my soul a paradise; but lo! as I looked the mirage faded, and 'twas but a dream. How different now! In raptured wonderment I gaze upon the grandeured scene with no awakening save that which arouses my admiration to a keener appreciation of more beauty. As some poor, humble, yet poetic soul stands fascinated for hours, gazing upon a master painting, beholding beauties that the meager glances of a casual passer-by could not perceive; likewise did I stand charmed in pensive meditation, gazing on the profused grandeur. How well do I remember those heart-thrilling sensations, those lofty mental ecstacies of pleasure, and the pleasing satisfaction of that spell! It was on a lovely afternoon. The tired day, like a little child, was fast hastening to the outstretched arms of Mother Night. Dear, welcome twilight hours were just a little way ahead when I left the sin and fevered turmoil of the city and strolled down the beach. Far to my right, across the tranquil waters, beyond where the two ultramarines blend into an eternal oneness, old Sol was blushing down the west. The beaming radiance of his August countenance was mellowed down to dreamy looks of love. The alternating colors of his smiles were fair and beautiful. He appeared "as the one altogether lovely." I looked him squarely in the face and told him so! I think this outburst of passion on my part shocked his modesty, for he serenely hid his scarlet face behind a dim and distant cloud, and only blushed the more. As for myself, I slowly loitered down the beach and turned my thoughts to friends and home, far back in Illinois. Methought I was alone, when suddenly an unseen guardian angel, perchance my mother's prayers, flapped its massive, dovelike wings above my head and softly whispered down: "I am Love; follow me and I will show you Beauty." Startled, I stared with upturned face; but the only sight that met my eyes was a passing butterfly, struggling on the breeze. In profound astonishment I stood staring at the little creature till its flight was lost amid the drowsy woods. Then, as before, I thought I heard the rustle of those wings. I am not sure. It only might have been their sound in memory; yet, in my fancy I think I called aloud to Love. But the only answer was a laughing zephyr that threw perfume in my face, and pressed its lips against my brow. I called aloud the second time, and from out the lull of distance came an echo that echoed and re-echoed: "I will show you Beauty," until it finally died upon the languid air. So I turned and followed Love, and as I came upon the woods, the dying sunlight on the dense luxuriant growth, the liberal wealth of colors from the freshest velvet, virgin shades of new-born green down to those of seared and aged gold, the bright and gaudy-tinted birds who, startled at my approach, rearranged their gorgeous gowns and struck an attitude that charmed, the gigantic ferns, the extraordinary palms and the bewildering profusion of a thousand strange and different kinds of flowers produced a picture that no artist's brush or poet's pen could paint. How long I looked upon the luring loveliness I cannot say. I had just stooped down to pluck a wayside flower when, at my very feet and on that very bloom, the loveliest flower of the tropics reposed the little butterfly. "Oh, bewitching Love," I cried, "surely, surely, this is Beauty." The sun then threw a farewell kiss across the sky. Most beloved night came down, and all was still!

The Moulting of a Tarantula.

The state entomologist, of New York, here describes a very interesting event which took place in his office:

A large tarantula shed its skin for the second time since it had been in captivity. Those familiar with insects, spiders and related creatures are aware that they are incased by a hard, unyielding integument.

Increase of size is permissible only when the skin is shed and one that has been newly formed beneath expands to the requisite degree. This is a process constantly occurring in nature, and ever excites interest in the beholder.

When a large spider, three inches long, throws off the old integument it is a thrill-sight.

In the present case the tarantula had evidently been feeling unwell for some days, a condition frequently preceding this process among insects, and yesterday morning was found lying upon its back and apparently dead, but moved a little upon being disturbed. It lay thus until about 12:15 o'clock, when the rustling it made excited attention.

The old skin was then ruptured about the thorax in such a manner that the top could be removed entire, and through this opening the giant spider was literally working out of its old skin. This was accomplished by the aid of the eight legs and the two leglike palpi.

At the end of an hour the change had been effected. The spider lay upon its back, beside the perfect skin, resting from the severe exertion.

This tarantula was unusually large before it moulted, and is now of still greater size. It came North in a bunch of bananas about two and one-half years ago.

An idea of the increase in size attendant upon moulting may be gained by comparing the dimensions of the dorsal piece of the skin shed about the latter part of 1896 and the one shed yesterday.

The first measures one inch and the second measures one and one-fourth inches. Therefore the present dorsal piece will probably be proportionately larger when it is fully expanded.—The Humane Alliance.

"Feed My Lambs."

A. R. ADAMS.

Train up the child in the way he should go,
Patiently teach him the gospel of love;
Sow the good seed of the kingdom below,
And reap a rich harvest in heaven above.

Train up the child for Jesus our Lord;
Show him the path which our Savior hath trod.
O, feed the dear lamb on the "milk of the Word,"
And prepare him below for the fold of our God.

The Blotting Out of Sin.

What is the blessing of the blotting out of sin?

Recall the story of the boy who ran in one day to his mother, after he had read that promise, "I will blot out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions." And he said:

"Mother, what does God mean when he says he will blot out my sins? What is he going to do with them? I can't see how God can really blot them out and put them away. What does he mean—blot out?"

The mother, who is always the best theologian for a child, said to the boy: "Didn't I see you yesterday writing on your slate?"

"Yes," he said.

"Well, fetch it to me."

He fetched his slate. Holding it in front of him, the mother said:

"Where is what you wrote?"

"Oh," he said, "I rubbed it out."

"Well, where is it?"

"Why, mother, I don't know."

"But how could you put it away if it was really there?"

"O, mother, I don't know. I know it was there, and is gone."

"Well," she said, that is what God means when he said, 'I will blot out thy transgressions.'" — Rev. G. Campbell Morgan.

American Youth.

DE WITT COSGROVE WING.

Refuse the kindness of a friend (?)
Who would your pure breath blend
With the odor of rum or strong drink—
Refuse, O youth! reject and bethink
The unhappy homes and blasted lives,
Poor, ragged children and heart-broken wives,
Whose sad fate King Rum decreed.
O, American youth, God's words heed!

The Poor.

A. C. MAUPIN.

God has always made the poor of this world a specialty. It is by his appointment that some are made poor (1 Sam. 2:7). He has said that they shall always be with us. God gives them special care and requires us to do the same. He has promised to stand at their right hand, to hear them and spare them; that their expectation shall not perish forever, and that they shall not always be needy; that he will deliver them in affliction, and prepare for them his goodness; that they shall have the gospel preached to them and be heirs of the kingdom that he has prepared for them that love him.

Prayer Dipped in Purpose.

There is the prayer that asks to be delivered from temptation while the toes of the supplicant point straight toward temptation. The prayer lacks purpose. It is the tow without the tallow. It flashes up and is spent. An honest purpose will at least turn the heels toward danger, and ask God to keep them so.

Then there is the prayer that is prayed on the safe side of the street. It is dipped in a consistent purpose that makes a steady, lasting blaze.

The man who purposes as he prays, not only uses his lips in prayer, but he prays with his eyes, his ears, his hands, his common sense, his will—all there is of him.

When Jesus said, "When ye pray, say," he did not imply that praying was only saying. Praying is keeping the mouth shut, sometimes. It is eating, it is drinking, it is sleeping, it is marrying, it is buying, it is voting, it reading books. The whole life is a prayer, or else the life has no prayer.—Christian Endeavor World.

The Voice in the Sick Room.

Speak in low, cheerful, but perfectly distinct tones. If there is anything to be said which the invalid must not hear, go outside of the room to say it, for there is nothing which so irritates the sick person as whispering. A whisper is more penetrating than a full tone, and it rasps every nerve. Do not speak in a loud tone, nor talk about the medicine, the disease or the food. Never tell anything of an exciting nature, and avoid all reference to what is annoying or unpleasant. If there is a jar in the domestic machinery never let it come to her ears. It will surely trouble her and may retard her recovery. It is of the utmost importance that all family troubles or vexations be rigidly excluded from the sick room, and that it be pervaded at all times by an atmosphere of cheerful and restful peace. The one special qualification needed to get on in the sick room is tact. With this allied to patience and gentleness the duties of nurse will be much lightened.—Woman's Home Companion.

Aluminium.

Aluminium is a source of stored energy whose use as described by Herr Goldschmidt to the German Electro-chemical Society has given astonishing results. When in a sand-lined wooden bucket with an oxygen compound, such as iron-oxide, the aluminium can be ignited with a match, after which it burns quietly, giving forth an intense heat, which may reach 3,000 C. This supplies an economical furnace for brazing or hard soldering. It can be used also for welding, for producing pure wrought iron, for making a variety of alloys and for obtaining certain pure metals free from carbon that have been hitherto almost impossible to produce. A mass of metallic chromium weighing 55 pounds has been obtained in this way. The slag is of interest, being artificial corundum of exiraordinary hardness, and containing minute artificial rubies.—Literary Lights.

The Money Burned up in Tobacco.

Truly, the people of the United States have money to burn. The best evidence of this is the amount of money expended annually by them for tobacco, to say nothing of the other means they have developed for burning the coin of the realm. They spend every year for tobacco alone a total of over $384,000,000. This certainly is an astonishing sum.

Two-thirds of this enormous amount of money goes out every year from the pockets of the people for the consumption of cigars alone. Smoking and chewing tobacco consumes the larger part of the remainder, while cigarettes burn up the smallest sum of all. The figures are furnished by the government in the latest official report on the conditions of the tobacco trade, and they are very surprising.

In the first place, there were manufactured for home consumption in the United States last year a total of 4,529,872,304 cigars. At that this great figure does not represent the consumption. There were manufactured the year before over 120,000,000 cigars in excess of the natural demand. This was done to evade the anticipated war tax on the manufacturer. Including these millions of cigars the consumption for the year shows an increase over the previous twelve months of over 100,000,000. This means that the cigar smoking of the United States during the last year increased nearly three per cent.

But while the cigar production shows an increase there is a critical condition presented in cigarettes. While there were four billion odd cigaretts smoked in the country during the year 1897, the consumption fell off over ten per cent. last year, meaning a decrease of over 400,000,000 cigarettes. Unless the anti-cigarette crusade is abandoned or the tax on the commodity materially lessened there is likely to be another slump in this year's output.

There is little if any decrease in amount of cut smoking tobacco sold. Despite this there is a big falling off in the production of cut tobaccos. This indicates that the chewing habit is materially decreasing. An investigation proves that this is true.

The chewing of tobacco is confined very largely to districts. Missouri is the great chewing state, with Kentucky ranking second and New Jersey and New York third and fourth. Every one of these states show a big decrease in the past year. Missouri has fallen off over 6,000,000 pounds, New Jersey over 5,000,000, Kentucky 4,500,000 and New York 1,000,000 pounds. This means that the chewing of tobacco has fallen off nearly 15 per cent. in one year. Such decreases would wipe it out in practically no time.

All together, the consumption of tobacco is far beyond what it was in the previous year, and this year may be expected to be another big record breaker.—St. Louis Republic.

Tons of Postal Cards.

Recently a shipment of postal cards was received at the St. Louis post office amounting to three car loads; weight, 86,980 pounds. It consisted of 1,170 boxes, 12,000,000 cards, and was valued at $120,000. The Post Office Department has three depositories or agencies for its postal cards—Troy, N. Y., Cincinnati, O., and St. Louis, Mo. The territory supplied by the St. Louis agency includes all of the post offices in Illinois, and in all of the states west of the Mississippi River, except Louisiana. The amount of cards in stock at this agency varies in value from $300 000 to $500,000. The present stock is 29,875,650 cards, value, $373,923.

It may be news to the average citizen that six kinds of postal cards can be had at the main office, or at any of the stations—the common 1-cent postal card, the same with a reply card attached for use in this country, a foreign 2-cent card, and a foreign card with reply attached, 4 cents, and a small white card generally used by the ladies. For the convenience of business men and those who use in large quantities postal cards on which the message is printed, the common business card is also sold in sheets, forty cards on one sheet, the purpose being to reduce the cost of printing thereby.—St. Louis Republic.

The Lesson of Sorrow.

BY LAURENE HIGHFILED.

There's a lesson in life which we all must learn:
'Tis the sad, bitter lesson of sorrow;
For our hopes so bright and glowing to-day,
Lie all blighted and withered to-morrow.
This old world is full of heartaches and grief,
And our eyes are all blinded with weeping
When our loved ones slip from our clinging hands,
And our mourning disturbs not their sleeping.

But not far from sorrow upon life's page,
We may find the sweet lesson of trusting;
It is hard to learn, while despair its darts
Through quivering heart-strings is thrusting.
Yet our Lord, in whom all our trust is placed,
All our days will rightfully number;
For He who keeps watch over Israel
Does not sleep, nor forget us, nor slumber.

There is still a lesson for us to learn,
In its fullness, the lesson of hoping
For the glorious day that will come when we Shall no more be in darkness groping,
Looking forward with hope, while with patience we wait
For life's tangles to all be unraveled,
Having learned this lesson: that of life's ways,
Best for us was the pathway we traveled.

Good Books Make Good Company.

Paul wrote to Timothy, "Give attendance to reading" (1 Tim. 4:13), and the mind cannot develop without the company of good books, for good books know more than any one man can teach. No man who thinks can ever be lonely if his library shelves are near. Books become as precious to us almost as individuals. We admire them, we argue with them, we accept the statements of one and call in question those of another. Have poor furniture, go without carpets on your floor, wear the same clothing the second and third seasons if thereby you can have books. Carlyle said, "The true university is a collection of books." We should not read everything that comes into our hands any more than eat everything advertised in the market. We should be more careful what we read than what we eat, for the mind goes beyond the grave, while the body goes back to the earth. Books become our companions that we get to love as persons, and are they not persons speaking to us out of their wisdom and beauty? A secondhand book-store often reminds us of the almshouse. It is the place of discarded friends, but though old and abused they still speak with all the charm that they did when new and first read. Gilbert Parretanus, who became Archbishop of Poictiers in 1142, speaks thus of the pleasure he found in good books:

"Our house is empty, save only myself and the rats and mice, who nibble in solitary hunger. There is no voice in the hall, no tread on the stairs. The clock has stopped . . . the pump creaks no more. But I sit here with no company but books, dipping into dainty honeycombs of literature. All minds in the world's history find their focus in a library. This is the pinnacle of the temple from which we may see all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them. I keep Egypt and the Holy Land in the closet next the window. On the side of them is Athens and the Empire of Rome. Never was such an army mustered as I have here. No general ever had such soldiers as I have. No kingdom ever had half such illustrious subjects as mine, or half as well governed. I can put my haughtiest subjects up or down, as it pleases me. . . . I call 'Plato,' and he aswers 'Here'—a noble and sturdy soldier. 'Aristotle,'—'Here'—a host in himself. 'Demosthenes,' 'Cicero,' 'Cæsar,' 'Tacitus,' 'Pliny'—'Here!' they answer, and they smile at me in the immortality of youth. Modest all, they never speak unless spoken to. Bountiful all, they never refuse to answer. And they are all at peace together. My architects are building night and day without sound of hammer; my painters designing, my poets singing, my philosophers discoursing, my historians and theologians weaving their tapestries, my generals marching about without noise or blood. I hold all Egypt in fee simple. I build not a city, but empires at a word. I can say as much of all the Orient as he who was sent to grass did of Babylon. . . . .All the world is around me, all that ever stirred human hearts or fired the imagination is harmlessly here. My library shelves are the avenues of time. Ages have wrought, generations grown, and all their blossoms are cast down here. It is the garden of immortal fruits, without dog or dragon."

"Bunyan's Reflections," written more than two hundred years ago, found its way into the hands of Richard Baxter and led him to Jesus Christ. He in turn wrote the "Call to the Unconverted" and 20,000 copies were sold the first year. One fell into the hands of Philip Doddridge and this led him to Jesus, who in turn wrote "Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul." This book was the means of converting Wilberforce, and his book, "Practical View of Christianity," was the means of converting Leigh Richmond, and he wrote "Dairyman's Daughter," which led Thomas Chalmers to a larger knowledge of Christ and made him the great minister that he was. Books are not dead things. They live, and good books carry light and sweetness into every home where they are allowed to speak.—Christian Tribune.

Who Said It?

Dean Swift is credited with "Bread is the staff of life."

It was Keats who said, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever."

"Man proposes, but God disposes," remarked Thomas a-Kempis.

Franklin is authority for "God helps those who help themselves."

It was an observation of Thomas Southern that "Pity's akin to love."

We are indebted to Colley Cibber, not to Shakespeare, for "Richard is himself again."

Edward Coke, the English jurist, was of the opinion that "A man's house is his castle."

"When Greek joins Greek, then is the tug of war," was written by Nathaniel Lee in 1602.

Edward Young tells us, "Death loves a shining mark," and "A fool at forty is a fool indeed."

"Variety's the spice of life" and "Not much the worse for wear" were coined by Cowper.

Charles Pinckney gave the patriotic sentiment, "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute."

"Of two evils, I have chosen the less," and "The end must justify the means," are from Matthew Prior.

Earning a Little and Spending Less.

The injunction to "earn a little and spend less" emphasizes the law of self-support, and warns us against the danger and possible degradation of debt. Needing many cautions, our age needs more than this plea for a return to simplicity, and obedience to "Poor Richard's" principle, "Pay as you go." Unhappily, some of earth's most gifted sons have been royal spendthrifts, and through debt have gone down in hopeless ruin. History holds no scene more pathetic than brave old Walter Scott, in the hour when Lockhart wheeled him into his summerhouse and saw that the hero was dying of overwork through debt. "Suddenly," said his biographer, "the broken-hearted author threw off his wraps, moaning, 'This will never do, I must get to my work.' But when he tried he could not hold the pen or dictate a word, but sat still, with the tears running down his fine old face, beaten in the brave battle and slain by debt."

The sword and spear have slain their thousands, but debt hath slain its ten thousands. Poor, but desiring to be a patron of the fine arts; unable to deny his taste for rare books and paintings and beautiful drawings, the youth buys them upon time, under the delusion that his treasures will be wings to lift him forward, not knowing that his debt will be a chain about his neck —a chain to which every month compound interest adds a new link. The peril of our age is extravagance. Should we call the roll of a score of the most gifted children of this generation, we should find that eight of the twenty, including a great orator, a novelist, two jurists, a wit, two statesmen, were all caught in debt's meshes.—Saturday Evening Post.

With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

The Son of Gideon.

CHAPTER THE LAST.

In the meantime, Tola had not forgotten the memory of Gideon. With Caleb and Esther he had escaped to Shamir, and here he tried to rouse the people against Abimelech. Tola thought Jotham was dead, but he was none the less resolved to devote his life to the destruction of the wicked king of Shechem. It was hard to make the people interested in the cause, but at the end of three years Tola succeeded in raising an army to lead against Shechem.

Caleb had begged hard to be allowed to go with the army. At first his father would not consent. But Caleb was so earnest in his wish to help destroy the tyrant that at last Tola consented. "I believe we shall meet him before we return from this battle."

"Alas!" said Esther, holding her brother in her arms, "if I could only know that you would return!"

"If I do not," said Caleb. "you will know that I fell in a just cause."

"But how will that help, when you are dead?" said Esther, speaking as a girl. The army marched out of Shamir and took the road toward Shechem. When they came to the valley that led to the city, an exclamation of astonishment burst from the army. The city had vanished. Its walls lay flat upon the ground, and where had once been streets now seemed to glisten snow, although it was in the heat of summer. As they ran up, they found that it was salt, not snow, which shone white in the sun. Not a building had been left standing. Where once rose the great temple of Baal was now a heap of black ashes, among which the charred remains of human bones were visible.

There was one man in the midst of this desolate scene who ran toward the army as it approached. It wasGaal, the one who had put Caleb and Jotham upon his mule, the night Abimelech murdered his brothers. Tola demanded how the destruction of Shechem had come about.

"I roused the people against Abimelech," said Gaal. "We had a fearful battle. One thousand men and women were burned alive in the temple of Baal. Abimlech defeated us. I escaped. But if you lead this army against Abimlech, let me join it, for I would fight him again before I die!"

Gaal was given a position in the ranks by the side of Caleb. "Ho!" cried the burly man. "So this is the spy that played snake in the long grass! Give me your hand! But what do you in an army of men; ay, my fledgling?"

"I shall fight," said Caleb cheerfully.

"Ho! ho!" laughed Gaal. "I doubt it not! I feel sorry for any broken-winged sparrow that hops in your way! Surely, you will hew it down merrily! But what will you do, boy, when Abimelech with his terrible sword comes to meet us?—that bloody king who sowed Shechem with salt!"

"That you shall see presently," replied Caleb with undisturbed good humor. "For if I am not mistaken, yonder comes a troop of the enemy!"

"As Baal lives!" cried Gaal. "Or I should say as God, since the heathen god could not defend his own temple."

"Abimelech!" cried the soldiers who were in the advance ranks. "The enemy comes!"

"Hold firm!" cried Tola. "Withstand them. They come furiously. Every man draw his bow and make ready!"

"Another company pours down upon us in the rear!" said Gaal. "Abimelech has divided his forces. It is his plan always. Now, Caleb, fall to earth!" As he spoke a volley of arrows was poured into their ranks. Caleb and Gaal fell just in time. The soldier who had stood beside Caleb threw up his arms and fell dead, an arrow in his breast. Caleb leaped up, his arrow ready, and let it fly in the direction of the enemy. At the same time, he noted the fact that the dead lay among his father's soldiers in appalling number. "Shoot!" cried Tola. Gaal was shooting as fast as he could draw arrows from his quiver and fit them to the notch. The enemy began to recoil. But the company behind them was coming rapidly up. The soldiers turned in their direction and sought to stay them. But on came the men, and at their head was seen the terrible Abimelech. They carried drawn swords in their hands. When the first company of the enemy saw that Tola had turned to Abimelech, they recovered from their confusion and began to pour arrows into his troops. Tola could not reply to this fire, because it was necessary to await the attack of Abimelech. His men fell here and there with loud cries, but this terrible situation did not last long. Abimelech way soon upon them, and the other company of the enemy dared shoot no more for fear of hitting their own men.

Then began a terrible scene of carnage. Caleb had dropped his bow to draw his sword. He could not get to the enemy because his own men were between. For a while they swayed back and forth before him, a partition of living flesh. But this barrier began to pass away. His fellow-soldiers dealt terrible blows to the enemy, but they were receiving death wounds. They fell at the feet of the boys, their bodies across each other. The enemy were climbing over this bloody barricade straight toward Caleb. At their head was Abimelech, his face, hands and clothes reeking with the blood he had shed. At the sight of the king Caleb had no thought of fear. If he could only strike down that man and avenge the death of the sons of Gideon—avenge the wrong done Jotham. Now Abimelech had sprung over the last corpse. He was opposed by the slender boy. "Yield!" cried the king. "Why should I kill a weak boy? Yield yourself prisoner!"

"Never to the tyrant of Shechem!" cried Caleb, with a quick thrust of his sword. "Long live Jotham, son of Gideon!" His fierce thrust had not been without effect. In trying to parry the blow, Abimelech received the point of Caleb's sword in his arm. It was not a serious wound, but it made him furious. He threw himself upon the boy, and his weight sent Caleb to the ground.

"Miserable son of Tola!" he cried. "Do you think to defy the king? Die like a dog!" He set his foot upon the boy's helpless bosom and drew his reeking sword. At that moment his sword was struck from his hand and sent whirling above the heads of the contending soldiers. Abimelech's foot was withdrawn, and Caleb sprang to his feet to find that Gaal and Abimelech were engaged in a furious struggle. It took place with lightning rapidity. Gaal flashed his sword to cut the king to the heart. As the blade descended he dodged qucikly, then seizing the blade in his desperate hand, snapped it in two, while Gaal still held the hilt. "Traitor!" hissed Abimelech." "Fool!" retorted Gaal. "You shall die and I will be king. What is Abimelech that men should obey him?"

They locked each other in infuriated arms and began a ferocious struggle. Abimelech fell with a groan. Gaal fell upon him. At that moment a hand seized Caleb's arm. "Flee! flee!" cried Tola in his ear. Caleb started as from a dream, and saw that his men were in hurried retreat toward the near city of Thebez, while everywhere Abimelech's men were conquerors. As Tola dragged his son away, a voice rose above the tumult.

"Die! die!" It was the voice of Gaal, as he knelt upon the helpless body of Abimelech. So excited was he that he did not see his own men were fleeing far away; that the king's troops were surrounding him like an angry sea. "Rescue!" screamed Abimelech. The next moment Gaal was struck dead from a sword thrust. The king leaped to his feet, foaming with fury. "Where is the boy?" he shouted. "Death to the son of Tola!"

"He flees toward Thebez."

"Take the city; sow it with salt!"

A rush was made upon Thebez. The terrified defenders of the wall fled to the great tower. Within this tower Tola and his men sought protection. Abimelech's soldiers swarmed into the city. They surrounded the tower. Tola's men, as well as the women of the town, had rushed to the flat roof from which they discharged their arrows. They saw the enemy piling dry branches up against the sides of the tower. Their arrows struck some of these men, but others escaped. Caleb suddenly clutched his father's arm and pointed. A soldier was approaching the brush heap with a flaming torch. "Shoot!" cried Tola.

"Our arrows are all gone!" said the soldiers. A scream burst from the women and the men uttered low groans. "I have one arrow," said Tola. "But it is a great way and the wind blows. Yet it may be some one is more sure of hand. Who will shoot in my stead this only arrow?"

There was no reply. Then Tola drew his bow and leaning over the parapet, discharged the weapon. A yell of exultation went up from his men. The torch lay smoldering upon the ground, its bearer dead. But suddenly Abimelech rushed forward and seized the torch. It blazed afresh. He went up to the very door and stooped to light the brush.

Directly over Abimelech, high on the roof, stood a woman, looking down. She held in her hand a small stone. With careful hand she dropped it and it struck the king upon the head, giving him a mortal wound. He staggered back from the tower and said to his young armor-bearer, "Draw your sword and slay me, that it may never be said, 'A woman slew Abimelech!'"

When his soldiers saw him die at this command, they left Thebez and returned to their homes, since they had no more king to fight for. And the Jews made Tola judge over Israel. When Jotham heard of this he came to Shamir and met again Caleb and Esther and lived with them. And often they would visit the cave near Thebez, and the "stone house" near Shechem, where Jotham was never tired of pointing out "the baby," "the rock of steps" and "the elephant."

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

THE SONG OF THE RETURNING PILGRIMS.*

The Book of Psalms contains the hymns of the second temple service and was probably gathered into something like a complete form for this purpose, though there may have been earlier collections of some portions of the book. It is usually called the Psalms of David, not because the book assumes to be exclusively the work of this king, but because David was believed to have composed and uttered psalms, and he thus became the common denominator of the psalm literature, as Solomon did for the wisdom literature and Moses for the law. Just how many of the psalms in our collection were composed by David is an open question, on which it is impossible to speak with anything like assurance. There are those that hold that every psalm ascribed to David by its title was composed by him. There are those who deny that David wrote any of the psalms, and place their composition exclusively in the period following the Exile. It is unlikely that either of these views expresses the truth. There seems to have been no reason for the widespread opinion that David was the originator of psalm literature, or at least its most conspicuous representative, unless he actually did set the type of this style of composition. It is evident, therefore, that some of the psalms must have come from him.

On the other hand, the titles do not belong to the original psalms, but were added by the Jewish editors of the books many years later on traditional grounds which were often fantastic, and proceeded upon the supposition that nearly all the psalms were David's, and, therefore, sought to ascribe to each one a place in connection with some event in that king's career. But the psalms themselves reflect every variety of sentiment and seem to be the expression of the thought of nearly every period of the national life from the days of the united kingdom down to the Greek period. They have the unique value of giving utterance to the religious experience of a people more deeply religious than any other of the ancient nations, and especially valuable are they as expressing those hopes and feelings which arose out of Israel's unique place in the scheme of the divine revelation as the message-bearer for God to the world. In these poems one comes into actual contact with the life of men and women who believed deeply in God and were willing to suffer for his sake, whose doubts and difficulties they took in open expression to him, and whose hopes and joys they voiced in confidence that he was the surety of their expectations.

A conspicuous division of the psalms is that which passes by the name of Songs of Ascents. These seem to have been pilgrim songs used by those who went up to the great feasts at Jerusalem from different parts of the country, and perhaps some of them even had the greater historical significance of expressing the thoughts of the returning exiles who came back from Babylon to Jerusalem to rebuild the city and revive once more its worship. The one hundred and twenty second psalm seems to be of this class. The ascription, "To David," which is found at the head of so many of the psalms, might imply that David was its author, or more probably, that it belonged to the collection which went by the name of David, which was probably the earliest collection of temple songs gathered after the rebuilding of the temple on the return from the Exile. This psalm seems to reflect the ideas of a period long subsequent to David's day, and that it was actually composed by the king himself probably few if any biblical scholars would claim. It looks back upon a long national history in which the name of David has become illustrious and speaks of Jerusalem as the city to which the tribes have been accustomed to go up for centuries. Such expressions would be impossible in the age of David, and reflect much more conclusively the thoughts of the post-exilic period.

The speaker is perhaps one of these exiles who has returned recently from Babylon and is now joining the caravan of pilgrims as they go up to the newly built Jerusalem. He speaks of his joy at the announcement that the time had arrived for the annual journey and the word passed among the people caused the usual preparations for the march. The singer seizes the moment when the caravan has reached the city and is at last standing within its gates (verse 2). Then turning to look about upon the city which was once demolished by the cruel hands of the Babylonians, he expresses his satifaction at its rebuilding and its compactness in the present time: "Jerusalem that is rebuilded as a city compact together." This was the result both of its elevated situation on the top of the two hills, Zion and Moriah, and also of the fact that its buildings, being close together, contrasted strongly with the scattered houses of the country districts from which probably the singer came. Then looking back upon the past history he recalls the fact that the tribes of the Lord have been accustomed from ancient days to come up to Jerusalem for just such services as this, bearing testimony to the unity of Israel's life and giving thanks to Jehovah's name. In this city are set the judgment thrones of the house of David, and the kings who have occupied these thrones are all of his dynasty. In the southern kingdom there was never a break, save the unfortunate interregnum caused by the usurpation of Athaliah; otherwise the rulers were all of David's own seed. They were both kings and judges for their people. Such a city could not but be dear to the heart of every Jew, and indeed of every Israelite, who loved God and the prosperity of the nation. Therefore, the prayer for the peace of Jerusalem, so long storm-tossed by the vicissitudes of war, and now slowly and painfully rising to what promised to be a new life, and that prosperity should come to those that loved her. Within these bulwarks peace ought to dwell and prosperity in the palaces which were already building. Not for his own sake, but for the national welfare, he prays for the peace of Jerusalem, and especially for the temple of God, which became more and more the center of the religious life of the reviving community after the Exile.

Such a song has a value much greater than the singer himself could possibly realize. It passed naturally into the possession of the nation and was sung over and over in connection with the temple service, no doubt, both in that age and in subsequent periods. Such a psalm breathed the aspirations and the love of generations of loyal Jews. It became saturated with their affections and their hopes. It thus becomes not only the expression of the original composer, but of all those through whose lives it has passed on its way to us. In this fact lies the unique significance of the psalms as the expression of religious experience. They are much more than the literature of ancient Israel, for upon their strong tides have been borne the spiritual emotions of every generation of seekers after God. They express, many of them, as truly to-day as when first uttered, the religious life of the world, and to every Christian a psalm like this may become a vehicle for the utterance of a deep and genuine love for the house of God as firm and abiding as that which actuated its unknown singer many centuries ago. The same cords of love bind us to the sanctuary as those which bound the Jew to the temple on Mount Moriah. It is a precious inheritance, this, of reverence for the place where God's honor dwells, even though the structure may be comparatively simple, and although its service may not be as stately as those chanted by choirs of Levites in the temple of old. It is not the place or the building which has special significance. It is the atmosphere of worship which pervades it, and in the simplest sanctuary rudely constructed by willing and sacrificing hands, as well as in the noblest cathedral reared by the skill and wealth of man, God may be worshiped, for he seeks not merely temples made with hands or a particular form of service, but only the worshiper who worships in spirit and in truth.

A Baby's Sad Plight. Mr. I. W. Bunch, of Aurora Springs, Mo., relates the following: "Our baby had been sick and puny all summer and was hardly able to take any nourishment. Finally the child broke out all over with the worst looking boils I have ever seen, but thanks to your Blood Vitalizer it brought about a cure in short order." Babies, as well as grown up folks, find health and happiness in Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. Not a drug-store medicine. Special agents supply it. Christian Endeavor.

By Burris A. Jenkins.

TOPIC FOR SEPTEMBER 24.

GIDEON'S BAND.

(Judges 7:1 23.)

The first thing noticeable about this band is its smallness. God chooses sometimes small things to carry out his ends. "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty or noble, ... but God hath chosen the foolish things, the weak things; yea, the things that are not, hath God chosen to bring to naught the things that are, that no flesh should glory in his presence." Jesus took a child and set him in the midst as a symbol of the entrance to his kingdom. It was the mustard seed, the small stone cut out without hands, these symbols of insignificance and smallness, that are used of God's methods.

So is it in our lives. Those things that we consider insignificant are possibly the very things of greatest importance and moment. A Christian's faith is tried by a very small thing. A Christian's character is tested by a very insignificant temptation. It is not the great temptations that shake us, but the temptations that we dispise. It is not the great sorrows or worries. It is not the great plans that test a general, but the attention to minute details. It is easy enough to conceive of large things; but it is hard to work at petty particulars. God works, however, in that way. He looks after the small things, whether it be snowflakes, flowe-petals, crystals or Gideon's band.

Christian Endeavor has been, in this particular, a Gideon's band. So small at first. Its pledge so commonplace, apparently; nothing great and striking about it; so simple its duties; yet what a victory has it gained! What a world of enthusiasm has it created! What lights have gleamed from its pitchers, broken vessels though some may have been.

The second lesson that is clearly taught by this story is the necessity of doing our best, even though we are trusting God all the while. Trust God and keep your powder dry. Trust God and work hard. Trust God and get bread enough by the sweat of your brow. If you are a missionary, trust God, and then plan your route well and guard against dangers. Paul did. If you are a soldier, trust God, and then outwit your enemy. Gideon did. If you are a merchant, trust God, and sit up o' nights, so you do not endanger health. If you are a Christian, trust God and then keep guard over yourself and make the most of yourself.

Gideon worked hard, siezed opportunities, employed strategies. So must we all do who would succeed in whatever we are doing, whether making a fortune or a Christian character. It is not the one who trusts and is quiescent, but the one who sees and embraces every chance, that is the successful Christian.

These two things only, then, of the many in this lesson, have been sought to be conveyed in this article: First, God's use of small things, and the faith that we ought to have then that he will make use of us. Second, the necessity of being, not passive instruments, but active agents in his hands.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPPLIES.

It will not be long before time to order Sunday-school literature for the fourth quarter. Schools that are using the supplies furnished by the Christian Publishing Co., of St. Louis, will be sent, on application, a full set of samples in which will be found up-to-date literature adapted to the needs of all grades of those who attend the Sunday-schools of to-day. Send for samples of our Sunday-school supplies and carefully compare them with those you are now using. We want you to see the kind we are offering. Address Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo.

The Christian Lesson Commentary

BY W. W. DOWLING.

THE CHRISTIAN LESSON COMMENTARY is a Book for Advanced Pupils and Teachers, containing a careful Analysis of each Lesson, with Introductory, Geographical, Explanatory, Illustrative, Applicatory and Practical Notes, with Suggestions for Teachers and Pupils on each lesson. The Text is printed in both the Common and Revised Versions, for the Purpose of comparison, in parallel columns. The volume contains New Colored Maps, made expressly for this work, and many special Engravings and Blackboard Designs. It may be safely claimed that the volume for 1899 is the most complete Lesson Commentary of the year and one that should be in the hands of Christian Teachers.

Single copy, cloth, prepaid, $1.00; per dozen, not prepaid, $9.00.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT?

For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

Literature.

As soon as children begin to read it is vitally important that the right kind of literature is put into their hands—literature that will increase their desire for reading and, at the same time, so wholesome as to furnish the foundation for future knowledge. Mrs. Laura Gerould Craig has met this demand to a very satisfactory degree in six small illustrated volumes entitled, "Little Presidents," in which she tells of the boyhood days of Lincoln, Garfield and Washington; "Little Kings," which tells of the boy Frederick the Great and the boy Louis XVII. of France; "Little Queens," which tells of Maria Theresa, Maria Antoinette, Catharine of Russia, Elizabeth of Russia, and Elizabeth of England; "Little Orators," which tells of the boy Demosthenes, the boy Cicero, the boy Daniel Webster and the boy Henry Clay; "Little Generals," which tells of the boy Alexander, the boy Napoleon, the boy U. S. Grant, the boys Sherman and Sheridan and the story of Hannibal, and "Little Statesmen," which tells of Robert Morris, Franklin, Hamilton and Jefferson. Each book covers between seventy-five and a hundred pages and is written in a very clever style, as would be interesting to children. They sell for fifty cents a volume and for the set, $2.50. The Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo., are the publishers, to whom all orders should be addressed. PETER AINSLIE.

BETWEEN HEATHENISM AND CHRISTIANITY. By Charles W. Super, Ph., LL.D. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago, New York and Toronto, publishers. Price, $1.25.

The two essays in this book on Seneca and Plutarch are an excellent study of the lives of these two great men, and in addition give the reader an excellent conception of the time in which they lived; the social, civil and industrial conditions of the Roman Empire at the birth of Christ and Christianity. Dr. Super says that no competent judge now holds that Seneca was ever a Christian, as so many have affirmed. In addition to these essays this book contains translations of Seneca's De Providentia and Plutarch's De Sera Numinis Vindicta, together with notes, additional extracts from these writers and two essays on Græco-Roman life in the first century after Christ.

SEPTEMBER MAGAZINES.

The Treasury of Religious Thought for September contains much profitable literature on leading religious topics and themes. These remarks apply especially to the article on the "Huss and the Hussites," or the reformation before Luther, the Northfield Sermons by Meyer, Smith and Morgan and to the story of the Free hold Church and the Tenement Church, from which it sprang. The department matter is excellent as is usual in this magazine.

One of the features of the Pall Mall Magazine is a most entertaining and instructive article by Mr. William Archer on his recent tour of this country and the cordiality of feeling for England generally expressed in his reception.

The Outlook for September is exceptionally good. The editorial touches upon the leading events of the world, the leading articles, with their fine half-tone illustrations, and the literary selections characteristic of this magazine, combine to make it unusually vigorous, instructive and interesting. The article on motor vehicles is a useful historical document on this new and rapidly developing industry.

The Saturday Evening Post is publishing a series of articles dealing with the municipal affairs of our great American cities. The article for Sept. 9th is on "New York Under Tammany Rule," by Frank Moss, counsel for the Mazet Investigating Committee.

We are pleased at the bright and cheerful appearance of a new visitor in our circle of magazine friends called "Everybody's Magazine," and if the present number is a sample of its future plane of action it is a most welcome visitor to our table. While it does not deal with ponderous things in a ponderous way, it is by no means a dull magazine. It contains fresh, interesting articles, is clean, pure and healthful in its literature, well illustrated and sufficiently varied as to be what it claims—everybody's magazine. That it will rank high in popularity we have no doubt.

The Cosmopolitan for September is one of the most attractive and interesting magazines of the month. The writers and their themes are peculiarly interesting to the popular magazine reader, while the illustrations, which this magzine is making a special feature, give additional interest by their animated appearance. Some of the articles are so interesting as to fascinate the reader.

The Religious Review of Reviews for September contains quite a number of full-page scenes about Nazareth and Jerusalem that cannot fail to attract the interest of the reader. The literature as usual is carefully selected from the ablest of writers and journals and is of the highest order. We have no hesitancy in noting the fine improvement in this journal and are confident that its popularity is being correspondingly increased.

The Preacher's Magazine for September is full of good thoughts and valuable subjects for study, and help to ministers. The sermons are fresh, vigorous treatments of living topics and cannot be read without refreshing the soul. They are invigorating. The other departments of the magazine are equally interesting and helpful in their line. Published by Wilbur B. Ketcham, New York City.

The North American Review for September opens with the late Colonel Ingersoll's famous reply to the Rev. Dr. Henry M. Field, which was published originally in the Review in November, 1887, and which is republished now in consideration of the keen and widespread interest awakened by Colonel Ingersoll's death in his views on religion and religious dogma. This paper contains what is in all probability the fullest, strongest and most eloquent statement of his position which the brilliant agnostic ever penned. The nature and extent of "Ingersoll's Influence" is discussed by Dr. Henry M. Field, Colonel Ingersoll's old friend and antagonist, who goes with some minuteness into an examination of the reasons for believing that the influence of Ingersoll will not survive him long.

A new magazine has appeared upon our table, at once attractive and inviting. The title, Everybody's Magazine, indicates a very broad and liberal platform, and yet the contents show a most careful selection of choice, clean, animating literature. The magazine is also well illustrated, there being 121 cuts in this number. The 16 half-tone pictures of the presidents of as many of the leading universities of the United States is a feature that not a few will appreciate. On the whole, Everybody's Magazine has the appearance of being popular from the start. It also sells at the popular price, ten cents, and will be found on every news dealer's counter in the land.

MURPHY.

Bro. Willian Murphy was born Oct. 7, 1823. He became a Christian in 1873, since which time hs has been an active servant of the Master. His influence still lives. For several years he was an elder in the congregation of Disciples at West Union, Ill. He leaves a devoted companion, two sons and a daughter to be consoled by the precious promises of the Word. He departed this life Aug. 30, in the 76th year of his life.

When in life our work is ended, and we are called to go Forward, through the chilly waters where our friends have passed before;
Let us falter not, my brother, but our hand in his we'll lay,
And with quick'ning step press forward, since our Master leads the way.

SHEPARD.

Jesse W. Shepard died suddenly of heart failure at his home near Palmyra, Mo., July 29, 1899. He was born near Gallipolis, O., Aug. 24, 1819, and became a faithful member of the Christian Church. Having no children, he raised five orphans, three of whom live to mourn a father's death. He sat reading his favorite paper, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, only an hour before his death. His funeral was preached at the Christian Church in Palmyra by Bro. Marshall, from James 1:27, this text being true of his life. We laid him to rest in Greenwood Cemetery, Palmyra, by the side of his wife, who preceded him only a year and a half ago. B. L. H.

SMITH.

Elizabeth Frances Smith, daughter of Edward and Lucy Moseley and wife of Dr. J. S. Smith, departed this life August 17, 1899, at the home of her son John, six miles north of Nevada, Mo. She was born in Kentucky, October 18, 1818 Her parents moved to Clark Co., Mo. In early girlhood she confessed her faith in Christ, at the age of 17 being immersed by Raccoon John Smith at a meeting held in her grandfather's house. She had been almost a constant sufferer for near 40 years, yet her faith was beautiful and hopes bright. O, she was our souls delight and our hearts ache.

America or Rome? Christ or the Pope?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. Peolep will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the Pope.

CHINESE PUZZLE.

WE ASK NOT ONE CENT of your Money. This Picture Puzzle represents a Celestial engaged at washing. About him are pictured faces of three customers. Find these faces, mark each, and return to us. To each patron who can interpret this puzzle, we will give a full size Fountain Pen and Filler.

A PRIZE FOR EVERY CORRECT ANSWER

IN making this marvellous offer, we have no desire to pose as benefactors. It is a business transaction to introduce CANDIED CRUSHED CARNATIONS, a delicious and fragrant breath perfume, and all who are awarded a Fountain Pen we require to distribute for us among friends 25 Sample Packages. In order that these may not be received by unappreciative people, we require you to collect 5 cents for each sample, and as this is to advertise, we send a PRIZE TICKET FREE with every package, which entitles each purchaser to a handsome piece of jewellery, which will not cost less than the Breath Perfume. After distributing the 25 Packages and Prize Tickets, you return our $1.25, thus fulfilling your agreement. We then give you for this service, free, and in addition to the Fountain Pen awarded you in the first place, a Solid Gold Shell Ring, beautifully engraved, and all who answer this within three days from when seen first, we send with ring, ALSO free, a Simulative Diamond, Ruby and Saphire Stick Pin. To many this unparalleled offer may seem impracticable. To such we say it is certainly worth investigating. The risk is nothing. We ask none of your money. We are liberal enough to offer inducements to stimulate our industries never attempted by any similar firm, and we simply ask you to interpret our Puzzle and Send your Address. We award you the Fountain Pen and send, postage paid, 25 Sample Packages of Breath Perfume. Distribute them as instructed, and we give you also the Solid Gold Shell Ring and Pin. Nothing could be more fair. Persons alive to their own interests should avail themselves of this great offer at once.

THE EXILED PROPHET

By J. G. ENCELL

For 60 Days We Offer This Book For $1.00, Postpaid

This book is of especial interest to Sunday-school teachers just now. Some of the Sunday-school lessons for the third quarter of 1899 are taken from the Book of Daniel, and the first seventy pages of "The Exiled Prophet" contain an Essay on the Book of Daniel, written by the well-known author and Bible scholar, Dr. D. R. Dungan. This essay will explain the Prophecy of Daniel, and should be read and studied by the Sunday-school teachers of to-day. Having read this they will be prepared to present the Sunday-school lessons in the present quarter to their classes in an acceptable manner. In addition to Dr. D. R. Dungan's explanation of Daniel the book is an able treatise on Revelation, the author of which has devoted many years of study and investigation to what many think is a "Sealed Book."

The book embraces 245 pages, neatly bound in cloth and profusely illustrated. Send orders to CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., ST. LOUIS.

Publishers' Notes.

SAMPLES SENT FREE.

Sunday-schools that are not using or that are not acquainted with the extensive series published by the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo., should write for samples at once. The fourth quarter is near at hand and Sunday-schools should begin preparations for their supplies for the third quarter. A sample set will be sent by mail on receipt of application. In this sample set will be found a copy of every kind published by the Christian Publishing Co., among which is literature adapted to all grades in Sunday-schools.

ALONG THE SAME LINE.

The recent work, "Queen Esther," by M. M. Davis, is just in the line with the Sunday-school lessons for the fourth quarter, 1889. It will be noticed that a portion of the lessons are taken from the Book of Esther, and the student of the Sunday-school lessons will be greatly assisted by a careful reading of "Queen Esther." The reader of this book will find that the story of this wonderful Bible character is told in such a manner as to present the subject in a new light to the ordinary reader. "Queen Esther" is a book of 132 pages, bound in neat cloth and the price is 75 cents, postage paid.

THE SCIENCE AND PEDAGOGY OF ETHICS.

This is the title of the latest literary work of H. W. Everest, who is the well-known author and scholar and whose former work, "The Divine Demonstration," has had such marked popularity. "The Science and Pedagogy of Ethics" is a book worthy the attention of thoughtful students, preachers and teachers. It is a work containing 312 pages, cloth-bound, and the price is $1.50, postage paid.

Hiram College Jubilee Endowment.

The great movement is still moving. Our agents are meeting with uniform success in gathering names for the great Hiram Jubilee Endowment Movement. Still there is room for many more. Our friends must rally all along the line if we are to reach the fifty thousand names. Dear Brother! Sister! Friend! have you not waited long enough? Will you not kindly send us your name now, promising to join in this great movement that is to culminate next June in the adequate endowment of a great institution that has done so much for the cause of Christian education among the Disciples? Notes from the Foreign Field.

Recently Osaka, the second largest city in Japan, has been entered. At the last meeting of the executive committee $1,500 was granted for a house in that city for R. L. Pruett and family. This building will cost $1,500.

M. B. Madden reports that he and Kawamura San and Suto San are holding meetings every night, and hope to keep them up for two weeks. Large and attentive audiences greet them. They have many callers every day. They are kept busy.

At Haranomachi, one of the new stations, he baptized two young men. There are seven Christians. All have been led to Christ by Mr. Madden.

E. S. Stevens, of Akita, Japan, decided to remain on the field another year. The force has been depleted by the death of Mr. Garst and by the return home of F. H. Marshall and family.

Garabed Kevorkian reports that the Turkish authorities have granted him full liberty to preach the gospel in Tocat. For a time police watched the house every day and took note of those who entered and those who left. This kept many away. The police have been removed, and the people are free to go and come at pleasure.

The house promised W. P. Bentley a year ago has been completed. He and his family have moved into it.

A chapel is in course of erection at Nankin.

C. B. Titus is putting up a home in Lu Cheo fu.

The contract has been let for a second home in Chu Cheo.

Dr. H. G. Welpton is spending a part of the summer in Nankin. He is relieving Dr. Macklin at the hospital. The Doctor is absent for a few weeks at Kuling.

Dr. Macklin reports the birth of a child in his home.

The missionaries in China write about Mrs. Rijnhart. Her husband was killed in Thibet. They buried their child in a cracker box on the borders of that country. She is coming home, and wishes to return to that field and win to Christ the people that slew her husband.

C. B. Titus reports some trouble in Lu Cheo fu. The Catholics are trying to prevent our missionaries from accomplishing much in that city.

T. J. Arnold reports three baptisms at Chu Cheo. He expects others to make the good confession before long.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

Wonders of the Sky

BY W. J. RUSSELL.

82 pages. Bound in beautiful illuminated cloth .....$ .50

This book leads the mind of the reader to contemplate the beauty, grandeur, sublimity and wonders of the heavens, directing them to a better understanding of the universe, and greater reverence for the Creator. The subject is treated, not from a scientific standpoint, but is presented in a popular style calculated to be easily understood by readers, both adults and the young.

The author of this book has looked reverently and thoughtfully into this olded volume of God's Revelation and states in a clear and eloquent way some of the facts anr truths which he has learned in this charming little book.—Extract from Introduction by J. H. Garrison.

One good feature about this book is that it is brief, yet its pages are crammed full of interesting information and inspiring thoughts.—PROF. G. P. COLER, Ann Arbor, Mich.

W. J. Russell is thoroughly conversant with astronomical literature, yet the magnitude of the study has been cleverly constructed by the author into simple, earnest language that cannot fail to entertain as well as instruct.—Daily Telegraph, Kalamazoo, Mich.

ORGANIC EVOLUTION CONSIDERED

By ALFRED FAIRHURST,

Professor of Natural Science in Kentucky University.

21 Chapters, 386 Pages, $1.50

This work is a very thorough and scholarly discussion of evolution by one who has had many years' experience as a teacher of science in Kentucky University at Lexington, Ky.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Introduction, Matter, Force, Method of Creation, Spontaneous Generation, Natural Selection, Paleontology, Embryology, Special Objections to the Theory of Evolution, Rudimentary Organs, Secondary Sexual Differences, Instinct, The Origin of Man, A Future Life, Design in Nature, Evil and Altruism in Nature, Agnosticism, Recapitulation, Genesis and Geology, Appendix.

Having been for many years a teacher of various branches of natural science, it has been my duty to discuss the subject of organic evolution. This volume contains some of the objections which I have from time to time presented againt the acceptance of that theory, together with several chapters on other subjects.—Author's Preface.

It seems to me that any candid person who reads the book must close it with the conviction that the hypothesis of the origin of organic species by the process of evolution is not only an unproved hypothesis, as its ablest advocates admit, but one that is essentially false. In addition to what the author says on the subject of evolution, he furnishes the unscientific reader with a large amount of information about matter in its various forms and about organized beings that is both interesting and valuable.—J. W. McGarvey, Lexington, Ky.

CURRENT EVENTS.

It is small wonder that the civilized world is indignant at the outcome of the trial of Captain Dreyfus, and that there is general talk of a boycott of the Paris Exposition, which will be held next year. The conviction of Dreyfus is a monstrous iniquity. That he is innocent is undoubtedly realized by most of the French people, by the judges who tried him, the generals who hounded him and by all the world. The members of the court-martial found "extenuating circumstances" in his favor—his innocence, we suppose, being one of these circumstances. France deserves retribution for her barbarous and inhuman treatment of Dreyfus, and she will receive it, without the rest of the world resorting to the boycott. The people of the United States do not believe in boycotts at home, and therefore should not countenance and encourage them abroad. France will suffer for her treatment of Dreyfus, and her punishment cannot be long delayed. Nations, no more than individuals, can practice injustice and wrong without paying the penalty. France has been weighed in the balance, and has been found wanting in the sense of justice. She is already reaping a portion of her punishment in the scorn and contempt of other lands. And yet it should be remembered that there are millions of Frenchmen who feel France's disgrace and humiliation as keenly as any foreigner. They blush for their country, but they should not be included in the execration that is being justly hurled upon those responsible for the second conviction of Dreyfus.

One of the worst features of "yellow" journalism, as we have it to-day, is the false interview. Public men are constantly being reported as having made startling and sensational statements, which later prove to have originated in the malevolent imagination of some correspondent. Admiral Dewey has several times, of late, been the victim of this sort of thing. While the Olympia was at Trieste he was reported as prophesying that our next war would be with Germany. Later on a second and similar story was published. While at Gibralter he was made to give his opinions concerning the Filipinos and their capacity for self-government. All the stories were false, of course. Recently General Lawton, now in Luzon, was another victim. Mendacions correspondents quoted him as severely criticizing General Otis and the conduct of affiairs in the Philippines. General Lawton has cabled a sweeping and emphatic denial of having made any statement of the kind. It sometimes happens that a man permits himself to be interviewed, speaks his mind freely, and then, on seeing his remarks in cold type, deems it wise and prudent to repudiate the interview, but such a course cannot be laid to Admiral Dewey or General Lawton. They have been the victims of a sensation-mongering journalism which, we fear, is waxing worse and worse.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, Sr., son of W. H. Vanderbilt, grandson of "Commodore" Vanderbilt, and head of the Vanderbilt family, died in New York suddenly September 12, death being caused by a paralytic stroke. He suffered a stroke in 1896, a second sometime afterward, the third proving fatal. Mr. Vanderbilt was born in 1843, his father being at the time a farmer. At the age of sixteen he left school and entered a bank. Afterward, at the solicitation of the "Commodore," he entered railroad work, beginning at $65 a month. At the time of his death he was in control of 16,000 miles of railroad, employing nearly 120,000 men. He devoted himself to legitimate business, laboring as assiduously as any man in his employ, and never engaged in speculation. He leaves an estate conservatively estimated at $100,000,000. The railroads in which he was principally interested were the New York Central, Michigan Central, Canada Southern, Lake Shore, Big Four and some twenty or thirty smaller lines. He was a trustee of Columbia University, General Theological Seminary and other similar institutions, and gave large sums of money to other educational institutions. The funeral took place last Friday from St. Bartholemew's Church, New York City.

It is now a certainty that within a very few years the automobile will be in general, every-day use throughout the country, as it is now in many cities. It is also certain that its introduction will further some social changes which were inaugurated by the introduction of the bicycle. The bicycle has done a great deal. It has enabled mechanics, clerks and laborers of all classes to dwell in the country and do their daily work in the city. It has promoted sociability between neighbors living miles apart. It has been a great economizer and saver of time. It has caused a general demand for good roads and clean streets. All these things will be further promoted, on a larger scale, by the automobile. It will divide by half the distance between villages and between the cities and their suburbs. It will facilitate the handling and shipping of farm products, as well as expedite the delivery of supplies within the larger cities. It will not improbably solve the problem of the rural delivery of mail, everywhere. At present the first cost of an automobile is such as to put it out of the reach of the average family, but this price is certain to fall before many years. Four years ago a first-class bicycle cost $100; a better machine can now be had for $50. Within ten years it is probable that $200 will secure a better automobile than can now be had for $750.

Surely, these be prosperous times for the United States. Our exports of manufactured goods has doubled since 1896. American manufactures are going into all the world—even into England, which once supplied the world. Our factories are running full time, and employing an increased number of operators at increased wages. We recently saw a statement of the increase made by the factories of one of our cities, and the statement showed that 50 per cent. more men were employed in 1899 than in 1896. Crops are bountiful, and the only complaint the farmers make is that they experience difficulty in securing men enough to handle farm products. The "army of the unemployed" has been mustered out and disbanded, save that part of it which prefers idleness to employment. Present conditions are good and prospects for the future are excellent. If the full tide of prosperity has not yet reached every section of the country, it is believed to be on the way there, and at least the former condition is greatly improved. When American civilization has touched and awakened the people of Cuba and Porto Rico and the Philippines, they will demand the products of American factories and farms, and so shall the hum and whir of busy industry continue to be heard in the land.

The "Trust Conference," called by the Civic Federation of Chicago, opened in that city September 13, with several hundred delegates present from all parts of the country. Less then half of those appointed as delegates were present, however, at the opening session. Some of the prominent men in attendance were Bourke Cockran, W. J. Bryan, Governor Atkinson (W. Va.), Ex-Governor Foster (O.), Prof. R. T. Ely and Albert Shaw. Wm. Wirt Howe, of Louisana, was chosen permanent chairman. The object of the conference seems to be the discussing of the present industrial condition of the country, particularly as it is affected by trusts and combinations, and methods whereby the power of these latter may be curbed. Addresses were made by Prof. J. W. Jenks, of Cornell University; Prof. Henry Carter Adams, of the University of Michigan; Wm. Fortune, of Indianapolis; E. C. Crowe, Attorney General of Missouri; Dr. Nimmo, of Washington, and a number of others. Perhaps the general tenor of the sentiments of the delegates was best stated by Prof. Adams, who said:

Industrial combinations, whatever their form, whatever their purpose, whatever their explanation, are matters of public concern. It is said we do not know enough of this new form of industrial organization to judge properly respecting it. If this should be true, and if on this account trusts are to be allowed a probationary existence, it is the plain duty of the government to hold them, meantime, to strict account. If trusts are what they claim—that is to say, the vanguards of a new industrial organization which holds within itself great industrial benefits—the sooner this fact is recognized by the public the better for all concerned. If, on the other hand, there is a danger in the extreme application of this form of organization, the government certainly has a right to possess itself of all facts necessary for a judicial opinion and for effective legislation. Where competition controls, the government may safely refrain from interference, but where competition is excluded, or where the conditions of its exercise are such as to give one competitor an advantage over another, nothing remains but public supervision.

The Transvaal war-clouds do not vanish. For weeks diplomatic overtures have been passing between the Transvaal and England in the hope of averting a clash of arms, but as yet no peaceful solution of their troubles has been reached. The last dispatch from Chamberlain containing England's answer to the Boers has practically been rejected, and during all this time preparations for war have been active on the part of both governments. England has not given her ultimatum yet, but she is improving the delay in strengthening her military power in South Africa, and it is not now believed that hostilities can be much longer averted. The attitude of President Kruger toward England seems to be that of defiance, and the final word from England is expected at any time according to the London press.

The latest word from the Transvaal is that the United States Consul in Cape Town has been called to Bloemfontein by the Orange Free State, presumably for the purpose of asking American intervention. While war preparations are being vigorously pushed by the Boers it is thought that all probabilities of a peaceful settlement of difficulties have not yet ceased. There seems to be some words in President Kruger's last reply to England that admit of hope.

On last Sunday afternoon Carterville, Ill., became the scene of a bloody riot, in which seven negroes were killed. The clash was between the white union and the colored nonunion miners of Carterville, and is but another chapter to the trouble that has existed there since the Louder riot, June 30th, in which one was killed. The militia which had been stationed there had only been recalled a week when they were again recalled by Governor Tanner on last Sunday afternoon to prevent further destruction of human life. Press accounts of the riot, as usual, are somewhat conflicting, but the conditions were such that it needed but a small provocation to precipitate what occurred. The trouble was not unlooked for. Mr. Brush is said to have persistenly refused to recognize the miners' union and to have prepared his mines against attacks. His mines are in the hands of the Federal Court, with C. H. Bosworth receiver, while several union miners are in jail awaiting trial for implication in murder in the former riot. And now another bloody riot has occurred to darken its long chapter of grievances, evils and crimes, the responsibility for all of which the courts must determine. In the meantime, great excitement prevails at Carterville, Ill., and it is feared at this writing that even the presence of soldiers will not prevent another battle.

As we go to press we learn that eighteen union miners, of Carterville, Ill., have been arrested for implication in the killing of the five negro miners on Sunday. Carterville is under military guard, and no further breaches of the peace have been committed. The coroner's jury is still investigating the shooting on Sunday.

The Senate of France was convened on last Monday as a high court of justice to try twenty-two politicians under arrest for alleged attempt to change the form of government in France. Among those alleged conspirators are MM. de Monicourt, Deroulede, Marcel-Habert Thiebaud, Baron de Vaux and Jules Guerin. No further action was taken at the session on Monday, outside of formalities, other than the reading of the indictment against the prisoners. It is expected that this will be another sensational trial for France.

PEACE AND EDIFICATION.

It would be difficult to mention two things more important or more greatly needed among the churches to-day than peace and edification. This we think is especially true among the churches of this Reformation, which have passed through a stormy period of history in which they have had to contend for their right to exist and are planning for the larger work of the kingdom of God. In a somewhat similar period in the history of the early church an inspired apostle, writing to the church located at the capital of the world, exhorted it to "follow after things which make for peace, and things whereby we may edify one another." This admonition seems to be as needful now as it was among the brethren in Rome, in the first century. We are told here to pursue two classes of things—"things which make for peace, and things whereby we may edify one another."

It is a very important matter for Christians to know just what things they ought to pursue. All around us men are chasing phantoms. Some are chasing phantoms of ambition, some of wealth and some of pleasure. We note with what eagerness they are chasing these delusive things. What shall we pursue, or follow after, who claim to be followers of Christ? None of these ephemeral trifles, but the things which make for peace and edification.

What kind of peace does the church need? Not a truce with the world, the flesh and the devil; not a compromise with iniquity; not a cessation of labor, but peace with God and peace among its own members. Peace was Christ's legacy to his disciples—a legacy which the world cannot give—a peace that comes from the consciousness of being at one with God. Scarcely less important for the welfare of the church is its internal peace, peace among all its members. This is an ideal, of course, very difficult to realize in this imperfect world, but it is one toward which we are continually to strive. We are to "follow after" the things that make for it. What are some of these things?

First among these we should name love. Nothing tends to peace more than love. It endures all things; it suffers long and is kind; it is not easily provoked; it covers a multitude of sins; it does not look for faults so much as for virtues. Patience, too, should be pursued, in order that we may "forbear one another in love." We get out of patience with each other's shortcomings. It takes time for Christian growth to correct many of our errors. Courtesy makes for peace. Let us chase that virture down and obtain it. Nothing does more to prevent friction between brethren who differ from each other than the oil of Christian courtesy. Let us not accuse each other of disloyalty to Christ or to the Word of God because we differ from each other in our theories and interpretations. Let us pursue fairness and perfect sincerity as things which make for peace. Let us not assume that the man who differs from us is an enemy to the Bible or has less reverence for the authority of Christ than we have. It is this assumption that is at the bottom of so much unprofitable controversy. Let us assume that we are all equally desirous to know the truth and to obey the truth and to promote the advancement of the kingdom of God among men. These are some of the things which make for peace, and should therefore be pursued until overtaken. To these should be added the avoiding of unprofitable questions which do gender strife rather than peace.

We are also to seek things "whereby we may edify one another." To edify is to build up. The thing to build up is Christian character. We are therefore to follow after those things by means of which we may build each other up in Christian character. This is the great end which God had in view in the establishment of the church. The church that fails in the building up of Christian character in its members fails to do the very work for which it was established. It may have a sound creed, an orthodox preacher, an efficient choir and carry on a great many lines of benevolent work; but if its members are not developing Christian character it is not fulfilling its mission.

What are some of the things which build up Christian character? Some of these are mentioned by the Apostle Peter, who exhorts Christians to use all diligence to add to their faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness and love. The things which build up these elements of character in men are the things which we should pursue. Preachers should pursue them in their sermons; editors should pursue them in their religious journals; business men should pursue them in their dealings with each other; parents should pursue them in the training of their children; all Christians should pursue and practice them in their various callings of life.

If the church should at once turn away from all unprofitable controversy and doubtful disputations, from the pursuit of popularity, respectability and social prestige, and should devote itself to the divine task of building up Christian character in its members, we should read once more a record like this: "So the church throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria had peace, being edified; and, walking in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Spirit, was multiplied."

The building up of Christian character implies at least two things—the increase of our knowledge in spiritual things, in religious truth, and the appropriation of this larger knowledge of truth in the practice of our daily living. There must be the love of truth for truth's sake, and the living of that truth for Christ's sake, in order to the formation of a Christlike character. As in the past, so in the future, it shall be our purpose to pursue in these columns the things that make for the peace and edification of the church, that "walking in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Spirit" it may be greatly "multiplied."

DANGERS AND USES OF BIBLICAL CRITICISM.

In an editorial in the Christian Standard of September 9, with nearly all of which we find ourself in hearty sympathy, occurs the following paragraph:

In a recent editorial we called attention to the fact that the higher criticism has been so intent upon studying the geography, chronology, linguistic peculiarities and other minor peculiarities of the Bible, that it has failed to see its great moral and philosophic features. The botanist may be so intent upon analyzing and classifying plants, upon determining their geographical and chronological place, as to lose the faculty of enjoying the bloom and fragrance of the rose, the majesty of the oak, or the flavor of the apple. He has gained a world of dry scientific information, but has lost the soul of it, if not his own soul. The higher critic has done something of this sort with the Bible, and in doing so is in danger of losing his own soul.

The danger pointed out in this paragraph is a real one. It applies to the critical investigation of all subjects. One may set his critical faculties to work on any fine piece of literature or sculpture or painting, and become so absorbed in the mere technique of the art as to lose sight of the beauty and power of the work which the artist has produced. As stated in the paragraph above, the botanist may be so wholly absorbed in the scientific phase of his work of analyzing and classifying plants and flowers as to fail in his power of appreciation of their beauty, fragrance and use. Nevertheless, we are all grateful, or ought to be, for the work of the botanists. They have helped us to a higher appreciation of the marvelous beauty, structure and uses of the infinite varieties of plants in the vegetable world. While the statement of the Standard is true, therefore, it is not the whole truth. No sensible person opposes botany because the botanist may occasionally fail to appreciate the beauty of flowers. Neither can we with any greater propriety oppose the critical study of the Bible because there is danger in such method of study of overlooking its higher meaning and uses. As for ourself, we love to study the Bible devotionally and ask for its spiritual meaning and its moral lessons; but we acknowledge ourself greatly indebted to those who have studied the geography, the chronology and the history of the different books of the Bible. Is the Bible so sacred a book that we must forbid Christian scholarship from entering this field of investigation with a view of helping us to a better understanding of its contents? Rather, does not its very sacredness and its supreme value render it the more important that the best scholarship in the world shall deal critically with those questions of geography, chronology, ethnology and archæology which throw any light upon its various books? We are sure our esteemed contemporary will agree with us that such is the case.

In an address, delivered nearly six years ago by the editor of this paper, speaking of the dangers attending the work of the historical and literary criticism of the Bible, he said:

But is there no danger ahead in all this criticism? Certainly there is. There is danger of identifying our theories of the Bible with faith in its revelations, and yielding the latter with the former. There is danger of cultivating the critical faculties at the expense of the spiritual, and thus missing the kernel of truth while giving attention to the outside husk. There is danger of magnifying the errors or imperfections of the Bible in order to offset an opposing extreme. There is danger that the work of construction shall not keep pace with that of destruction.

All these we believe to be real dangers. But, as we added then, there is far more danger in "closing our eyes and ears to all that is going on in the field of biblical criticism, or in blindly resisting it as an attack of infidelity." We see no reason for changing this view. We cannot, as intelligent believers, oppose biblical investigation, nor can we shut our eyes to the dangers which attend it. What, then, shall we do? What is the common ground which all true believers in Christ and in the authority of the Scriptures can occupy on this subject? It seems to us exceedingly desirable that we who are pleading the cause of a great religious reformation should have a clear understanding of this matter and should raise no false issues among ourselves.

Are we divided into two classes or wings, one class being opposed to the Bible and trying to find fault with it, and the other class seeking to uphold it against the attacks of the other? Certainly not. There is no such issue among us. We are all friends of the Bible and believe in its moral and spiritual supremacy and perfection. What, then, is the issue? Is it that one class admits the legitimacy of studying the chronology, geography and history of the Bible, in the light of the profoundest scholarship of the age, while another class is opposed to turning the light upon these subjects? Not that. There are very few among us so ignorant as to deny the right or duty of Christian scholarship to enter these fields of study and give us the results of their honest investigation. Where, then, we ask, is the difference? Is it in the fact that some of us recognize the wholly destructive character of a certain class of criticism, which is void of the spirit of faith and reverence, and whose theories are formed under the presupposition that the supernatural must be eliminated from the Bible, while others do not recognize this species of criticism or oppose its results? Not so. We know of none among us who do not recognize the existence of this rationalistic school of criticism and who do not oppose its spirit and methods. As we have stated elsewhere, "It is not the scientific investigation of the Bible that its friends have reason to fear, but an unscientific method of dealing with its facts and truths. The methods of biblical criticism and interpretation which in the past have done most violence to the inspired volume have been thoroughly unscientific."

Seeing that it is admitted on all hands among us, then, that biblical criticism has its dangers—the danger of losing the substance while concerned with the mere form; the danger of dwelling so exclusively on mere negations as to lose sight of the glorious affirmations; the danger of being more destructive than constructive, and that it has its uses in shedding light upon the difficult problems with which only a reverent scholarship can deal in vindicating the integrity of the various books of the Bible against the attacks of its rationalistic enemies, as it has done in the case of most of the books of the New Testament, what is the real difference among us touching the subject of biblical criticism? Candidly, now, has not the very phrase "higher criticism" become a sort of bugaboo with many good people who are ignorant of its meaning and spirit and aim? Have not many well-meaning people mistaken it for an attack on the Bible by its enemies, rather than an honest effort of its friends to better understand its history and literary character? We cannot doubt this, and we believe that when this element of misunderstanding is removed, all that remains in the way of difference among us will be about this: Some among us are more ready, by their reading and study, to accept certain conclusions of the evangelical or constructive school of critics than others. Some have more fears about the result of this criticism than others have. Some are inclined to travel a little faster than others can do. Some of us are a little more cautious and conservative than others, but none of us would knowingly accept a conclusion that we did not believe to be the result of the application of safe principles of biblical study, or that would undermine the authority of Jesus Christ or antagonize the faith of the gospel.

Let us all be candid enough and charitable enough to admit these facts, and there need be no occasion for alarm or alienation or strife among us concerning the subject of the literary and historical investigation of the Bible. Let us have the magnanimity and catholicity of spirit, which ought to be inspired by a plea like ours, and we shall act worthily in the face of these questions, which are to sift us as wheat and try us as by fire.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

An emphasis is placed on the Holy Spirit and his work in the New Testament that is universal in our preaching and teaching.

In The Sermon on the Mount the preacher did not speak of the Holy Spirit. Why? The disciples were not at that time prepared to receive his teaching on that subject.

In his farewell address to his disciples Jesus had much to say concerning the Holy Spirit. Here are some of the things that he said:

"The Comforter, even the Holy Spirit, WHOM the Father will send in my name, HE shall teach you all things, and bring to your remembrance all that I said unto you."

"When the Comforter is come, WHOM I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceeded from the Father, HE shall bear witness of me."

"It is expedient for you that I go ayay: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I go, I will send HIM unto you. And HE, when HE is come, will convict the world in respect of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment."

"I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit, when HE, the Spirit of truth, is come, HE shall guide you into all the truth: for HE shall not speak from HIMSELF; but what things soever HE shall hear, these shall HE speak: and HE shall declare unto you the things that are to come. HE shall glorify me; for HE shall take of mine and declare it unto you."

The disciples had made such progress in their knowledge of divine things that the Master could speak these words to them to their advantage. They had been in the school of the peerless Teacher for about three years. Under his tuition they had made progress; but even yet it was necessary to withhold some things from them. "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." The Holy Spirit subsequently revealed these things to the disciples of Jesus.

Note what the Christ says the Holy Spirit will do: He will teach; he will quicken the memory; he will testify, or bear witness to the Master; he will convict men of sin; he will guide believers into the truth; he will comfort the sorrowing, and HE is for this reason called THE COMFORTER.

In the quotations above, from the parting address of the Teacher, the pronouns referring to the Holy Spirit are printed in capital letters. This is done to bring out conspicuously the fact of the Holy Spirit's personality. This fact is made prominent in our New Testament literature. It ought to be made equally prominent in our teaching—both orally and in writing. The Holy Spirit is a person.

In the teaching of Jesus the Holy Spirit is represented as doing things. He is an intelligent, personal entity. He is sent; he comes; he goes; he speaks; he guides; he does the work of a faithful monitor; he prosecutes; he accuses; he convicts; he completes divine revelation. All these things, and more, are attributed to the Holy Spirit in the discourse of Jesus preserved in John, chapters fourteen, fifteen and sixteen.

Can we claim now that the Holy Spirit does these things in us, through us, for us, by us? Why not? In what part of the New Testament is it written that the Holy Spirit will cease to be sent, to come, to go, to speak, to guide, to comfort, to convict of sin, to testify? This study is limited to the words of the Master in the discourse indicated. Other portions of the Living Oracles by their teachings leave the impression on the mind of the devout student that the Holy Spirit is still active in his work for humanity.

The conditions of his coming and continued influence are clearly indicated in the discourse from which the previous quotations have been made. Read the following:

"If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments; and I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that HE may be with you forever, even the Spirit of truth: WHOM the world cannot receive; for it beholdeth HIM not, neither knoweth HIM; ye know HIM; for HE abideth with you, and shall be in you."

The words "abideth" and "forever," in this quotation, indicate the permanent presence of the Holy Spirit with those who "love" the Christ and "keep" his "commandments."

Again in the words above quoted, the pronouns are printed with capital letters for the purpose of calling especial attention to the fact Jesus uniformly speaks of the Holy Spirit as a person.

There is no occasion to worry about the philosophy of the work attributed by our blessed Lord to the Holy Spirit. "How can these things be?" is not now a pertinent inquiry. What Jesus says is true. Some of the things that he says about the Holy Spirit we have seen. Let us receive them as true. Let us appropriate this teaching and enjoy it. This is faith.

In another place our Lord teaches us to pray for the Holy Spirit. He says that the Father is more ready to give the Holy Spirit to those who ask for his presence than are earthly parents ready to give good things to their children.

Let us love. Let us obey. Let us pray for the Holy Spirit.

Hour of Prayer.

BORROWED OIL.

(Matt. 25:1-13; 13:20, 21.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, September 27th.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Each disciple of Christ should have grace in himself and should be in constant readiness for the coming of the Lord, or for every important event in his providence.

The parable of the Ten Virgins accentuates the fact that an important crisis awaited his disciples of that day, and that it was a matter of vital importance to them to be prepared for it. Admitting that it had a special meaning for the disciples of that time, it is no less true that the principle which it inculcates is equally applicable to-day. There is an important sense in which Christ comes to the disciples in every age—in the crisis of death, in new and enlarged experiences of the soul, in new developments of the kingdom of God, and in the great epochs of history. The world yet waits for the manifestation of Christ in glory, when his disciples shall also be manifested with Him.

In the parable cited above the five foolish virgins, "when they took their lamps, took no oil with them: but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps." Here is the everlasting distinction which the Bible evermore makes between the foolish and the wise. The former make no preparation for the future; they do not anticipate important crises and prepare for them; but the wise act with reference, not to the present only, but to the future. They are in readiness for an emergency. In this case the foolish virgins depended on borrowing. This is always a dangerous practice, and in matters of religion it is fatal. We cannot borrow the grace of God from our neighbors. Each disciple must have a supply of his own, obtained from the original source. Husbands cannot depend upon their wives, nor wives upon their husbands; children upon their parents, or parents upon their children. In this sense every one must bear his own burden. Salvation is a personal matter between the soul and its Lord.

It was at the midnight hour when the bridegroom returned, and the foolish virgins were sleeping and slumbering as if their readiness for his coming was complete. When startled by the cry, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh!" they then seem to have noticed, for the first time, the absence of the necessary oil. After failing to borrow, they attempted to secure it otherwise, but it was too late. The bridegroom came and they were shut out. Midnight was an unpropitious time to buy oil. The hour of death, or the moment of some great crisis, is not the best time for repentance and preparation for the emergency that is upon us. Alas, how many are slumbering and sleeping in sin, with no adequate preparation for death or for life, for the coming of the Lord or for other important events in His providence!

The oil must here stand for that inward grace or preparation of heart, for that vital religion, which brings the soul into communion with God and fits it for service here or in any other world. These "foolish virgins" can hardly represent the nonprofessors of religion, for they had gone through the form, at least, of being guests at the reception of the bridegroom. Their fatal defect was inadequate preparation. It is to be feared that there are many professing Christians in all the churches who, if their Lord should suddenly call upon them, either to depart this life and give an account of the deeds done in the body, or to make some great sacrifice in the interest of His kingdom, or to enter into some new and difficult service, or to meet some great temptation, would find themselves lacking in spiritual preparation for the great emergency.

In that other parable, referred to in the passages above, attention is called to a class of professed Christians represented by the "rocky places," who hear the Word and straightway with joy receive it, yet have no root in themselves, but endure for a while, and when tribulation or persecution arises because of the Word, straightway they stumble. Here, also, is inadequate preparation—a too superficial religion. This class of Christians can serve the Lord if it does not cost them any unpopularity or persecution or financial sacrifice. But they cannot stem the current of opposition; they cannot stand for the truth when the truth is unpopular. There is no depth to their religious convictions. They are not of the stuff of which reformers are made. If politicians, they barter their principles for votes. If preachers, they subordinate their consciences to their salaries. If editors or publishers, they will sacrifice the larger truth and the higher ideal of life on the altar of their subscription lists.

To all of us, then, comes the solemn admonition of the Master, "Be ye also ready." Shall we not look very closely into our hearts and into our lives, and see if we be ready for the Master's coming or presence? Let us not slumber or sleep in a condition of moral peril. If our hearts are not right with God, let us see that they are made right at once.

PRAYER.

O God, our Father: Thou art the searcher of all hearts. Search us, we pray Thee, and see if there be any evil way in us, and lead us in the way everlasting. If we are slumbering in a sense of false security, thinking that all is well, when our souls are unprepared for the presence of Christ and the judgment, do Thou startle us from our indifference and lead us to a more thorough preparation in heart and life. Increase our faith, intensify our love, deepen our religious convictions, cleanse us from all low and false ideals of life and all unworthy practices, so that we may be ready at the coming of the Lord, in any form in which that coming may take for us. For his name's sake. Amen!

Questions and Answers.

In Matt. 25:34 Jesus says, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." How can we inherit the kingdom if we are already in possession of it? Is not an heir one who has not yet come into possession of an inheritance?

J. H. Berkey.

Monroe, Wis.

We are in possession of a portion of the benefits of the kingdom, which has not yet come in the fullness of its triumphant power. The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, nor literal thrones and sceptres and official position, but "joy and peace and righteousness in the Holy Spirit." We enjoy a foretaste of these things here and now, but there is a fuller salvation, "ready to be revealed in the last day." We have the Holy Spirit given to us now as the earnest of the full inheritance which is reserved for us hereafter. (See Eph. 1:13, 14)

Last Sunday evening one of our esteemed brethren, discoursing from the text, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and forever," preached "Christ and him crucified" in a way to satisfy the strongest adherent to the doctrine of atonement. He, however, laid it down as a truism that while Christ changes not, all doctrine, of Old and New Testament alike—false doctrine of its own weight, and true doctrine because of its being at best but partial—passes away, nor continues in force. In the speaker's treatment of his subject the impression conveyed was that he conceded no exception to this rule, but that the doctrine (teaching) even of the Christ is subject to the law of mutation.

Query: Are we to understand that the doctrine, teaching, word of Christ, as we have it in the Bible, in any sense has passed or can pass away? Or will it ever remain and continue binding, "even unto the end of the world"?

W. P. Keeler.

Chicago, Sept. 6, 1899.

Truth changes only its form, not its substance. Christ said that not one jot or tittle of the law should pass away till all things be accomplished. This implies that they would pass away, in a sense, when they were accomplished. Concerning his own words Jesus said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." While this, perhaps, had special reference to his discourse on the Mount of Olives concerning the destruction of Jerusalem and the end of the age, we take it that it is true of his entire teaching. He is the one absolute Teacher whose doctrine has not been outgrown by the world's progress. Indeed, the world has not yet reached the moral altitude to fully understand his teaching. He was limited, however, in his teaching, while here on earth, by the condition of his disciples. He had many things to say to them which they were not able to bear. That he has said many of these things since through the Holy Spirit in the apostles and in the church, working in and through the best and purest minds of each successive age, cannot be doubted. He is yet speaking to the world and ever giving clearer and larger views of truth and duty. There is a mutation in doctrine which is true, that grows out of adaptation, in form and proportion, to existing needs. Christ's teaching, of course, was not exempt from this law of mutation; but he will never cease to be the one supreme and perfect Teacher of the world.

MACATAWA MUSINGS.

Gone are the guests from the hotel, and the center of social life is silent and sad. No lights gleam from its windows by night and no sound of laughter and music are heard now in its still chambers. No bonfires gleam along the lake front, and only here and there a light in a cottage shows that a few of the cottagers yet linger. Even the butterflies have deserted Butterfly Glen and gone into winter quarters or fled to some summer southern resort. Macatawa is soon to be a "Deserted Village." And yet the moonlight lies upon the lake to-night as beautifully as ever, and the stars shine as brightly as in the heyday of its busy season. There was a nipping frost the other night, and these woods will soon be donning their glorious autumnal robes. How majestically moves the machinery of nature! "Just as of old, the seasons come and go," and the same omnipotent Hand that led forth the Mazzaroth or signs of the zodiac in Job's day, and loosed the bands of Orion, still marshals the glittering hosts on the nightly plain and binds the cluster of the Pleiades.

And so these reflections on the transitoriness of this summer resort have led up to the thought of the immutability of God. How vastly men's thought of God has grown as they have come to better understand the immensity of His universe and the manifold works of His hand! Science unites with revelation in proclaiming the unchangeableness of God. No stronger affirmation of the deity of Jesus Christ could have been made than the declaration that he is "the same yesterday, to-day and forever!" That can be predicated only of God. Man is not "the same yesterday, to-day and forever." He is a creature of change His body is material and waxeth old and decayeth. His mind grows and develops, unless arrested by some abnormal cause, and expands with increasing years, ever seeing truth in a new and clearer light, abandoning old and outgrown views for larger and truer ones and longing for more light and more truth. The moral nature—man's crowning glory—is also subject to change, passing from blank innocency in childhood through the moral struggles incident to a conscience under discipline to a completly developed character, not innocent simply, which is a negative condition, but virtuous. This process of moral development implies constant change. In the midst of all these changes God alone remains unchanging and unchangeable. What a privilege for man to be linked in everlasting fellowship with the immutable God!

"Change and decay in all around I see;
O, Thou who changest not, abide with me!"

An hour ago the bosom of the lake was unruffled, and the Evening Star shone beneath the horizon line, reflected on its placid surface. Now the night wind moans through the branches of the trees, and the faithful linden that stands sentinel by my study window sways gracefully under the unseen force. The waves on the sandy beach join in the night chorus, and the lights on yonder outgoing steamer, whose passengers were congratulating themselves on a smooth voyage, indicate that the vessel is being "rocked in the cradle of the deep." We can no more tell now whence the wind cometh and whither it goeth than on that eventful night in the long ago when Jesus talked with the Jewish rabbi, and explained the mysteries of the kingdom of God. The night is cloudless, and there is no apparent reason for the raising of the wind. It is like some of the sudden and unexpected changes that come into men's lives and disturb the even tenor of their way. Here is a man who has known little of adversity. His life has been free from those trials and struggles which have so sorely tested others. Fortune has smiled upon him, and plenty sits smiling at his door. He has come to accept it all as a matter of course. But suddenly adversity overtakes him. Trials beset him. Temptations assail him. Friends desert him. His life-barque, hitherto sailing over a smooth sea, is now tempest-tossed, and the night wind of misfortune sings its melancholy dirge over his departed peace and prosperity. Blessed is the man who, in such an hour, finds God to be his refuge and the Almighty his hiding-place.

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the nearer billows roll,
While the tempest still is high!"

Every night is followed by its morning. Thank God for that! The shadows of the night have passed, and rosy-fingered Aurora is now painting the east with her saffron hues. The stillness of the night yet remains, but the glow of the dawn is upon the sky, and her glory upon all the landscape. This is to be a busy day. It is the day of preparation for our departure. How many things there are to look after! Will it not be so when we come to make our exit from the world? Let us not put off too many things till the last day. Good-bye, old Lake, for the present! I have a real affection for you. You have ministered to me unceasingly. In my moments of sadness you have assuaged my sorrow, and in times of gladness you have added to my happiness. And you, trees of the forest, you, too, have been my friends. I have found fellowship with you, and you have helped to lift up my thoughts to higher and holier themes. And ye winding walks and dim trails, through deep, shaded canyons, you, too, have helped to make my sojourn here more pleasant and helpful. Nor would we slight the singing birds, the chattering squirrels, nor the festive chipmunk, for God has taught me to love all living things. And thou, Edgewood-on-the-Lake, hast been a real sanctuary, and often in the heat of the conflict our thoughts will turn affectionately to thee. May the winter's storms and snows deal gently with thee, dear Northern home by the lakeside!

THE ORGANIZATION AND WORK OF LATER YEARS.—II.

BENJAMIN L. SMITH.

The last twenty-five years of our missionary work have been years of closer organization and expansion; within that period there have been born the following societies:

Christian Woman's Board of Missions, organized 1874. Presidents.—Mrs. Maria Jameson, Mrs. O. A. Burgess. Corresponding secretaries.—Mrs. C. N. Pearre, Sarah Wallace, Maria Jameson, Sarah Shortridge, Lois White. Amount raised.—$672,000.

Foreign Christian Missionary Society, organized 1875. Presidents.—Isaac Errett, Chas. Louis Loos. Corresponding secretaries.—Robert Moffett, W. T. Moore, W. B. Ebbert, A. McLean. Amount raised.—$1,140,000.

Board of Church Extension, organized 1888. President.—D. O. Smart. Corresponding secretaries.—F. M. Rains, G. W. Muckley. Amount raised.—$214,000.

Board of Negro Education and Evangelization, organized 1890 President.—E. L. Powell. Corresponding secretary. — C. C. Smith. Amount raised.—$69,000.

Board of Education, organized 1894. Presidents.—W. D. McClintock, J. H. Hardin. Corresponding secretaries.—A. A. Allen, Hiram Van Kirk.

Board of Ministerial Relief, organized 1895. President. — Howard Cale. Corresponding secretary.—A. M. Atkinson. Amount raised. —$20,000.

The story of these years is one full of encouragement, confirming the promise of the Word of God, "In due season ye shall reap if ye faint not," and showing that while "Paul may plant and Apollos may water," yet it is God that gives the increase.

The brief story of our organized work is given in the following pages:

THE LATER YEARS OF THOMAS MUNNELL'S ADMINISTRATION.

Thomas Munnell was corresponding secretary of the Kentucky State Board of Missions when he was called to the secretaryship of the American Christian Missionary Society.

He was born in Ohio county, W. Va., Feb. 8th, 1823. He graduated with honor from Bethany College in 1850. He served as professor of Ancient Languages at the Western Reserve Eclectic Institute (now Hiram College). He taught in other schools and served as pastor of the Eighth and Walnut Street Church, Cincinnati, and as corresponding secretary of Kentucky. He was the author of the Louisville Plan, and on its adoption by the convention at Louisville, Ky., in 1868, he was elected corresponding secretary of the A. C. M. S., to carry that plan into effect. All that any man could do to make that famous plan a success Thomas Munnell did, but it had to fail. The income of the society in those years was as follows:

1866	$11,902.86
1867	10,910 74
1868	7,569 00*
1869	7,525.50
1870	4,529.91
1871	4,308.15
1872	2,801.04
1873	4,158.89
1874	5,172 28
1875	4,671.10
1876	5,961.81
1877	3,327.03

*The year of the adoption of the Louisville Plan.

In 1874 the Silver Jubilee Convention of the A. C. M. S. was held at Cincinnati; 208 delegates were enrolled. R. M. Bishop was president. The corresponding secretary, Thomas Munnell, reported an income of $4,172.28 for the year. President W. K. Pendleton delivered the historical address, reviewing the work of the quarter century. This admirable address was published in the minutes of the convention, Green's History of Missions.

The country was in the midst of the financial panic beginning in 1873. The General Board presented a report, embracing the work done by the various state boards of missions, and some work done by the General Board among the freedmen of the South. The failure of the Louisville Plan—which was Newton's law of gravitation applied to missions—one-half of all missionary money raised to be used in the district, and the remaining half to be sent to the state boards and again divided, one-half of the one-half to be sent to the General Board. This plan was weighted with the proviso: "But this recommendation is not to be considered as precluding a different disposition of funds when the church contributing so decided." The churches generally "so decided," and the district and state boards "so decided," and the General Board got none. In 1874 the state boards of Ohio, Indiana and Missouri were the only ones which remitted to the National Treasury, and the Louisville Plan fell of its own weight.

The work of Thomas Munnell was identified with the Louisville Plan—he was its author and its enthusiastic advocate. It was a labored effort to unify the brotherhood in the support of a plan for mission work, and Thomas Munnell was faithful in his day; with tireless energy, with faith unfeigned and with a zeal that was admirable he toiled to make the Louisville Plan a success. One great trouble was that they depended upon the plan to do the work, but perpetual motion is a dream not yet realized in spiritual dynamics. Yet he was brave. In 1875, with an income of only $5,961.81 for general home missions, he wrote: "The financial condition of the country has checked the flow of benevolence for missions in all denominations and has certainly reduced our resources one-half, yet we see no cause for discouragement." In 1877 he received only $3,327.03 in the general treasury. He laid the burden upon the preachers: "Our ministry as a class do not feel their personal responsibility in raising money for missionary work. It may seem very strange and anomalous if some of our best ministers who mourn over our deficiencies are here to-day without having done anything during the past year for missions, and will go home from this convention and repeat their past inefficiency and then attend the next convention and 'regret our small results.'"

Thomas Munnell brought order out of chaos; he demonstrated the need of organization in our co-operative mission work and showed the failure of all plans that look well on paper and begin with—"If everybody would."

It was during the administration of Thomas Munnell that the Christian Woman's Board of Missions was organized, October, 1874, and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, in October, 1875.

His farewell report is well worth quoting: "Finally, we would suggest a bare possibiliiy as to the cause of not doing more missionary work. Perhaps we are not worthy to do missionary work; perhaps we are not, as ministers, fully consecrated to God; we may be depending too much on ourselves; we are not strong, because we are not weak. If we have not been really crucified with Christ it is impossible to reach the ground he stands on. Let us go forth, therefore, unto him without the camp. Let us make our missionary work a great success in the name of him who 'counted us worthy, putting us into the ministry.' Unless there is some chance in the future to do the proper work of an evangelist in helping to get things into better order, I can spend my life more profitably as pastor of some congregation, and immeasurably more to the satisfaction of my half-forsaken family. If the convention should release me it would relieve me of a heavy load which I have carried without faltering or complaint. I commend these interests to the care of God in the hope that what little I have done in my present position will be found unto praise and honor at the appearing of Jesus Christ."

The convention elected F. M. Green to succeed Thomas Munnell, and Munnell retired to the Kentucky Board of Missions, to the pastorate and to teaching; serving God faithfully, growing old gracefully and, on account of his intimate relations with our co-operative work, writing a large name for himself in our history. He entered into rest Sept. 10, 1898.

F. M. GREEN'S ADMINISTRATION.

Francis M. Green was corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society from January 1, 1878, until October, 1882. He was born in Summit county, Ohio, Sept. 28, 1836. His father, Philander Green, was one of the pioneer preachers of the Western Reserve. F. M. Green confessed his faith in Christ when he was 16 years old, and was baptized by Dr. W. A. Belding. He entered Western Reserve Eclectic Institute (Hiram College) in 1856, and was taught by James A. Garfield. He gave himself to the ministry of the Word, was interested especially in Sunday-school work and became editor of the Sunday-school Standard and the Teacher's Mentor, and later corresponding editor of the Christian Standard.

The administration of F. M. Green as corresponding secretary began October, 1877. It was the lowest ebb of the affairs of the missionary society. The income for the first year after he became secretary was $1,945.69. A part of this was for the sale of the hymn book.

It was a day of small things in our mission work. The society had a desk in the office of the Standard Publishing Co. Green served as editor of the Standard Company's Sunday-school publications, as corresponding editor of the Christian Standard and as corresponding secretary of the missionary society. His annual report to the National Convention of 1882, at Lexington, Ky., was written after he reached Lexington.

His first report embraced the recommendation that "special attention be given this great 'home field,' whose harvest is so richly ripe and whose calls are so imperative." He also said, "This year is to prove us; it will be decisive of our character and our destiny; our pride has been often wounded by the smallness of the results which have followed our efforts; we have boasted of our strength and numbers, our wealth and power, but it is possible we have forgotten the great lesson of God's Word, 'Except that a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone.'"

Bro. Green writes of his work as corresponding secretary: "I finally convinced the brethren that an angel of paradise could not make the Louisville Plan a success and succeeded in getting the constitution changed to provide for a more businesslike method of conducting our work."

During his administration the churches at Denver, Col., Topeka, Kas., and Chattanooga, Tenn., were organized and assisted toward self-support. Work was also done among the freedmen of the South. These years witnessed the practical closing of the battle for the liberty of co-operation in mission work.

During his incumbency of the secretaryship F. M. Green published four books, viz., "Green's Sunday-school Manual," "Green's Minister's Manual," "History of Christian Missions" and "Life of James A. Garfield." He writes: "I did my best for the society while I was secretary, and whether I receive benedictions or otherwise I am tranquil."

Since his resignation in 1882 he has been living on his farm, has represented his district in the Ohio State Senate, has served as pastor of the churches at Wilmington and Stow, Ohio, and recently has published his latest book, "The Life and Writings of John F. Rowe."

THE ADMINISTRATION OF ROBERT MOFFETT.

Robert Moffett was born in LaPorte county, Ind., Nov. 9, 1835. Six months later his parents moved to Carroll county, Ill., locating fourteen miles from the Mississippi River. Here he received a common-school education. His father, Garner Moffett, was a pioneer preacher, supporting his family from the farm. He was enthusiastic for the ancient gospel.

He believed in education, and when the Western Reserve Eclectic Institute (Hiram College) was opened he sent three of his children. Here Robert Moffett began his collegiate course that ended with graduation at Bethany in the class of 1859.

Soon after graduation he married Miss Lucy A. Green, only daughter of A. B. Green, one of the ablest preachers of the West Reserve, Ohio. Three of their nine children are still living.

Soon after his marriage he served as county evangelist of Carroll and Ogle counties in Illinois, then pastor of the churches at Wooster and Mt. Vernon, O.; and in 1869 he became corresponding secretary of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society, serving continuously for fifteen years, carrying, during the last eighteen months, the double work of corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society. The General Board was served by him as corresponding secretary from Oct. 1, 1882, until Jan. 1, 1893, then one year as evangelist of the Ontario co-operation, then again corresponding secretary of the Ohio society, continuing until July 1, 1899.

In 1870 he met in debate Rev. Mr. Lafferty, of the Protestant Episcopal Church at Canton, O., on the "Subject and Action of Baptism." In 1875 he moved to 715 Logan Ave. Here for nearly a quarter century in a small room have been worked out the plans in the interest of our missions, and from that little room has gone out the most earnest appeals for their advancement.

Robert Moffett owns a comfortable, modest home in Cleveland. He pays taxes on some other unremunerative property. So meager has been his salary and so many the calls of the brotherhood upon him to help in all benevolent work in all parts of the country that he has nothing to show in this world's goods as coming from remuneration for his services. Like many another preacher, he has spent himself for others.

Robert Moffett was a great secretary. As a preacher he was the peer of the strong men whom we call the fathers. There does not live among us to-day a man who can preach stronger or better sermons on the distinctive teaching of the Disciples of Christ than Robert Moffett.

His administration as corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society began Oct. 1, 1882. The previous year there had been raised about $4,000 cash. There was a balance in the treasury of $284.81 and indebtedness amounting to $400. The members of the Lexington convention (1882) had pledged about $1,400 a year for five years; the other source of income was dividends from the various state treasuries. The Lexington convention had authorized a call for a general collection from the churches in December, 1882. Six churches responded, three of them as a result of a personal visit from the secretary. The people were indifferent to the claims of general Home Missions; the secretary felt that he was asked to "make brick without straw." The ten years of Robert Moffett's secretaryship were years of growth. The receipts were $4,161.73 in 1883, and $21,591.38 in 1893, the total $142,385.05.

The offerings increased in other directions from $1,882.53 in 1883 to $17,298.53 in 1893. New missions were established annually. Special funds were raised for buildings in Washington, D. C., Boston, Chattanooga, Tenn., and Pomona, Cal.

A large part of Moffett's service was in canvassing the stronger churches in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Iowa and Missouri; visiting churches whose pastors were molders of public opinion, and so effective were his visits that the treasury has seldom failed to receive offerings from that day to this.

During his term the Board of Church Extension was organized, first as a standing committee (1883), then as a board (1888).

In 1890 "Children's Day for Home Missions" was inaugurated, yielding $350 in 1889 and $2,213 in 1892. It was dropped in 1894 and revived in 1898.

In 1890 the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization was organized, and the Southern Christian Institute was enlarged and put under the care of this board during Moffett's administration.

The board planted or helped many of what are now prosperous churches during the decade that Moffett superintended the work; 196 churches were organized and many others were helped in the time of weakness to self-support.

The sorest trial was the constantly empty treasury. Hundreds of appeals had to go unanswered and there were those at every annual convention who demanded that the board "make more brick without straw." The board was economical, and over his work the church is already pronouncing the plaudit: "Well done, good and faithful servant."

JOHN H. HARDIN'S ADMINISTRATION.

John Huffman Hardin was born Nov. 21, 1848, in Trimble county, Ky. Like most good preachers he was the child of parents poor in this world's goods but rich in Christian character. He had but slight school advantages in youth, but in after years attended Kentucky University, and later the Missouri State University. He has been a constant reader and has attained a very respectable scholarship.

He was baptized in 1864 and began to preach before he was twenty years old. He was ordained in 1871, served as pastor of the churches at Columbia, Ky., Madison, Ind. (where he baptized the writer), at Mexico, Mo., and at Hannibal, Mo. He served six years as state Sunday-school evangelist of Missouri and then as corresponding secretary of the Missouri State Board of Missions.

In 1892 he was elected associate secretary of the General Society, and in 1893 was promoted to be corresponding secretary.

His administration fell upon the years of the panic, 1893, 94 and 95, and yet he held heroically on with his work and brought it through. He, as associate secretary, took especial charge of the offering of the Sunday-schools, and secured, in 1893, the largest offering that ever came to the General Board form that source.

He planned the Divinity House at Chicago University and secured its inauguration.

He recommended the unification of all our home missionary work, which is being done as rapidly as possible, following the lines marked by the Springfield convention.

J. H. Hardin revived the work of city evangelization, the conference on city evangelization, located E. W. Darst in Chicago, and gave an impetus to the whole scheme of city evangelization.

In 1895 J. H. Hardin was called to the presidency of Eureka College and resigned the secretaryship of the society. Here he has done some of the best work of his life.

THE PRESENT ADMINISTRATION.

The history of the last three years, covering the administration of the present secretary, Benj. L. Smith, is too new to be written. Its heart-cry is, "Home Missions to the Front," and its record will be the story of the effort to redeem our general home missionary work from its position of neglect and place it at the forefront of all the aggressive work of the Church of Christ.

Benjamine L. Smith was elected corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society at the Dallas convention October, 1895. He assumed charge of the work December 1, 1895, having W. H. Cannon as secretary for one month.

At the convention held at Springfield, Ill., in October, 1896, the society was reported out of debt, the first time in years.

The Springfield convention recommended the unification of all Home Mission work by making all state and district societies auxiliary to the American Christian Missionary Society and asking all these societies to report their work to the National Society that it might be incorporated in the general report. This unification is gradually taking place.

The Indianapolis convention unified the work still more by uniting the collection for the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization with that for general Home Missions. Both secretaries were to represent both works.

In carrying out this plan, C. C. Smith was elected associate secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society and does splendid service in bringing Home Missions to the front.

The society stands to-day in the presence of the greatest opportunities that have come to her. Possessing the grandest plea under heaven before men—the plea for the union of all God's people on the Word of God alone as the only rule of faith and practice—like Paul of old, she has visions of her high calling in Christ Jesus, Macedonian cries, "Come and help us," and comforting assurances, "Be not afraid, but speak and hold not thy peace, for I am with thee and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee, for I have much people in this land," and she will not be disobedient to the heavenly visions.

To-day the American Christian Missionary Society has a great vision of her high calling. If we preach the gospel far and wide over America this society must be our messenger angel. By her help, her missionaries, must this great work be done.

The Oriental world is immobile; our country is just forming. A forceful, spiritual, scriptural Christianity can direct our national life. We are placed in the midst of this land as leaven in the meal. Eight hundred thousand of our million members are in seven contigous states in the Mississippi Valley. The Home Society has a vision of the remaining three-fourths of the great country needing help to plant the simple gospel of the New Testament.

There is another vision of the foreign population in this land, as yet practically untouched by the gospel—fifteen millions. God said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," and then, wearying with our halting, he has brought all the world to us, and we have the vision of Foreign Missions at home. "Whom shall I send?" "Send me," is the pleading answer of the Home Missionary Society.

There is another vision: Our cities need Christ's full, true, simple gospel. Denominationalism has not succeeded; what can the strong arm of the Lion of Judah do? The only statesman that can solve the problem of our modern cities is Jesus the Christ.

We need cities as bases of supply, as sources of power, to plan large things and do large things for the advancement of the gospel. We should hold before our eyes the heavenly vision of our cities being won to Christ and then be obedient to the heavenly vision.

Here is the largest, the most costly but the most productive field for Home Missions. The city makes the town, the town makes the village, the village makes the country. The city is headquarters, the state is the battlefield. If the Lord keeps not the city, the land is doomed. The society sees the city and weeps over their sin and sorrow and pleads to be sent by the churches to their rescue.

The Home Society has a vision of our negro population wading in the deep waters of our civilization, thrust in, unprepared. Wading beyond their depth, yet unable to swim, they must have help or sink. The society has helped in the past, it covets the means of helping far more.

There is the vision, the mountain whites of Kentucky and Tennessee. These people are poor and without much incentive to self-development; without railroads, without markets, without ambition; frequently without almost everything save an all-pervading want; yet God raised from them the typical American of the century, Abraham Lincoln.

Thousands of these young people are sitting on fences gazing blankly into a hazy future because they have nothing practical to do, because they do not know how to do anything practical. Fifty years will not be enough to lift these to the standard of intelligent Christian citizenship. The Home Society has a vision of their needs and pleads for power to help them.

Then follows the vision of the Mormons, the darkest blot on the land to-day; covenant breaking, disobeying the law in public, reaching out to grasp the political control of eight states of the Union, and blighting the lives of thousands. Nothing but the power of the simple gospel can break it to pieces. The society has a vision of the day when twenty to forty missionaries will be at work preaching the simple gospel all over that intermountain land and win victories for Christ.

Then comes the vision of greater America. To the north lies Canada, Manitoba, British America and Alaska; to the east the Maritime Provinces and our own New England, pleading with tears in their eyes to send them more preachers of the simple New Testament faith; to the south, Porto Rico, a gem of the sea, waiting to be transformed into a diadem for his crown; Cuba, quivering in the death-throes of superstition; Mexico wanting, yet not understanding her own wants—all this comes into the vision of the American Christian Missionary Society. And then far away she sees her fair daughter, the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, going into the utmost parts of the earth to tell the glad story, and her eyes see the glory of the coming Lord. To go, like the Harbinger of old, to proclaim his advent and to prepare a way for the coming of his feet, and in country and hamlet, mountain and city, in the cold North and the sunny South, to fit the hearts of his people for the indwelling of God through his Holy Spirit.

May this Jubilee Year give a mighty impetus to this great work. The society has, through its missionaries, organized 2,185 churches on the New Testament pattern; its missionaries have baptized 87,547 believers; its work has been the great unifying power among our people; its influence has been for good, and only for good, during all the years of its history.

WAS JOSEPH SMITH A POLYGAMIST?

D. H. BAYS.

(CONCLUDED.)

But to return to the question as to whether Mrs. Jacobs was "sealed" to Joseph Smith, as charged. Commenting upon the question from "Representative Women of Deseret," Pres. Smith in his Herald article says:

Neither the date of her marriage to Mr. Jacobs nor that of her sealing to Joseph Smith is given in this extract; but fortunately we have the required data at hand. In the record of marriages in Hancock County, Illinois, Book A, page 40, is the record of the marriage of Henry B. Jacobs and Zina D. Huntington, March 7, 1841, by John C. Bennett, mayor of Nauvoo. A careful search of the records discloses no divorce of these parties.

Please bear in mind the fact that the Hancock County records contain no account of anything except the marriage of the parties in question. No divorce is mentioned, and hence none was ever obtained. All other facts are derived from other sources, namely, Mormon Church records. Continuing, Pres. Smith says:

In the "Historical Record," published by Andrew Jenson, of the Utah Church, volume 6, page 233, is found the following: "Zina D. Huntington, afterwards the wife of Pres. Brigham Young, sealed to the prophet Oct. 27, 1841; Dimick B. Huntington officiating."

This record shows that Mrs. Zina D. Huntington Jacobs was married, or rather "sealed," to the prophet Oct. 27, 1841. Commenting on this passage, Pres. Smith remarks:

According to these statements, taken from official records, and the publications of the Utah people themselves, it was just seven months and twenty days after her marriage to Jacobs that she was sealed to Joseph Smith. During this seven months and twenty days she bore two sons to Jacobs, separated from him, obtained a divorce (of which there is no record), received instructions from Joseph Smith on the "principle of marriage for eternity," and was sealed to him. To suggest that further refutation is necessary would be an insult to the intelligence of the reader. (Ibid. page 491.)

Pres. Smith's criticism is rather amusing than logical, and yet I doubt if there is either minister or layman who is not willing to accept the foregoing as a clear, honest statement of the case and a complete refutation of the claim that the woman in question was sealed to Joseph Smith as stated. What the writer says for himself will apply to every member of his church, namely, that:

We prefer to believe that he [Joseph Smith] remained faithful and pursued the path of honor and virtue unto the end of his life.

And for this very reason it is extremely difficult to get one of them to view this question in the light of all the facts. They are ever ready to accept from Brighamite sources anything that in the least tends to support their views of the character of Joseph Smith as a prophet of God, but they dogmatically reject anything and everything coming from that source that in any way tends to prove him a polygamist.

Were we to admit Pres. Smith's premise, we might be induced to accept his conclusions, but as his premise is assumed we must reject his conclusion, that this whole story is too absurd for a moment's consideration. His quotation from the Hancock County record shows that Henry B. Jacobs and Zina D. Huntington were married March 7, 1841, by John C. Bennett, mayor of Nauvoo, one of the most noted libertines in Mormon history. This may be set down as fact No. 1. The Mormon record shows that this same Zina D. Huntington, now Mrs. Jacobs, was "sealed" to Joseph Smith, Oct. 27, 1841, "just seven months and twenty days" after her marriage to Jacobs. This may be regarded as fact No. 2. These are the only facts (save that she had two sons by one or both of these marriages) that appear upon the face of the records quoted. And yet Pres. Smith assumes:

1. That Mrs. Jacobs separated from her husband before she was "sealed" to the prophet.

2. That the two sons were born to Jacobs during the intervening "seven months and twenty days," which is simply ridiculous and impossible, as well as contrary to the records in the case.

3. That Joseph Smith did not teach Mrs. Jacobs the "principle of marriage for eternity" till after she separated from her husband; and

4. That she was not "sealed" to Joseph Smith till after she was "divorced" which, in the face of the records to the contrary, he insists actually took place.

You will doubtless have observed that Pres. Smith does not offer a single fact in rebuttal of this plain, straightforward statement, that Mrs. Jacobs was Joseph's spiritual wife. He simply depends upon his ability to raise a doubt in the mind of the reader as to the correctness and validity of the statements. But suppose we examine the testimony of these witnesses from a different standpoint.

That the marriage of Miss Zina D. Huntington and Henry B. Jacobs occurred at the time and place mentioned is not in controversy. But the marriage of Mrs. Jacobs to Joseph Smith "for time and all eternity," as set forth in the church records, "just seven months and twenty days after her marriage to Jacobs," is denied by Pres. Smith. That clandestine and illegal plural marriages took place at Nauvoo about this time is susceptible of the clearest proof.

With these facts before us, let us examine this case as it would naturally occur under existing conditions.

1. Jacobs and Miss Huntington were married March 7, 1841. 2. They did not live happily together, and she goes to the prophet with her troubles. 3. He sympathizes with the handsome young wife, and consoles her with the thought that she would not have to live with an uncongenial companion in the next world, and teaches her the "principle of marriage for eternity." 4. She accepts it as a revelation from God, and is sealed to the prophet "for time and all eternity," "just seven months and twenty days after her marriage to Jacobs." Of all this, to be sure, the young husband was kept in a state of blissful ignorance. 5. But finally his wife's affections are alienated; he is supplanted by the prophet, in whom he had implicit confidence. 6. Things go from bad to worse for two or three years, during which time two sons are born. 7. The crisis finally came and eternal separation was the result, and a home lay in ruins at the feet of lust.

But whose boys are these? Ah! cruel thought; but, like Banquo's ghost, it will not down, and the taunting answer comes back from the hollow past, and the echoing voice in softest accents whispers only the awful word, "whose?"

Can any sane man, unblinded by prejudice, doubt for one moment that Joseph Smith was a guilty wretch? Every fact as recited from the records, as well as all the circumstances surrounding the case, go to prove most conclusively that this poor, deluded woman told the truth, and that from Oct. 27, 1841 ("just seven months and twenty days after her marriage to Jacobs"), till the day of his death (June 27, 1844), Mrs. Zina D. Huntington-Jacobs-Young was the polygamous wife of "my servant, Joseph Smith, Jr."

In my next I will examine Pres. Smith's criticism in the case of Mrs. Emily D. Partridge Young, another of the prophet's alleged spiritual wives.

Battle Creek, Mich.

Ministerial Association.

The thirty-sixth annual meeting of the Ministerial Association of the Disciples of Christ in Eastern Ohio was held this year in Alliance, September 5-7, where it was organized 35 years ago, June 17, 1863. Of the preachers who were present at its organization no complete record was kept, but the following persons were on the first program: John F. Rowe, on "Church Order;" Sterling McBride, on "Presentation of the Evidences;" Abishai B. Way, on "The Atonement;" Harvey W. Everest, on "Prayer," and Robert Moffett on "Christ's Temptation." Of these only Everest and Moffett are living.

Since its organization perhaps four hundred persons have been enrolled in its membership. It has been a strong organization from its beginning. It has always been careful in regard to its membership, and it has rarely ever been imposed on. At present it is well-nigh impossible for a person of bad or questionable character, otherwise eligible, to become a member. Some of the most gifted preachers among the Disciples have been and are on its roster, and unless they are dropped for immoral conduct, or by their own voluntary retirement, their names will be carried on the roll of its membership as long as they live. The constitution now provides that no membership shall be considered lapsed except for immoral conduct, and those shall be considered active members who pay the annual dues of fifty cents.

The program this year was of the very best, as will be seen by the list of topics and speakers herewith given: President's address, F. M. Green, Kent, O.; "Who are the Higher Critics, and What their Point of View?" Prof. H. McDiarmid, Hiram, O.; Address, "Every Wind of Doctrine," J. M. VanHorn, Warren, O.; "The Place of the Disciples among the Religious Forces of To-day," R. Moffett, Cleveland, O.; "How to Reach Men Who do not Attend Church," R. C. Sargent, Salem, O.; "The Testimony of the Monuments to the Truth of Bible History," Prof. B. S. Dean, Hiram, O.; "College Endowment the Overshadowing Question," J. S. Ross; "What Steps are Possible, among Churches Congregationally Organized, to Maintain the Purity and Dignity of the Pulpit," W. L. Hayden, Edinburg, Pa.; "Some Politics that may be Talked of in the Pulpit," W. J. Lhamon, Allegheny City, Pa., and Prof. E. B. Wakefield, Hiram, O.; "The Jubilee Year," Benjamin L. Smith, Cincinnati, O.; "The New Testament that Criticism has Left Us," Prof. G. A. Peckham, Hiram, O.; "Holy Men of Old Spake as They were Moved by the Holy Spirit," C. A. Freer, Columbus, O.; "First Principles," W. J. Cadman, Cleveland, O.

Time was taken for the discussion of these questions, and dullness did not prevail for a moment. The Association authorized the publication of several of the addresses and other matters of general interest.

There were 45 preachers in attendance at Alliance, the most of them coming at the beginning and remaining to the close. The following preachers were admitted to membership: Percy H. Wilson, P. H. Welshimer, Guy Hoover, L. W. Spayd, J. N. Scholes, C. A. Freer, George Fowler, G. F. Crites, L. G. Batman, Minor Lee Bates, E. S. Meredith, W. H. Boden and C. A. Hill. At the time of their formal reception into the Association by the president, F. M. Green, Bro. L. Cooley, one of its oldest living members, after a brief address, presented each of them with a copy of the Christian System. Bro. J. H. Jones also spoke tenderly to the young men, and gave them a father's advice.

The committee on obituaries, of which J. M. VanHorn was chairman, presented a tender tribute to the memory of members who had died during the year: Hiram Woods, O. C. Hill, George P. Slade, Thomas Munnell and W. K. Pendleton.

Dr. W. A. Belding, who was present two years ago at Cleveland, and whose eighty-second birthday fell on the first day of the meeting, was not forgotten.

It goes without question that the church in Alliance, under the leadership of A. M. Chamberlain, took good care of the Association. The business of the Association was not forgotten, and was well done. Careful attention to its business has been from the beginning one of the strong elements in the stability and success of this body. The following are the officers elected for the ensuing year, and who constitute the executive committee: President, R. Moffett, 715 Logan Ave., Cleveland, O.; vice-president, Prof. E. B. Wakefield, Hiram, O.; corressponding secretary and treasurer, F. M. Green, Kent, O.

It was decided to go to Canton next year for the annual meeting.

I would be glad to receive a letter and the address of every person now living who at any time has been a member of the Association. We desire to make a complete list of members from the beginning. Letters from absent members were received this year, the announcement of which was a pleasant feature of the sessions. Among these I recall the names of L. I. Mercer, B. H. Hayden, A. Martin, M. P. Hayden, J. W. James, S. H. Bartlett, Alanson Wilcox, C. L. Morrison, George Musson and H. W. Everest.

While the number of preachers in attendance was not so large as at some other of the meetings, the attendance was good. The Cincinnati Jubilee in October, 1899, and the Hiram College Jubilee in June, 1900, had something to do in limiting the attendance. But, all in all, we have never had a better or more profitable meeting of the Association.

F. M. GREEN.

—The season of cooler days, browning meadows and falling leaves warn us of declining days in human life.

—The editor of this paper arrived in this city from his summer home at Macatawa, Mich., on Tuesday morning.

—Just as we go to press we are informed that the French government has pardoned Captain Dreyfus.

—It is not too late yet to make an offering to Church Extension for this year's record. The books are not closed until the last day of the present month.

—The twenty-sixth annual convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet in the First Presbyterian Church in Seattle, Wash., October 20-25, 1899. Last year, at St. Paul, Minn., this organization celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary of that great awakening of women to the liquor traffic which has been fittingly styled the Crusade. This year the union will celebrate the silver anniversary of the more permanent form into which the Crusade crystallized.

—Through a friend we understand that Brother Abbott's health is again in jeopardy. The tremendous strain he has endured through anxiety for the work in Missouri, has again driven him to the care of a physician and to the bed. We hope that he may soon recover and that he may be present in the convention at Jefferson City, Oct. 2-5, but he must have immediate and absolute rest in order to do so. Now it so happens that the brethren can greatly assist in his rest and recovery, not only by their prayers, but by their liberal contributions to the state work. Brother Abbott is exceedingly anxious that all unpaid pledges and memberships due be paid at once and that these may be largely augumented by liberal offerings from churches, preachers and members that have not yet responded to the demands of the present year.

—Bro. A. M. Atkinson, of Wabash, Ind., has an article in this paper calling attention to an almost, and perhaps with many, a quite forgotten ministry. How will it appear unto the angels in heaven when the great Jubilee Convention is at the acme of its rejoicing to see the worn-out preachers of the gospel who for the want of means could not only not be there, but who are in distress for the actual necessities of life. Brethren, can we afford to make possible such a contrast through negligence? Truly will it be to our shame if we permit this thing to happen. Is a church that will not provide for its worthy servants in distress any better than the man who will not provide for his own in the flesh?

—On the 27th of the present month the Mt. Cabanne Bible Club concludes its Bible reading course of four years, and the occasion will be memorialized by special services, the awarding of diplomas, etc. Among the special features of the occasion is to be an address by J. H. O. Smith, of Chicago, Ill. During the course 118 persons have joined in the reading. Sixteen of these have read all the books of the Bible, while 40 have read all of the books assigned from the time of their joining the club. The course has been under the management of Bro. Merriman, and the universal testimony is that the course has been one of personal and public profit to its members and to the church. A new course is being outlined by Dr. Dungan and the good work of systematic organized Bible reading and Bible study in Mt. Cabanne Church is to be continued.

—The report of offerings for Church Extension for the first sixteen days of September show a gain of $1,367.36 over those of the same period last year. The offerings for this period, reported elsewhere in this paper, amount to $4,481.42. This is good, but do not forget that $15,000 for Church Extension is wanted this month, and that the time is short.

—Another memorial fund has been added to the Home Mission offerings for this Jubilee Year. John Reed, of Massachusetts, has subscribed $5,000 for a "John Reed Memorial Fund." This now makes sure of more than $90,000 for Home Missions this year. This is so near the $100,000 line that it now seems hardly possible that we can fail of the mark before the close of the month. The response to the call for a dollar from each Disciple, we learn, is both hearty and liberal, but if we reach the $100,000 mark this year it must be done quickly; the time is short. Send to B. L. Smith, Cor. Sec., Cincinnati, O.

—The Spokesman's Review Quarterly, published at Spokane, Wash., is something unique in the way of a quarterly. It is devoted to mining interests in the Northwest and is profusely illustrated with half tone scenes of mines and mountains, camps and equipments. In this quarterly are related some of the marvelous yet true stories of mines and men, successes and failures. The July edition opens with a thrilling story of "A Million Dollar Check."

—Bro. Abbott, our faithful secretary, has important information for you in this paper concerning the Missouri state convention at Jefferson City, Oct. 2-5. Also concerning railroad rates, unpaid pledges, non-offering churches, etc. We trust that all concerned will read and heed what he has written and requested. Bro. Abbot has almost given his life for this work, and unless the brethren rally to his support and that of the state board in the things asked for the sadness of his heart will be greatly deepened. And not only this; the evangelists who have labored so faithfully need your encouragement lest they be discouraged. Therefore, read Bro. Abbott's message to you with a prayerful and responsive heart.

—The Missouri state convention will be held this year in Jefferson City, Oct. 2-5. The time, the place, the accessibility, the railroad rates and the occasion are all in agreement for a grand convention. The state board, the secretary and the evangelists have done their part and it now remains for the brethren to make this the greatest convention in our state history. The things needful to this end are first, an outpouring of the people; second, the payment of all unpaid pledges and life memberships; third, an offering from every church that has not yet made an offering for the state work, and last, but not least, larger measures of the Holy Spirit in our hearts. Grant these conditions and no power on earth or under the earth can prevent a memorable convention.

—In our issue of the 7th inst., under the title of "Persian Letter," appeared what seems a personal letter from Bro. M. Baghdasarian to the editor of this paper. It is only fair to say that the letter was not seen by the editor until after it had appeared in print. It was found among other correspondence and handed over to the printer by the assistant editor, who supposed it to be of the usual character of foreign correspondence. Otherwise the letter would have been accompanied by some editorial endorsement or explanation. This explanation is due, perhaps, to the Iowa brethren who are censured in the letter for their lack of promised support. We believe it to be true, however, that Bro. Baghdasarian was sent to Persia by the brethren in Iowa, with the implied understanding, at least, that they were to continue his support. On our suggestion, two years ago, some money was raised in Iowa for his support and was forwarded to him, but with what instructions we do not know. We believe Bro. B. to be entirely worthy, and we think he has the confidence of the Iowa brethren in his ability and Christian character. They may have come to see that it is impracticable for them to establish and sustain a mission in Persia, which is very likely true. If this is the case, it seems to us the brother should be furnished means for his return to this country, where he can have the opportunity of earning his support and of being useful in the Lord's work. We have received some donations of money in response to his appeal, and if the brethren in Iowa or elsewhere will co-operate with us, we shall be glad to assist in raising a sufficient amount to enable Bro. B. to return to this country. This matter would have been presented privately, but for the inadvertent publication of what was probably intended to be a personal letter.

—Remember that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will have a special train from this city to the Jubilee Convention. Particulars given later. Send in your names at once. Lowest rates and best accommodations guaranteed. Address this office.

—Our Young Folks for Oct. 4th is one of the best editions of that popular magazine for young people that has yet appeared. It is a double number, 32 pages, with several special features, many fine illustrations, and in addition to the regular departments many interesting and important articles. We hope that the additional items of interest in this double number will double the subscription list of Our Young Folks, the prince of papers for young people, especially of the church.

—In view of the death of the venerable Dr. W. K. Pendleton, of Eustis, Fla., which took place recently at his former home, Bethany, West Va., where for many years he was president of Bethany College, the Adams St. Christian Church, of Jacksonville, Fla., where pastor T. Henry Blenus was a Bethany College student, recently, at its regular prayer-meeting unanimously passed resolutions of appreciation of his ripe scholarship and useful life, of regrets at the loss of his saintly presence among us and of sympathy for all the friends upon whom the burden of sorrow rests.

—The latest enterprise of D. L. Moody is the proposed reproduction of the largest Northfield Conference in Chicago, beginning with the first Sunday in October. The principal speakers announced are the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of London, whose preaching and teaching at Northfield has increased in power and popularity; the Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D. D., of New York, a leader in the Winona movement and prominent elsewhere in evangelistic work; the Rev. R. A. Torrey, Supt. of the Bible Institue; Prof. W. W. White, of international renown as a Bible teacher, and Mr. W. R. Newell, the leader of the Moody Bible classes held in Chicago for the past two winters. Mr. Moody, of course, will be present also.

—According to statistics recently quoted in the Observer, this city, there are 180 Cumberland Presbyterian Churches in the state of Missouri which have no Sunday-schools. The same statistics show that there are 11,976 more communicants in their 412 churches than scholars in their 232 Sunday-schools. These figures are quoted in the Observer to arouse the 28,037 communicants of that faith to the necessity of a new century movement which they are endeavoring to inaugurate. We have no doubt that a similar use of the law of self-examination would discover a similar necessity in some religious bodies in the state of much larger pretentions than the Cumberland Presbyterians. Without a new century movement some of the religious bodies in the state are going to get left. "Master, is it I."

—Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, of this city, informs us that the name of J. D. Dillard should have appeared in the program of the Missouri State Convention, published in our edition of Sept. 14th, instead of Joel Brown. Bro. Dillard is the agent of the Benevolent Association for Missouri instead of Bro. Brown.

—The Horseless Age is the name of a journal published in New York City, in the interest of the horseless vehicles now attracting world-wide attention. This journal seems to have a comprehensive grasp upon the importance and age-making influence of this new method of transportation, and to all parties wishing knowledge of this class of vehicles and to keep abreast of this wonderful and revolutionary factor now entering our civilization we can cheerfully commend The Horseless Age.

—We acknowledge the receipt of a copy of the 15th annual report of the United States Civil Service Commission, a book of more than 700 pages.

—T. A. Abbott, Cor. Sec., Missouri State Board of Missions, in speaking of the growth of our brotherhood and work in this state says:

In the last 10 years there has been a gain of 600 churches, but 424 of these were the direct result of mission work. There have been 75,740 additions, but 41,453 of these were the result of our mission work. In other words, if our mission work had stopped ten years ago, in place of having 1,575 churches we would have but 1,151, and instead of 161,013 members we would have counted 119,680, and in place of being first in the list of religious bodies in the state we would have been ranking fourth or fifth.

—Special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

CINCINNATI, O., Sept. 18, 1899.

CHRISTIAN - EVANGELIST:— Received nearly $6,000 this morning. Only $9,000 short of the $150,000. McLEAN AND RAINS.

All will rejoice at the information contained in the above dispatch. It seems now almost certain that the Foreign Society will reach the mark set for it, and it is not improbable that it will yet far exceed the $150,000 limit before the missionary year closes. Only the Lord knows how many have it in their hearts to make liberal offerings to this work in the few remaining days. Some one person may yet make a gift that will more than bridge the chasm, to say nothing of the large number who will yet just as cheerfully remit their smaller gifts.

—We have received the three first numbers of a new magazine, published in this city, called The Industrial. While it is not so pretentious as some of the monthlies as to size, we are pleased with its method of treating vital questions in the industrial and social world. The editor is disposed to see both sides of these complex questions, and to be considerate in his statements. Such a journal we believe to have a useful mission in the world at this time. So far as we have examined this magazine it commends itself to our favor, and we believe to the favor of every citizen who sincerely desires improvement and elevation in and of the industrial world. Published monthly by the Industrial Magazine Co., Lincoln Trust Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

—The Foreign Society has received $2,000 on the annuity plan since the first of September. The whole amount received by this society in this way is more than $60,000.

—While I am writing permit me to use this opportunity to express something of my great appreciation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It is certainly one of the most helpful and instructive visitors to my study. It is my prayer that our Heavenly Father may continue to its editor the same clearness of reasoning, breadth of sympathies, fairness and spiritual power which have characterized the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST ever since it has been my pleasure to read it. PERSONAL MENTION.

E.N. Phillips has recently organized a church of 35 members in Ionia, Kansas.

The church at Waukegan, Ill., has extended a call to Grant E. Pike, of Ohio. He has accepted the work and will begin his year Oct. 1st.

W. H. Fry, of Christopher, Ill., would like to preach for a church in West or North Arkansas. Address him as above for particulars.

Mr. John D. Rockefeller has given a quarter of a million dollars to Brown University on condition that the entire sum wanted, $2,000,000, shall be raised by June 1st, 1900.

J. D. Greer, now in Christian University, Canton, Mo., again desires preaching points within reach of that place. He has had seven years' experience in the ministry.

A. J. Sever, after a service of seven years with the church in Perry, Ohio, as its pastor, has resigned that he may take up the work in Coshocton, Ohio.

F. O. Fannon, pastor First Christian Church, of this city, is engaged in a protracted meeting at Liberty, Mo. No doubt Bro. Fannon feels at home when in the Liberty Church.

O. P. Spiegel, pastor of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), Birmingham, is conducting a series of evangelistic meetings under a large gospel tent, which has been pitched on the corner of South Greensboro Street and Crescent City Avenue, Tuskaloosa, Ala.

W. R. Jinnett concluded his services as pastor of the First Christian Church, East St. Louis, Ill., Sept. 10th, and is now located with the church at Atlanta, Ill. Bro. Jinnett was beloved by the East St. Louis Church, leaving them in peace and with their good wishes and prayers for his success in Atlanta.

B. F. Hill writes us that his first duty on becoming pastor of the church in Nevada, Mo., was to conduct funeral services for Bro. and Sister Tucker, who were drowned in Tucker's Lake, Sept. 1st. They were members of the church in Nevada. Bro. Hill says he found it a hard task to pull away from California, Mo., but he hopes to do a good work in his new field.

B. A. Hinsdale, professor of the Science and Art of Teaching in the University of Michigan, contributes an article to the September number of the New Crusade entitled, "Training the Wills of Children." This important subject is treated in the author's usual clear, concise and practical manner. Teachers and parents alike would derive much benefit from a careful perusal of this exceedingly helpful article.

Christopher B. Coleman, a member of the church in Springfield, Ill., was ordained to the ministry on Sept 17th. The pastor, J. E. Lynn, was assisted in the service of ordination by E. V. Zollars, president of Hiram College. Bro. Christopher became a Christian when Bro. Zollars was pastor of that church and it was thought most fitting that he should deliver the ordination sermon. Such remembrance of another is one of the splendid virtues of the Christian spirit.

F. A. Sword writes that he concludes his work in Monticello, Iowa, soon, and then a single man is desired for his successor. A man that can lead in song and live on $500 per year. Address as above.

Prof. O. T. Morgan, formerly of Drake University, Des Moines, Ia., has been appointed instructor in the correspondence Hebrew department of the University of Chicago.

Through the Christian Oracle we learn that Dr. H C. Willett, of Chicago, is to preach for the First Congregational Church, this city, the last two Sundays of the present month. On Monday morning, Sept. 11, he read a paper to the Baptist ministers of Chicago on "The Decline of Denominationalism."

E. M. Smith, who with his family spent the summer in Virginia, passed through this city on last Saturday for Centralia, Mo., where he preached on last Sunday. There is a probability of his becoming successor to Brother Denton in Centralia, he having been called to Warrensburg, Mo.

On Tuesday evening, Sept. 12th, Prof. W. E. M. Hackleman and Miss Pearl D. Connor were married in Irvington, Ind. Prof. Hackleman is known by our brethren throughout the United States as one of our best leaders of song and publisher of some of our most popular sacred music, and all will join with us in congratulations at his marriage.

H. C. Garrison, having resigned his work with the Marshall Street Christian Church, Richmond, Va., will accept a call to Danville, Ky. Bro. Garrison will leave Richmond early in October. He has been pastor of the Marshall Street Church four years and five months, and has grown in the favor and esteem of the people of that city from the first.

At our preachers' meeting in this office on last Monday resolutions of esteem and prayerful interest were passed in relation to Miss Bertha Marshall, daughter of our city evangelist, A. J. Marshall, who starts as a missionary to India on the 27th of the present month. A farewell service to Sister Marshall is to be held in the Carondelet Christian Church by the Endeavor Societies and others on the evening of the 26th. Also similar resolutions in relation to W. R. Jinnett, who has recently removed from East St. Louis to Atlanta, Ill. Bro. Jinnett was a member of the association of Christian preachers in this city, faithful in his attendance and services and will be greatly missed in our Monday assemblies.

We wish to call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of the Swanson Rheumatic Cure Co., of Chicago, on page 1207. From the steady growth and continued success of this firm it is plainly evident that "5 Drops" is a meritorious remedy, and those of our readers who are suffering from any of the ailments which "5 Drops" will cure would do well to send for a sample bottle. The regular price of sample bottle is 25 cents, but as a special inducement to readers of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST a sample bottle will be sent for 10 cents during the next 30 days. In answering the advertisement please mention CRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Christian University Opening.

It is the custom to hold, in connection with the opening of the University, a Bible Institute; and of the appropriateness of the course there can be no doubt, after one has enjoyed the pleasure of attending such an opening and institute as was held in this city last week.

The first meeting convened Monday evening, September 4. After song and prayer service, Bro. L. H. Stine, of Quincy, Ill., delivered a most finished and thoughtful sermon. His theme was, "The Mind of the Master." The writer has known Bro. Stine for many years, in Old Kentucky, and it was a great pleasure to listen to him again. He is one of the most scholarly of our men, and his sermon was greatly enjoyed by a large audience.

Tuesday was opening day, and all services were held in the large chapel of the University building. Pupils new and old, friends coming from far and near, gathered on the grounds early in the morning. At 10 o'clock, A. M., President Lockhart announced the first song; after a prayer by Bro. Errett, Prof. John Kenyon was introduced, and delivered an address on "Unfinished Business." The speaker told us of the great work of this closing century, especially the last quarter thereof. Then stated how, in many fields, a mere beginning only had been made, and the great problems of science, sociology and religion still remain for the twentieth century and the coming generation to solve. His words were thoughtful and helpful, inspiring those present with a purpose to prepare for coming demands.

After music and song the writer delivered an address on "The Actual and the Possible of Christian University." This address was listened to patiently by the audience, and it is hoped, deepened the interest already felt in the school and its work for Christ and humanity.

Dinner was served on the ground, and to me it seemed that all present were expansionists!

The evening session brought us a musical treat, presented by the faculty of the university; also readings by elocutionist, Prof. Bell. No part of the program was better received or more enjoyed.

Later came an address from Bro. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City. It will not be forgotten by his hearers for many years; the striking thought so forcefully and eloquently presented, fully sustained the reputation of the speaker, and left a desire to hear more from Bro. Richardson. In this we were not disappointed, and at night a larger audience greeted the same speaker at the church, istening with pleased interest to a splendid sermon on the "Faith of Paul."

Wednesday morning found the institute in session at the church. Bro. C. A. Lockhart, of Waterloo, Ia., occupied the first place on the program and gave us one of the most thoughtful and finished paper presented; subject, "Culture of Spiritual Meditation." This paper dealt with a very important subject and should, by all means, appear in some of our papers.

President Lockhart followed with a paper showing great and careful research, on "The Antiquity of Man." The paper was then discussed by various members of the Institute, and by unanimous vote its publication requested; many anxiously await its appearance in print. The afternoon session brought us a paper from Prof Fallias on "Athens," Prof. F. spent a year in school in Athens, and few men among the Disciples know more of that interesting city. It was my misfortune to miss this address, but from the discussion I heard of it, it certainly gave new thoughts and ideas to all present.

Again, the Institute cheered President Lockhart as he appeared to give a paper on "The Reliability and Inspiration of the Bible." It is needless to say this paper was a masterpiece, and that the many preachers, old and young, enjoyed it very much.

The closing session, Wednesday evening, brought us more good things. Bro. Levi Marshall, of Hannibal, Mo., occupied the time, giving us a helpful and spicy lecture on "The Land and the Book." This speaker carried us to Palestine, and gave much pleasure and information in regard to the sacred country and the divine Book. I am sure every listener left the house thankful to Bro. Marshall and the gracious Father for the opportunities of the closing hour.

In conclusion, I wish to say, Christian University has opened the forty-second session with a very decided increase in attendance. The faculty is composed of men and women of culture and ability to teach; the pupils, in the main, have reached the years of manhood and womanhood, and are here for work. About fifty preachers are among the matriculates. The outlook is promising.

Mrs. C. E. Gaston.

Mrs. Gaston is well known throughout the sisterhood of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions as one of the pioneers of the movement, and one who, during the twenty-five years of its history, has had its best interests in her heart. She has recently given to it two interest-bearing notes, one for two hundred and one for three hundred dollars, as a gift to the English Bible Chair Endowment Fund. She gives this on the annuity plan; the interest while she lives goes to the little church in Fairhope, Ala., where is her present home. In a recent letter she sent this message to her friends:

"Please say to my friends, my life has a glorious ending. I find all of the promises of God yea and amen in Christ Jesus. I am even now on Mount Zion, the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem. Ere long I shall enter its portals and mortality be swallowed up in life everlasting. 'For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.'"

MRS. HELEN E. MOSES.

THE SCIENCE AND PEDAGOGY OF ETHICS is a volume of 312 pages, just from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, by Prof. H. W. Everest, Dean of the Bible Department of Drake University. The work is the result of a life-long study of Moral Science and religion on the part of the distinguished author. The subject is treated under the general heads of Theoretical Ethics, Practical Ethics and Pedagogical Ethics. It covers a vast field of thought, and is worthy the special attention of teachers and ministers. $1.50 per copy.

Response to the Dollar Call.

The following are samples of replies that have been received in response to our letter asking for one dollar to complete the offering of one hundred thousand dollars for Home Missions for the Jubilee Year. We hope these replies will touch the hearts of others and stir them up that they, too, may respond in this great offering. B. L. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

1. I am a poor old washerwoman, but I will send the price of two washings. I know the Lord will bless me in giving it. My earnest prayer goes with this offering. I will be at the convention in spirit and in prayer. I wish I could give you a hundred dollars. God bless you!—INDIANA.

2. In response to your "call to the faithful" I enclose you two dollars for the Jubilee Fund. I pray that you may get the hundred thousond dollars.

3. I believe it takes a great deal to give a church a valid excuse not to give to Home Missions. But we had smallpox and could have no meeting for over a month. We will at a later date take up a respectable offering for Home Missions. Remember, it takes something like smallpox to keep this church out of missionary offerings!

4. I send you this little gift with a prayer that the American Christian Missionary Society may soon come over and help us in this benighted country. Certainly no state in the Union is more in need of the truth than is Louisiana.

5. I am sorry to say to you that I cannot be at the great gathering of our people as I am now seventy years old and getting very feeble, but I send you the dollar to help forward the work.

6. Though the calls are many and the needs urgent, we cheerfully send the modest amount asked for with a prayer that the goal may be over-reached and the notes of the Jubilee echo round the world.—ILLINOIS.

7. If our brotherhood only had a new heart and better courage you would not need to ask the second time for one hundred thousand dollars from so great a people.

8. I am enclosing my check for five dollars to the Jubilee Fund. I am too busy to write my sentiments only to say that the goodness of God and Christ to us all I can in nowise repay, but labor for some good, though but little. You ask for one; the Lord is good, I will try five this time rather than one.

9 I enclose five dollars. Here is my "hand" again for one hundred thousand dollars by Sept. 30th. The Jubilee must not be so named among us unless we do this.

10. I have given this year for missions until I feel it, as I am poor in this world's goods, but the voice comes to me—"The silver is mine; the gold is mine; all things are mine;" so I will give this one more dollar, and may the Lord bless you!

11. I send you one dollar (the last one on earth I have).

12. Please do not put my name on the Jubilee Roll of Honor, but just let me know that you received the dollar. I have simply done my duty and deserve no honor.

Jubilee Convention News

The Jubilee Convention.

The committee in charge of the arrangements for the Missouri delegates to the Jubilee Convention has selected the Baltimore & Ohio Ry. as the official route from St. Louis for all delegates, and a one-fare rate has been secured. The railroad fare is $9, and there are three regular trains each day for the accommodation of the delegates. A contract has been entered into with the Palace Hotel on the American plan at $2 PER DAY, and with the Hotel Emery on the European plan at $1 PER DAY, with 10 PER CENT. DISCOUNT from these prices to all who remain one week or longer. These accommodations have been assigned to the committee, and all applications for room or rooms and board should be sent to Mr. W. H. McClain, chairman, room 1312 Chemical Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

In order to secure the benefit of the arrangements effected by the committee it will be necessary to state the time the delegates expect to arrive at Cincinnati and the length of the time they will require the accommodations at the hotel. State also whether you want hotel arrangements on the AMERICAN or EUEOPEAN PLAN. The names will be filed with the hotel in the order in which they are received. First come, best served. Those stating definitely when they expect to reach Cincinnati and the accommodations desired will be taken care of first. Those sending their names without giving the time they expect to reach Cincinnati or the time they want to return will be given the best accommodations that can be provided at the time of their arrival in Cincinnati.

Our SPECIAL TRAIN WILL LEAVE St. Louis THURSDAY morning Oct. 12th and another on Friday morning, Oct. 13th for the accommodation of the Missouri delegates.

A one-and-one-third fare rate has been made for oll delegates in the Western Passenger Association, but special arrangements have been made from some of the cities west by which a one-fare rate can be obtained. Delegates in Kansas and Western Missouri are requested to correipond with Mr. Geo. W. Muckley, Waterworks Bldg., in Kansas City for further information in regard to the special train from that point.

Further information will be given on application to the chairman. W. H. McCLAIN.

Jubilee Notes.

The great Jubilee draws nigh. One month from to-night (Sept. 12th) is the big reception at Central Church. I can hardly wait to shake hands with you. The officers of the home and foreign boards are places of interest these days. Never did men work more faithfully to do the work you asked of them this year.

The Jubilee committee meets now every Monday night. On Monday Geo. T. Holbert, chairman of Minneapolis delegation, was here in the interest of the Minnesota brethren; today Bro. D. D. Burt, of Omaha, in the interest of the Nebraska and Iowa delegations. Not many days since Bro. H. F. McLane, of Toledo, came in the interest of the Northwestern Ohio delegation, and several others have been here. It is well for these leaders to come this way. We can assign you all right when you arrive, but we are anxious to have you send your name and how many are likely to come from your church, that we may get an idea of how many are coming. Send name at once.

Come on Thursday if possible. Enroll as soon as you arrive. Let us know on what train your party will come. Send all mail to Central Christian Church. We expect to have a restaurant at Music Hall. Bed and breakfast in homes not over 75 cents. Hotels from $1.50 to $2.50 per day. The Baptist state convention has been postponed one week because they could not get proper accommodations while our conventions are in session.

We trust the singers will heed the call of Bro. J. H. Fillmore in former issue. We want a splendid chorus. A. M. HARVUOT.

The Great Jubilee Convention.

A special car will leave here 9:55 A. M., Oct. 12; rate $9.05 for round trip. By going at that time you will have a free reclining chair car without change from Springfield to Cincinnati. Better yet: at Indianapolis the Springfield delegation, perhaps, will join delegations from Chicago, Ill., Minneapolis, the Northwest, Wisconsin, Iowa and many cities along the route. Therefore, from Indianapolis to Cincinnati we may have one solid train of delegates. I understand five coaches will come from Chicago, Ill.

Sunday night, Sept. 10, we hold a special "Jubilee service" at Palmyra, Ill. Sept. 10, at 8 P. M., the same kind of service will be held at Scottville.

I expect to go to Atwater, Ashland and other places and tell the people all about the convention and that they can't afford to miss it. Three are going from Palmyra, Ill. I expect to get 10 or 15 to go.

Why don't all the preachers go out to country churches and tell them about the Jubilee Convention, and get the people to go? Upon their return they would be so encouraged and full of enthusiasm that they would do more all along the line of their Christian duties.

Considering these things, let us go into the small towns and country churches and so tell them of the convention that "they will be compelled to come in." If there is a church within 50 miles of Springfield that does not know all about the intended convention, write me and I will visit you sometime during the week—my only time—or I will write you about it. I am yours for the greatest religious convention on earth, in the name of Christ.

Jubilee City Letter.

The Jubilee City is famous for its beautiful hills. The "highlands of Kentucky" rise back of Covington and Newport to the height of several hundred feet and are yet picturesque with nature. On the Ohio side the "Queen City" has dotted her mountlets over with suburbs where hundreds of our visitors in October will find cool, refreshing nights of slumber. All this native beauty dates back to

THE "ICE AGE" AND THE GREAT DAM AT CINCINNATI.

Here the northern ice movement ended. These fine terraces were ploughed into graceful contour by the moving glaciers and floating icebergs of past ages. At the present site of Cincinnati it is supposed a great dam existed, stretching from hill to highland and standing six hundred feet above the base of the valley. This formed the "Great Lake of the Ohio," whose surface water covered twenty thousand square miles of the Ohio Valley and was three hundred feet deep at Pittsburg. Two-thirds of the state was glaciated and the melting ice of spring and summer poured down into this great basin in torrents until every six months saw it a mighty lake that must have been a wonder of power and majesty to the prehistoric dwellers whom scientists tell us dwelt near euen in those days. Great boulder-laden icebergs left their marks and unloadsd their stone cargoes high up on the hills that formed the banks of this "inland sea."

As the climate grew warmer the great dam yielded to the melting sun and then came the catastrophe. At first it was evidently a grand "ice cascade," but some time the dam must yield to the pressure behind, and then came

THE AGE OF GREAT FLOODS.

Every summer this mighty dam broke and that great lake came hurling down like ten thousand connemanghs. Every winter repaired the barrier, every summer repeated the flood, and the lower Ohio Valley and far down into the Mississippi the scientific eye sees today the wreckage of the "days of the floods." Not less interesting are the

MONUMENTS OF PREHISTORIC DAYS.

Standing at the Yonoute Inn on Kennedy Heights, one looks out over the beautiful valley of the Little Miami. From here across to the Big Miami lived the "Mound Builders." About the village of Madisonville must have been a town, for there you may see an "ancient cemetery." More than one thousand skeletons have been removed from their rest in its ash graves. This cemetery covers fifteen acres and is to-day overgrown with woods. In the graves are utensils of bone, shell, stone and pottery, curiously carved and often ornamented. attempts to carve the human face and the salamander's head are most curious. On a steep hillside near is an old road cut out about twenty five feet wide and a quarter of a mile in length. At Red Bank is a terraced hill three hundred feet high.

Near Newtown is the greatest mound. It is one hundred and fifty feet wide by two hundred and fifty long at the base and forty feet high. More than four hundred of these mounds, large and small, have been examined. Not less remarkable are the "earth enclosures" or ancient forts. Not far from the great mound just spoken of is one of these "stupendous fortifications." It juts on the river and rises one hundred feet above it. The form of the fort is a circle two hundred yards in diameter. Great ditches are cut and walls of stone and clay built. A causeway one hundred feet wide is cut through and fortified so it could be swept of enemies by its defending garrison in time of trouble. Outside graded embankments surround a plat of sixteen acres in oval form with a protected gateway. Within that oval are of which there are eight. In one of them was found two bushels of ornaments made of stone, copper, mica, shells and teeth of animals, besides copper ornaments covered with hammered silver and even gold; but most remarkable of all were the fifty thousand pearls. The stories of science concerning these prehistoric days read like romance, and scant though the record be it is "truth stranger than fiction."

Christian-Evangelist Special.

From the large number of responses which we are receiving from our notice in the last issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S Special to the Jubilee Convention, we are glad to answer that from present indications the excursion promises to be a most signal success. Full particulars regarding rates and accommodations will be early announced and in due time. Meanwhile, send in your name and address, and help swell the attendance and aid us in getting rock-bottom railroad rates. Address this office or our excursion manager, Oreon E. Scott, 817 Chestnut St., this city.

THE HELPING HAND, by W. W. Dowling, is a manual of instruction for the Y. P. S. C. E., that great movement of the century that is putting new life into our churches, by interesting the young, causing them to flock to the Lord's house "as doves to the windows," and encouraging them earnestly in the Lord's work. It contains, in the most condensed form, full information concerning the Y. P. S. C. E. movement, with instructions and suggestions concerning every point. This work has had a more extensive circulation, and proved more helpful to Endeavor workers than any other hand-book published. 25 cents. Christian Pub. Co.

Wheeling through Europe—VII.

A CORNER OF ITALY: FROM THE LAKES TO THE SEA.

Of the three famous Italian lakes, Lugano lies almost entirely in Switzerland, Como entirely in Italy and Maggiore partly in each. Nevertheless, they are, in fact as well as in name, Italian lakes, and the little towns which dot their shores are as purely Italian as anything on the peninsula. They are not more beautiful than the Swiss lakes, but the soft and rounded outlines of their vine-clad hills give them a character of their own. We rode by the western edge of Lago Maggiore for twenty miles or more, then found a steamer just ready to cross to the other side and boarded it after the gangplank was in. We always try to make close connections. When we were sailing from New York, Damon made such exceedingly close connections with the steamer that he had to chase it down the harbor to get aboard. But he caught it, and we caught the steamer on Lago Maggiore and crossed to Laveno. At the dock in that sleepy little Italian town, where one would expect no sound more startling than the subdued hum of very leisurely traffic, there was a newsboy with an armful of papers and a pair of lungs which would command attention on Broadway. He was the first wide-awake newsboy I had seen in Europe, and my first impulse was to encourage him by patronage. But the papers were all Italian, and I am not hypocrite enough to pretend to be interested in a newspaper in that language.

Riding through the hills to Como, we stopped over night at the little city of Varese. Imagine if you can (probably you can't, but try,) a town constructed entirely of stage scenery, and your picture of Varese will not be far amiss. Most of the houses are in reality built of stone, but they are painted in such a way that at first glance you are sure they are a wood-and-canvas imitation. I have seen several large stone gateposts and two stone houses painted to look as if they were built of brick and covered with plaster which had partly fallen off. If external symmetry seems to demand a window where one is not otherwise needed, an imitation window will be painted on the wall. Half of the doors look like mere pictures of doors, but most of them open if you go at it right. Stone balconies are a favorite architectural feature. The one upon which our windows opened would have been a perfect place to play the balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet," but neither of us was willing to take the part of Juliet. The language contributes to this stage-y effect.

When a man directs you on the road to the next town, his remarks are apt to sound like a section of grand opera or like a Latin salutatory, according to the style of his utterance. The familiar musical terms turn up occasionally, too, in new connections, as when one hurries up a slow waiter with "allegro," or "presto," or checks his too rapid speech with "adagio."

We reached Como over a road three inches deep in dust and, to get a more extensive view of the lake, which is reputed to be the loveliest of the group, we rode out five miles on a road which purports to go by the lakeside. It does go near the lakeside, but the shore is occupied by villas and the road runs for the most part between high stone walls. It is hilly, dusty and intensely hot, and there is not a glimpse of the lake except at rare intervals. Once the road came down to the water's edge, and we paused to watch two boatloads of fishermen cast a net a hundred yards long and draw it without capturing so much as a fin or a scale. It reminded me (I shall not say why) of many fishing excursions at Macatawa in company with the incumbent of the Easy Chair, when the company never failed to compensate for the lack of visible results, if that chanced to be the luck of the day. But, as affording connected views of the lake, that road was a failure. It has no place in our long list of delightful lakeside rides, and perhaps, considering the dust and stone walls, there is little value in my testimony that Maggiore is far preferable to Como.

South from Como the hills dwindle to knolls, and soon we are in the broad and level plain of Lombardy, the richness of which first lured the Barbarians into Italy, and was for centuries the coveted prize of her northern invaders. To us for the present it means good roads, over which we can make fast time to Milan. It was in the course of this ride that we passed a country dance one evening about seven o'clock in full swing on a bare, level plat by the side of the road. I observed that at least two-thirds of the young women were decidedly good-looking, and also that as the exercises proceeded some of them kicked off their wooden sandals to facilitate their movements. Altogether it was a quiet and well-ordered assemblage, indulging in this "vacant hilarity," as the Vicar of Wakefield would say, with natural grace and true rustic simplicity. The hour puzzled me a little, and I have not yet decided whether it was a protracted afternoon affair or an early evening function.

Milan is a city of to day, with the best characteristics of an American city, and in addition to these it possesses reminders of the men and events of many yesterdays. Like an American city, it has electric cars, broad, straight streets, bustling crowds of people who seem to be going somewhere in a hurry on business, large "shops," some of which are almost department stores, newsboys and bootblacks. Like a European city, it has crowded sidewalk cafes with music, and a great cathedral in the center of the city, which seems to have been built before anything else, and from which the life of the city radiates. As a city of to-day it lives and moves and does business. As a city of the olden time it possesses mediæval churches and the accumulated artistic treasures of centuries. Of the churches the only one which needs to be mentioned is the cathedral, a marble structure more vast than that of Cologne and even richer in its wealth of sculptured ornamentation. The other great attraction of Milan besides the cathedral is Leonardo da Vinci's fresco of the "Last Supper." It was painted on the inside wall of a monastery four hundred years ago, and it is not surprising that it is not in a perfect state of preservation. So much has been said and written about its decayed condition that I was prepared to look at a formless blur on the wall and say, Here is where the "Last Supper" was. To come in that frame of mind upon the picture as it is, was like discovering a lost treasure. Of course it is faded, stained and cracked, but through this defective body the soul of the picture shines with undimmed brilliance. The group is seated about the table, the Master in the center. The awful words, "One of you shall betray me," have just been spoken. The disciples start up in attitudes of surprise, grief and protestation, but the Master calms them with a look and a gesture of patient resignation which say, "It is written." Faded as it is, Leonardo da Vinci's "Last Supper" is still the most impressive work of art which I have seen in Europe.

It is about a hundred miles from Milan to Genoa, at first through the valley of the Po and then through the Appennines, which lie along the Coast of the Mediterranean. Night overtook us in a thinly settled district near Pavia, and only the timely and unexpected appearance of a little "albergo," or inn, relieved us of the prospect of a long ride in the utter dark over a road none too good. There was a group of neighbors sitting about the door drinking wine. They at once became interested in our attempt to tell the landlady that we wanted supper and a bed. The proposition seemed to me a simple and natural one for two travelers to make at nightfall at a wayside inn, but each member of the group had a different interpretation for our request and stood ready to enforce it at the price of his blood. It looked like a small riot, but was really only a friendly discussion.

Finally, they reached some sort of agreement and explained it to the landlady, who had been quite lost sight of in the melee. She seemed unwilling or unable to give us what we wanted, but the crowd, now thoroughly harmonious, shouted, "Si, si, si!" (yes, yes, yes) and ushered us into the house. They seated us, still without the landlady's approval, in the front room, which looked rather more like a country store than a tap room, but less like a dining room than either; and there a trim little maid, assisted by our dozen interpreters, took our order for supper. The landlady soon relented and joined in the game of guessing what we wanted, and we had little difficulty in getting everything in the house—which was not much. With a desire to be companionable, we told the company, in answer to a question which seemed to call for some such answer, that we were journeying to Genoa. Thereupon there was precipitated a most awful argument about the best road to Genoa. We could do nothing but repeat the names of the towns on our route and point to them on the map. Some thought we were right, but some demurred, and between the two we crept softly off to bed and left them fighting it out.

Italians are always vociferous in utterance and gesture. A casual remark about the weather is apt to sound and look like provocation for a duel; a friendly political argument would doubtless resemble a small riot; and an actual street fight, such as I saw in Milan, possesses all the spectacular elements of an incipient revolution. Accordingly, a good deal of vigor was expended on the discussion of the route to Genoa, but we who had raised the question were safely out of the way.

But we reached Genoa at last, in spite of the attempts of our Italian friends to tell us how to go. No reputable city ever had a viler set of suburbs than Genoa has on the northwest. Crowded, noisy, dirty and ill-paved, they present a stretch of fifteen miles which would be repulsive enough to any visitor, and is especially so to the cyclist. At last we got down into the city, and within fifteen minutes had lost ourselves so thoroughly in the maze of narrow, tangled streets that there seemed no hope of ever finding ourselves or of being found. But presently, looking down a narrow, dirty alley, I saw a broad and sparkling expanse. It was the Mediterranean. I had planned to catch my first glimpse of the Mediterranean from some open hilltop and to shout, "The sea! the sea!" like Xenophon's retreating Ten Thousand, but I was glad enough now to see it at the end of the alley and to use it as a clew out of that noisome labyrinth.

I hope this initial experience did not render me blind to the real beauties of the city, but I fail to see why Genoa should be called "The Superb." It is nobly situated on a semi-amphitheatre of hills facing the Mediterranean, and viewed from the harbor the scene is imposing, but within it is full of all corruption. There are, to be sure, some decayed palaces of still more decayed nobility and some streets whose very squalor is picturesque, but not much magnificence. Ships of all nations lie in the harbor, and sailors of all nationalities throng the water front. There is a perfect babel of tongues, and the proprietors of the drinking houses make a rapid guess at the country of each passer-by and call to him in the appropriate language, "Come right in; this is where all the Germans [French, Russians, English, Scandinavians, as the case may be] gather." They don't always hit the right language at the first guess, but that does not embarrass them. On the whole, Columbus showed excellent judgment in getting away from the place, and was even justified in wishing to put an ocean between himself and Genoa. We chanced to find a boat about ready to sail for Naples, and the impulse to go was too strong to be resisted. We had no intention of going farther south than Florence, or of taking a boat at all, but since one of the cardinal principles of traveling for pleasure is to be free from rigid plans, we forgot Florence for a time and boarded the ship for Naples.

New York Letter.

The Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad has been chosen as the official route for the Eastern delegates to the Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati. The railroad fare for the round trip will be $21.65 from New York, or one and one-third fare from any point within the trunk line territory. The New York and New England delegates will leave New York City Wednesday morning, Oct. 11th, at 8 o'clock on the Chesapeake and Ohio No. 1 (over the Pennsylvania R. R.). We will leave Philadelphia at 10:20, Baltimore at 12:10 and Washington at 2:15, and at each place we will be joined by delegates who will increase in number and the pleasure of the trip. Our train will be due at Clifton Forge at 8:55 that evening, where we will spend the night at the Gladys Inn (lodging and breakfast $1), and after a brief prayer and praise service immediately after breakfast the next morning, we will be joined by the delegates from Eastern Virginia, and if our company then numbers 125 we will have a special train and run as the second section of No. 3 to Cincinnati, reaching there at 5:15 on the afternoon of the 12th. All delegates from Eastern New York, New England and the Atlantic States southward to Virginia, are cordially invited to join our party and make the trip with us; the beautiful scenery along the way, the special services granted by the railroad and the delightful fellowship of the saints enroute to the Jubilee Convention, will make this one of the most pleasant experiences for the Disciples of Christ. Upon reading this will you kindly drop us a note saying you will join us on this journey to the Jubilee Convention?

The pulpits of New York, in common with many more or less over the civilized world proclaimed on yesterday vigorous protests against the terrible injustice of the French Republic toward Captain Dreyfus at Rennes. The Rev. Cortlandt Myers, of the Brooklyn Baptist Temple, said this injustice is the result of centuries of corrupt teaching by the Catholic priesthood of France, and that nothing better may be expected until that people are freed from their domination. D. L. Moody and others addressed a great mass meeting at the Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, last night, after which ringing resolutions were adopted condemning the French for great injustice toward Captain Dreyfus. Dr. Madison C. Peters said in a special discourse in his church that France has gone mad and that insane jealously on account of the thrift and prosperity of the Jews is back of it all. And the Rev. R. S. Dawson, who spent the summer in France, says that a combination of Jesuitism, imperialism and militarism, unscrupulously pushed to their extremeties, have paralyzed all justice in France. It does seem that the poor Hebrews bave been wanderers and outcasts upon the face of the earth since their rejection of Him who came to make them free.

Dr. W. A. Belding's many friends gave him a pleasant surprise in the form of Christian greetings by post, on the occasion of the eighty-third anniversary of his birthday, at Troy, N. Y., on Tuesday, Sept. 5th. This assault on him was planned by certain of his friends who asked many who know and love him to write words of greeting to be placed in his hand on that day. This they were glad to do in honor of his long and useful life. We count the Doctor among the fathers of the restoration movement. He knew and labored with many of them in the early days and has with his own hands baptized more than 10,000 souls into Christ. Monuments of his labors in the gospel will be found in redeemed men in almost if not all the states in the Union. All honor to these good men who toiled so faithfully to lay broad and strong foundations of the work on which we build.——Mrs. Elizabeth Flower Willis, of this city (late of Boston), will visit the West in October and November with her Grecian Art Tableaux Company, giving high-class entertainments in many Christian churches. Her entertainment is of a high order, giving both instruction and entertainment in a pleasant form. Any church wishing such work as she does will do well to communicate with her husband, Maurice Willis, 10 Wall St., New York. They are good, active disciples.

The Rev. R. S. MacArthur, of Calvary Baptist Church, in a discourse yesterday summed up the special summer's work of Christian people in this country under three characteristics: (1) The arousing of greater interest in Bible study as shown in the great meetings in tents and summer schools. Some of these pursue the study of the Bible as literature, merely, and others in a devotional spirit. (2) The emphasis placed upon the second coming of Christ, in these studies, is in Dr. MacArthur's mind a good omen, for if men will but live in view of the Lord's possible coming they are not likely to go very far astray. (3) The intensely interesting discussion, at so many places, of "the higher Christian life, or reconversion, or perfect peace," as it is variously termed. These all are to his mind bright prophecies of greater spiritual prosperity. The outlook for the fall and winter's campaign is full of glorious promise and may this be the greatest year's work in Christian history, in the upbuilding of the Redeemer's kingnom. S. T. WILLIS.

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

The beginning of F. D. Power's twenty-fifth year of service as pastor of the Vermont Avenue Church was appropriately observed Sunday, Sept. 3. The attendance was large, the decorations were elaborate and Brother and Sister Power were the recipients of many congratulations. The text of the anniversary sermon was 2 Chronicles 32:5-8. Of the orignal congregation when Bro. P. began his pastorate, twenty-four years ago, twelve were present Sunday to enjoy the happy anniversary.

The folly of waiting until one dies to dispose of property for benevolent purposes is strikingly illustrated by a case which came to my notice this summer. About three years ago a sister in Virginia died leaving a will in which was a clause which said, in effect, "After my debts are paid I wish the balance of my property and proceeds of railroad stock to be given to Foreign Missions." It was thought at the time that the Foreign Christian Missionary Society would receive several thousand dollars from the estate. There was a rapid decline in the price of the stock and certain of the heirs brought suit, contending that the Foreign Christian Missionary Society was not mentioned as the beneficiary, and that no trustees were named. The Foreign Society employed counsel to defend the will. It was shown by them that the maker of the will was a member of the body known as the Disciples of Christ and had been for years a regular contributor to the society of this body. The will was sustained and the judge directed that the fees of the lawyers of both sides should be paid from the proceeds of the estate. The money from the sale of the railroad stock, amounting to about $500, was divided among the lawyers and the Foreign Society will get the proceeds from the sale of the land. A purchaser has not yet been found for the land, and should one be found other expenses will be incurred and the sum received from the legacy will be inconsiderable. Had this sister some years ago turned this money over to the Foreign Society on the annuity plan she would have derived a larger income than she received from her investment in stocks and our society would have been in possession of a fund which would have been made a blessing to our unfortunate brothers and sisters in other lands for many generations to come.

W. J. Wright returned this week from the eastern shore of Maryland, where he dedicated two new houses of worship. The church at Snow Hill was opened for public worship Aug. 27. The building is 32x48 and complete with baptistery, robing rooms, etc. The cost, $2,000. The dedication Sunday, Sept. 3, at Goodwill was an especially happy occasion, as it was the triumph of great heroism upon the part of the small band of Disciples who worship there. In the face of much opposition the cause has been planted, and through the winter the congregation has met every Lord's day to break the loaf in a tent. The chapel is said to be a gem and was erected from plans furnished by the Church Extension Board. Both of these churches are beneficiaries of this board and afford a new claim upon liberality of Eastern Disciples for their worthy cause.

Arrangements for the excursion of our Atlantic Coast delegates to the Jubilee Convention are now complete. A one-fare rate was secured from stations in Virginia, but one and one-third fare on the certificate plan was the best we could do from Washington and points North. The excursion managers have selected the C. & O. as the official route. Delegates from New York and New England will leave New York City at 7:55, Oct. 11. Reinforced by the points of Eastern Pennsylvania and Maryland they will arrive at Washington at 1:42 P. M., when the goodly company from this city boards the F. F. V. train. As it pulls out over the Potomac River we shall begin to have a foretaste of the fellowship of the big convention. At Gordonsville we shall be met by the Richmond and East Virginia contingent. The news comes that at least 50 delegates from North Carolina will join us at Charlottesville. In order to make the entire trip in the daytime we shall stop over night at Clifton Forge, Va. The Gladys Inn, one of the finest hostelries of the Allegheny Mountains, has offered us the very low rate of $1.00 for entertainment, which includes both lodging and breakfast. W. H. Book will lead a morning prayer and song service on the platform of the station. Then we shall board a special train and have for one hundred and fifty miles scenery unsurpassed east of the Rocky Mountains. The arrival in Cincinnati will be in ample time for supper and attendance upon C. W. B. M. social at night. While in Cincinnati we shall lodge with the St. Louis and Pittsburg people at Hotel Emery. I shall be glad to mail an illustrated circular giving additional information to any one who desires it.

Actual and Formal Remission of Sins.

It is somewhat remarkable that those who attempt to muster Mr. Campbell's influence on the side of the alleged distinction between actual and formal remission of sins rely mostly upon his declaration in the McCalla debate, in 1823. They seem to have no use for his maturer view as presented in his debate with Mr. Rice, in 1843, when he affirmed this proposition: "Christian Baptism is for the Remission of Past Sins!" There is no hint in this proposition nor in Mr. Campbell's arguments in support of it that he regarded baptism as only for the remission of sins in a formal sense, while the believer had been actually forgiven before baptism. The great man would indeed have been weak in the defense of such an idea. In 1827 Mr. Campbell said in the Christian Baptist: "I proceed to show that we have the most explicit proof that God forgives sins for the name's sake of his Son, or when the name of Jesus Christ is named upon us in immersion; that in and by immersion, so soon as our bodies are put under water, at that very instant our former or old sins are all washed away, provided only that we are true believers." Again: "When Paul was immersed it was declared and understood by the parties that all his previous sins were washed away in the act of immersion. The person sent to immerse him was sent expressly by Heaven. Ananias said to him: 'Arise and be immersed, and wash away your sins, calling upon the Lord.' He obeyed and was immersed, and his sins were washed away. Had any person met Paul and Ananias when on their way to the water, and asked Paul for what he was going to be immersed, what answer could he have given, if he believed the words af Ananias, other than, I am going to be immersed for the purpose of washing away my sins?" Speaking of the eunuch's rejoicing Mr. Campbell says: "He had found what thousands before him had experienced—peace with God, from a conviction that his sins had been actually forgiven in the act of immersion." Again he says: "In the ancient gospel it was first belief in Jesus; next immersion; then forgiveness; then peace with God; then joy in the Holy Spirit." Mr. Campbell further says: "Peter, to whom was committed the keys, opened the kingdom of heaven in this manner, and made repentance, or reformation, and immersion, equally necessary to forgiveness."

Thus we clearly see what Mr. Campbell's mature views were. In the McCalla debate he was merely in the twilight of the knowledge of the plan of salvation, and his eyes were beginning to open to the light of the teaching of divine truth on the subject of the remission of sins—a rudimentary condition, out of which some brethren seem not to have been led yet.

I do not care to go over the thirteen objections that Bro. Jones urges against my former article. A few general remarks will suffice in this regard. I did not condemn philosophy in the sense of reasoning on the Scriptures for the purpose of learning their meaning. But I do object to establishing a system of philosophy upon one's idea of the fitness of things, and then bending the Scriptures and drawing out fine-spun distinctions to suit such philosophy. A philosophy that takes all the meaning out of plain statements of God's Word, leaving nothing but a "formal" hull, is the thing that I object to, and it was in view of the claims of such philosophy that I said that "human duty ends when the divine appointments are ascertained and complied with." I do not practice the catbird habit, and hence I did not swallow the "formal remission" worm that Bro. Jones brought me.

Yes, I know a "little bit" about the difference between physics and metaphysics, but I do not see that this difference helps Bro. Jones out of his difficulty. It seems to me that a cause in the strict sense of the term sustains the same essential relation to its effect in metaphysics as in physics. My dictionary—The Century—defines cause thus: "That by the power of which an event or a thing is; the principle from which an effect arises; that upon which something depends, per se; in general, anything which stands to something else in real relation analogous to the mental relation of the antecedent to the consequent of a conditional proposition." The same dictionary defines effect thus: "That which is effected by an efficient cause." If Bro. Jones uses the term cause in the sense of occasion he should say so. But if he uses it in its strict sense, then a formal effect follows its efficient cause as invariably as a physical effect follows

"I had female trouble for eight years," writes Mrs. L. J. Dennis, of 828 East College St., Jacksonville, Ills. "Words cannot express what I suffered. I sought relief among the medical profession and found none. Friends urged me to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. When I commenced taking this medicine I weighed ninety-five pounds. Now I weigh one hundred and fifty-six pounds—more than I ever weighed before. I was so bad I would lie from day to day and long for death to come and relieve my suffering. I had internal inflammation, a disagreeable drain, bearing down pain, and such distress every month but now I never have a pain—do all my own work and am a strong and healthy woman."

its efficient cause. If this is not invariably true how does Bro. Jones know that belief and repentance always produce forgiveness in the mind of God? Unless there is an inexorable law here it cannot be affirmed that this alleged cause always produces the alleged effect. And on the ground of this philosophy the penitent believer is just as sure that he is pardoned as he is that he believes and repents; and this destroys the idea that baptism gives assurauce.

I do not see that Bro. Jones' fuller quotation helps him out of the difficulty in which he involved himself in the declaration that actual remission of sins is a "psychological fact and involves psychological experience." If remission of sins is an act of the mind of God, how can it be a "psychological fact, involving psychological experience" in the mind of a man? This philosophy will bear considerable explanation at this point.

Bro. Jones accepts my suggestions about "inductive reasoning" and "Hebraism," but sees nothing in them to make against the "position held as to actual and formal remission of sins." No; they were not made with that in view. They were made to show that Bro. Jones' interpretation of Acts 10:43 is too narrow. It was a cardinal principle with Mr. Campbell that all conditions upon which remission of sins is promised must be brought together so as to constitute the premises from which a just conclusion is to be drawn; and that the mere mention of one condition implies all others. This principle Bro. Jones palpably violates. In my former article I asked him wherein "every one that believeth on him shall receive remission of sins" fails to express his idea that actual remission is promised on condition of faith alone, but I received silence for an answer. If this statement does express such idea, then "through his name" is a meaningless appendage, and remission of sins is promised without repentance! Not one word is said in the passage about repentance, and when Bro. Jones "strains and tugs" at the passage, "trying to stretch it to cover" repentance, no further straining or tugging is necessary to make it cover baptism. If "through his name" does not include the whole scope of Christ's authority I see no use for it in the passage. The quotation from B. W. Johnson does not sustain Bro. Jones' conclusion, and I feel quite sure that Bro. Johnson did not believe the chimerical distinction of actual and formal remission. Acts 10:43 simply teaches that remission of sins depends wholly upon the gospel, and not upon any part of the law of Moses.

"Repent ye and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto remission of your sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Here two things are commanded to be done unto remission of sins—repentance and baptism. Both of these things look to the same end. If baptism is unto formal remission, actual remission having already taken place, then repentance is unto formal remission, actual remission having already taken place; which puts actual remission before repentance. There is no escape from this conclusion unless by straining and tugging and stretching a plain statement of the Word of God, the rules of grammar and the recognized principles of exegesis can be broken into smithereens! But what right have plain statements of the Word of God, rules of grammar, and principles of exegsis to stand in the way of a "sound philosophy." If the people addressed by Peter received actual remission before baptism, why was the gift of the Holy Spirit deferred till after baptism?

John 3:5 puts being born of water—baptism—between the kingdom of God and those who would enter thereinto. What is the relation of a person actually forgiven before baptism to the kingdom of God? If a person actually forgiven before baptism is not in the kingdom of God, where is he? This "sound philosophy" will have to construct an actual kingdom for those actually forgiven before baptism, and a formal kingdom for those formally forgiven after baptism. This is decidedly a formal philosophy.

If this philosophy be correct, and baptism is only for formal remission of sin, our contention with the sectarian world has truly been "much ado about nothing." There is nothing in formal remission worth contending for, and the Campbell and Rice debate on the subject should never have been held. In view of this philosophy Alexander Campbell, John Smith, D. W. Pritchett, J. T. Johnson, S. E. Jones, D. R. Lucas, J. S. Sweeney and scores of others have simply been beating the air in contending that baptism is for the remission of sins. If this philosophy is to be accepted we should make a polite bow to the sectarian world, offer a profound apology for our former conduct, take it all back and be good! Then, when another modern philosophy concerning the work of the Holy Spirit is accepted there will not be much left of the Reformation but the dry bones of a lifeless skeleton.

The Rochester Convention.

The forty-second annual convention of the churches of Christ in Minnesota is a matter of history. It convened at Rochester August 16 to 21. It was a spiritual uplift from beginning to end. We heard no one sighing for the "good old times," but all remarked what a feast for the soul we were having.

Last year was a fruitful year. The report of Bro. Gadd, our former corresponding secretary, was listened to with much interest and rejoicing. Over 500 additions during the year, four new points opened up, society practically out of debt and all things looking upward. Bro. Gadd did us splendid work. To know Bro. Gadd is to love him. The work of the present secretary is made easier and more effective because of Bro. Mellen's and Bro. Gadd's untiring effort in this work heretofore, for which our state can never discharge her obligations of gratitude.

We are attempting large things for this year. "Minnesota for Christ" is our motto. "One thousand souls for Christ in 1900" is our watchword. This means consecration of life and means. Brethren of Minnesota, the destiny of the cause we so truly love is in our hands. A feeling of personal, individual interest and responsibility on the part of each member is the one thing that will bring the work to the position we so much desire for it.

Oh, what wonderful opportunities are now before us; and brethren, has not God called us to the mission for which we profess to exist? This work must be done. If we are derelect in duty, then surely God will raise up another people to do his will. Shall we fail on the eve of victory? The best time to preach our plea in Minnesota that we have ever known is now. "Middle walls of partition" are breaking down because of their own inward decay. The world is seeking and longing for the very plea we are presenting, and new points are pleading for the work to be opened up, until we are nervously anxious because of want of means wherewith to plant the gospel in these new fields. Here, brethren, is where your apportionment is needed. Do you realize that those few dollars that you still owe on last year's apportionment might be one means of planting churches or adding many souls to one already established, had you sent it in? It is not too late yet; you know how much it is. Send it to A. T. Goldberg, 411 Selby Ave., St. Paul, Minn., without delay. Act promptly, brethren. Lack of money means loss of time; loss of time means loss of souls. Come to the front fulfilling your obligations, then hold your state officers responsible for larger things. Don't, however, demand great success until you have done your part.

A MOVEMENT ALL ALONG THE LINE

is what your secretary pleads for now. Every preacher to his post, every member into line, to charge in one solid plan; and shoulder to shoulder, carrying, not weapons of death, but messages of love!

My brother or sister, are you a straggler? Come to the van and let us plan great things, do great things, expect great things and receive great things.

Missionary Heroism.

Dr. Susie C. Rijnhart, whose experiences in Tibet have roused intense interest and sympathy wherever they are known, has reached America and is spending a few weeks with friends in Tacoma, Wash. She had a threefold object in crossing the ocean: to regain the physical vigor lost during her trying journey in the interior of Tibet, to visit family and friends, and to interest the Christian Churches of America in the evangelization of Tibet. It is her purpose to attend the Jubilee Convention, and her hope is by personal appeals to secure a pledge for the taking up of this much-needed work. Having spent nearly five years among the Tibetans Dr. Rijnhart is thoroughly conversant with the needs, the difficulties and the opportunities in the "Forbidden Land."

Dr. Rijnhart, with her husband, who had previously had three years' experience on the borders of Tibet, sailed from Tacoma in October, 1894.

The couple crossed China proper and located at Kumbum, where there are about 3,500 Buddhist priests. There they were soon surrounded by "war's alarms." A Mohammedan rebellion broke out and the imperial forces, 40,000 strong, sent to quell it, were stationed within 10 miles of Kumbum. By invitation of the commander, the R.'s spent three months looking after their sick and wounded, thereby gaining the good will of soldiers and residents. The lamas even offered them the special protection of residence in the lamasery, where in case of a raid by the insurgents, the priests would congregate to defend their sacred temple with their lives.

Leaving Kumbum in the summer of '96 the R.'s removed to Tankar, a frontier town of great importance because of the passing through of the caravans going between Pekin and Lhasa, the capital of Tibet. Here also they made many friends, and when they left on the expedition that bereft Dr. Rijnhart of husband and child they were followed a long distance by weeping natives, who begged them to remain.

During '96 and '97 the R.'s made short trips into the interior, doing medical work, distributing Tibetan gospels and preaching Christ. They desired to find a home as far in the interior as possible, and May 20, 1898, they left Tankar. They were accompanied by three servants, were provided with pack and riding horses, tents and household goods, and carried stores sufficient for a two year's stay.

After they had gone a few days' journey in the uninhabited country two of the servants deserted them, but they pressed on, although their progress was slower than before. On Aug. 22 their baby-boy, 14 months old, died of dentition and the effects of the very high altitude. As the child had not been ill the shock almost prostrated the parents and was scarcely less felt by their faithful servant, who had been devoted to the child from its birth. The drug box was emptied, lined with white muslin by the sorrowing mother and the little form laid tenderly therein and covered with wild flowers by the servant. A grave was prepared by father and "boy," and there at the foot of Tang-la Pass, a Christian father gave Christian burial to his infant son. In their bereavement the parents found comfort in the thought that their precious child will be the first of the church in Tibet to rise to meet the Lord at his coming.

Mr. and Mrs. Rijnhart finally reached Ugachuka, a few days' journey from Lhasa, but the officials refused to allow them to proceed further, or even to remain there during the winter. After prayerful consideration they decided to go toward the Sze-Chuan border, hoping to be able to spend the winter in some Tibetan village on the road. The officials gave them fresh horses, some provisions (they had been robbed of a part of their supplies and several horses) and furnished three guides, who were to accompany them to a monastery of 15 days' journey distant, or further if required. Their own servant left for his home on the western border according to agreement made at Tankar.

When within a half-day's journey of the monastery, as they supposed, the party was attacked by robbers, one guide and three horses shot and five other horses driven off. The guides deserted them and they were left alone with one miserable old horse. The following day they started out to find the lamasery, taking with them what bedding and eatables the horse could carry and Mr. Rijnhart having a heavy load on his back. They climbed hills and rocks and passed almost insurmountable barriers, crossed a river, etc., until brought to a standstill high up on a hill, sloping down to the riverside. With the telescope they discovered tents far down on the opposite side, and it was decided that as the horse could not swim another stream, Mr. R. should cross and go for help. The tent people had always been kind and friendly, and it was only roving bands that gave Mr. and Mrs. R. any anxiety, and that not a fear of personal violence, but the loss of horses and supplies.

On Sept. 26 Mr. R. left his wife and went down in the stream He went half way across, then suddenly turned back and shouted something up to her from the bank, after which he disappeared behind some rocks. She did not understand his words, but supposing he had chosen a better crossing place, she watched the stream and opposite bank. Finally, not seeing him, she looked about and saw a flock of sheep beyond the rocks where she had last seen him. She waited his return, supposing he had gone for help to the owners of the sheep. Night came on and he did not return; the next day passed and still no signs of him. "I had to lean very heavily on God to keep from being overanxious," she wrote.

Mrs R. stayed around that locality several days, but could learn nothing of the fate of her husband. Having made her way down the stream she attracted the attention of the tent people on the opposite side and was taken across by them. During the following two months she traveled, "without tent or dog," alone with natives, living upon barley meal, butter and tea bought from them. Yet, during this trying journey, such was the care of the loving Father, that not a finger was laid upon her, for personal violence, except by two drunken Tibetans. One of these held a drawn sword over her head and ordered her to dismount, but turned away without doing her any injury to join companions who were pilfering her eatables.

Nov. 26 Mrs. Rijnhart reached Ta-chieu-lu, on the Sze-Chuan border of China, bereft of everything but the garments she wore and her medical diplomas. Handerchiefs, towels, surgical instruments, everything but her Tibetan dress, had to be left or was stolen. Even her Bible and certificate of church membership were gone. At the mission station she found friends to minister to her needs, and as soon as her case was known in America, funds began to be raised for her necessities. Already there is the nucleus for the establishment of the Charles Carson Mission, for which she and her husband began to pray soon after the death of their son, as their chosen memorial to his memory.

Mrs. R. laid her case before the authorities; the Dutch and British ministers used their influence to hasten an investigation, and an expedition has been sent to the scene of Mr. R.'s disappearance. Although Dr. R believes that he was murdered, there is still hope in the minds of many friends that he may have been as wonderfully preserved as she, and that the reunited missionaries may yet "see of the travail of their souls and be satisfied" in the establishment of a Church of Christ in Tibet. The Word of the Lord will not return unto him void, and the gospels scattered farther in the interior than Protestant missionary has ever before penetrated will surely be a "lamp to the feet and light to the path" of some heathen souls, leading them into the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

The tribulations through which she has passed have not robbed Dr. Rijnhart of her faith in the goodness and mercy of God. His praise is continually in her mouth for all he has done for her, and for what she has been able to do in sowing the seeds of truth.

The R.s were not in connection with any missionary society, but were entirely dependent upon their medical work and upon God for their support. As they undertook great things for God, they expected great things of God, and he never failed them.

Iowa Letter: Convention Proceedings.

Tuesday afternoon was devoted to the general boards. The Benevolent Association had its interests presented by Joel Brown, one of Iowa's own men and the secretary of this good work. On the walls of the church he had photos and other reminders of the Home in St. Louis. His heart is as big as his body and is wholly devoted to this work. And what is more, his devotion is not offensive, but beautiful.

Bro. Ogle, of Missouri, spoke on the subject of Church Extension. He gave a diagram showing the amount given each year by our state and the amounts granted by that board to our churches. It made us open our eyes. Our gifts are so small and our drafts are so much larger. It would be, not only ingratitude for Iowa to neglect this board, but also suicide.

Next came B. F. Clay of the Foreign Board. He eulogized Iowa for its past interest and liberality in this direction. His reference to the liberality of our state in the past was well deserved. Iowa has sometimes allowed other boards to suffer, but in recent years never the F C. M. S

W. F. Cowden spoke for the American or Home Board. "Our growth in this country," said he, "is the most marvelous since the days of the apostles. It is the wonder of the religious world." He then showed that but a corner of this ripe field had been reaped! And he asked if world-wide missions did not also include America, and especially the unoccupied parts of the United States? Neglect of our own country puts off the salvation and evangelization of the world.

The writer, on very short notice, spoke on the theme of Ministerial Relief. The evening service by the C. W. B. was written up in the letter of last week. W. W. Rumsey was the speaker.

On Wednesday morning Secretary B. S. Denny presented the report of the state board. The report is for but ten and a half months—a short year, because of shifting the 1898 convention into October.

SUMMARY OF WORK DONE.

Seven hundred and thirty-five were added to the churches, of whom about 410 were baptized; $700 was secured on the annuity plan; $1598 04 was collected on salary by the workers in the field; $2,524 75 was pledged for state work of all kinds. The work in organizing is as follows: Seven congregations, two Sunday-schools, five Y. P. S. C. E.s and one Bethany Reading Circle; $12,341 94 was raised at dedications and for other local purposes. This is not up to the average for Iowa. Partly on account of the wretched weather of the winter and spring, and partly because the board was hampered by cumbersome plans imposed by the previous convention. It seems impossible for a majority of the delegates ever to learn that an experienced board, with hands free, can make $4,000 do from 30 to 40 per cent. more work than is possible with hands tied. Another lesson which should be learned and put into the constitution is the exceeding unwisdom of turning out the whole board at any one time. Iowa did it some ten years ago and came within one of doing so this year. Experienced men in such places should never be changed simply to pass the honor around. When a change is deemed necessary not more than two should be retired at one time. I am elected president of the new board, and must further chide the good men who did it. Your convention in 1898 put upon the board an immature plan of work, they could not make it fruitful, then you retired them. I believe you did not mean it so, but it looks bad to an onlooker. At this writing it is not known whether the new year is starting free from debt or not. It is hoped that the fall campaign will have no debt to impede it.

The other officers of the new board are as follows: A. E. Cory, Oskaloosa, vice-president; W. A. Crusinberry, Des Moines, recording secretary; J. B. Burton, Des Moines, treasurer, and B S. Denny, Des Moines, corresponding secretary. The new board will meet the first Monday in each month. A called meeting will be held Sept. 18. The remainder of Wednesday forenoon was devoted to a symposium on state missions. The following persons participated: W. A. Moore, of Webster City; S. B. Ross, of Oelwein, Edgar Price, of Red Oak; A. F. Sanderson, of Keokuk; W. J. Hastie, of Altoona; J. P. Rowlison, D. D. Boyle and C. M. Wickham, our three district evangelists. H. R. Trickett, Bloomfield, gave a spiritual address. The afternoon was wholly devoted to "Church Problems." T. F. Odenweller and others spoke on missionary boards and offerings. G. L. Brokaw, of the Christian Index, discussed the question of "Church Discipline." J. M. Hoffmann's theme was "Money and the Kingdom." "The Protracted Meeting" was handled by L. H. Humphreys, Atlantic, while Pastor I. N. McCash led an open conference on "Church Management." In the evening Pastor H. O. Breeden delivered an address, the substance of which I hope to put into an Iowa Letter soon. The Daily News spoke of it as follows: "It was one of the finest efforts of the week, Dr. Breeden being one of the most eloquent speakers of the city. He spoke last evening upon 'Iowa Our Field.' It was a careful review of this state in its several aspects—the material, the intellectual and the religious."

On Thursday morning Francis Murphy, the temperance apostle, occupied a half hour. He helped Iowa in the great campaign for Prohibition in 1882. Those who heard him this week will never forget his words.

"No truth so low that he will not crown;
No wrong so tall that he will not cown."

He spoke of us as "this magnificent branch of the living army of God." His picture of Garfield at his inauguration kissing his mother was a bit of real oratory. W. B. Clemer, of Sloan, gave a fine address on 'Bible school Methods and How to Operate Them." Superintedent D. A. Wickizer, in his address, urged that the university put a competent man into the field to hold institutes and to lecture each week to the university students. "Primary Work" was the theme of a paper by Mrs. Sherman Hill, of Hampton. It was heartily voted for publication. In another letter I will give the remainder of the Sunday-school department and the other unmentioned lines of work.

The I. C. C. has made two new departures: they take money on the annuity plan and have a double set of officers—one for the annual convention and one for the work of the year. J. M Hoffmann, of Boone, will preside over the convention of 1900. S. T. Martin, of Mason City, is first vice president; W. B Crewdson, of Corning, is second vice president; C. E. Wells, of Stuart, and J P Stake, of Webster City, are the secretaries.

A. M. HAGGARD.

The Pastor's Home Revival.

I am sure that no preacher can be seriously and deeply thinking how to do the people of his church and community the greatest good but will be better by including the writings of John in his next year's work.

I speak especially of John's Revelation. For not only his own church, but all churches of the common faith of Christ are to be helped by by it, and through them the entire community must receive the best results.

A refreshing as from the presence of the Lord, so much needed in so many churches, lies within the book, ready to be struck into fire.

Many pastors are asking deeply in their hearts, "What can I do to awaken my church to a deep religious interest?" Many have tried the revival meeting method, and are disappointed, and even sore. The pasteboard conversions have been a disappointment, and much in the mechanical methods has hardened many.

A deeper and profounder work must be done; a work that causes the fountain of spiritual life to flow out from the hearts of the members themselves Some have tried to revive by a rehearsal of our earlier preaching, but in vain. It can never again produce its first effect. Let all faithful pastors consider that if Protestantism, which has proved so great an uplift to the world, was evolved out of the letters of Paul to the Romans and Galatians which the pope and church had practically discarded, what vast possibilities may lie hidden in the great book which in so large a measure has been discarded by the Protestants.

It is a remarkable fact that the prejudice against the Revelation of John is such largely because it is supposed to deal with the question of the conversion of the Jews and their return to Jerusalem. It seems a surprise, but true all the same, that John nowhere touches these questions. It is also true that whereas, so many suppose John's Revelation is vague, it is the most vital, the most fervent of Holy Scripture. It is freest of all those diseases of Romanism and Protestantism—ritualism, literalism, rationalism, etc., etc. It is the fountain-head of true revivalism, of a deep, sincere revival, that does not easily run to seed in any of those isms and formalities which fetter the soul and hinder the life in the slavery of legalism and eternal forms.

There has been the least debating and disputing over John's writings, and the highest spiritual results always and everywhere follow their study. John never makes anything of official authority in the church, and leaves no room for official officiousness. He does not even call himself an apostle or by any other official name in all his writings.

I earnestly invite the attention of all pastors and evangelists and teachers to such facts as I am here stating and to consider what a vast gain may come from their taking up a subject so much neglected, so much needed. How do we know but that our Father may have designed that last book for just such a time as this?

I believe it was so designed, and that the world is coming to see it, and that a great and helpful and comforting dispensation is coming from it.

Every earnest pastor who is now looking anxiously into the fall and winter's work before him should consider well whether a series of sermons on the Apocalypse would not prove of untold value to his people and community. There is no other book the people are so glad to hear from, and the moment they find there is something new to offer they are alert and enthusiastic.

With many there is an ignorant prejudice resting entirely upon the unsatisfactory attempts at interpretation. But that is easily overcome now, and it is time we should more fully justify our claim that we take the Bible and the whole Bible, and that other claim we make, that where the Bible speaks we speak, and we should no longer refuse to preach the one book, that says more for its own value than any other.

It alone promises a blessing upon those who read it, and a curse to those who pervert it by shortening or adding to it. It does not presuppose we should entirely neglect it. A new movement all along the line might be awakened and a revival of such depth as has not been seen for half a century. The experiment I am sure will convince any preacher who will give himself fervently to the attempt, and I would cite every one to the suggestion that he prepare for such a course of sermons and have it in his program for the coming year's work.

It would not be difficult to open a correspondence for mutual assistance or to get space in some leading paper for questions and answers full of helpful suggestion.

The time is surely ripe and there is already a deeper interest in the writings of John than ever before, and especially of his most praised book, the Revelation. J. S. HUGHES.

St. Louis, Mo., August 30, 1899.

Notes and News.

Dedication.

A new church was dedicated at Antioch, O., July 16, 1899. Size, 58x36, two rooms; the auditorium seated with circular oak pews; cost, $2,750. The exercises were conducted by Evangelist Chas. Reign Scoville, of Butler, Ind., under whose magnetic power a debt of $1,150 was raised and church dedicated free of incumbrance. J. W. LENTZ.

Basket Meeting.

The annual basket meeting of the Christian churches in Pike County, Ill., was held near Pittsfield on Thursday, the 14th. Levi Marshall and E. J. Lampton, of Missouri, were the speakers The officers for the coming year are R. F. Thrapp, president; J. D. Dahney, vice-president; W. E. Spicer, secretary, and R. T. Hicks, treasurer. R.

Dedication.

The new church at Summitville, Ia., five miles from Keokuk, will be dedicated Sunday, Oct. 1st, by A. F. Sanderson, pastor of the Keokuk Church. Only a few weeks ago 45 members at Keokuk were granted letters to organize a church at Summitville, and by their faith and energy, and with the help of the Keokuk brethren they will soon occupy their own beautiful house of worship. It will seat over 200, and has robing rooms and baptistery. It will cost $1,200. P.

A Voice from Alabama.

Tuscaloosa, Ala., is a most beautiful city with 8,000 or 10,000 people, seat of State University, State Insane Asylum, has four railroad outlets, is on navigable river, but has no Church of Christ and but very few Disciples. Bro. Dale preached a few sermons years ago; further than this I can hear of no effort having ever been put forth here by our people. But I am preaching daily to great throngs of eager hearers whom we cannot begin to seat under a large tent which has been pitched on the corner of two of the most prominent streets. The tent is comfortably seated, well lighted, the singing is fine and the attention is perfect. The older bodies seem to be doing no good and I have never had such prospects for a great victory for truth. We have the power and the right spirit. The meeting will continue at least six weeks, say till Oct. 12. Pray for us, brethren; and if you could send a dollar with a word of good cheer it would bring you sweet fellowship in establishing the cause in this most important but hitherto neglected center.

A Prosperous Church.

One of the most important fields in the state of Ohio is South Lima. What is called "South Lima" includes a population of about 7,000 people. This population is a part of a city of about 30,000. Lima is one of the best towns in Ohio and is destined to become a splendid city. While the city is making great development along temporal lines, our people are doing great things along spiritual lines. Our church is young and began its work with great obstacles. The membership numbered but a handful; the location was bad and the general environments made it a hard struggle. But better times have come; under the leadership of Bro. Clarence Mitchell the audiences have grown to the largest in the city. We are building a beautiful brick church and have had nearly 100 additions since last October. During the year we have held two short revivals—one with Bro. Mitchell and the other with Bro. Mitchell and J. V. Updike. Any church needing a good, thoroughgoing revival can make no mistake in calling Bro. Updike as leader. Bro. Chapman, late pastor of the Wayne Street Church of this city, preached for us one Lord's day. Bro. Chapman is a strong preacher and did good work while with our sister church.

Missouri State Convention.

If you are coming to the Missouri State Convention, Jefferson City, Oct. 2-5, send your name to me at once. Report at Christian Church on East Main Street. Parties arriving on the Missouri Pacific can easily walk to the church. Those arriving on the C. & A. or the M. K. & T., will take bus; tickets include bus fare.

Hotels give rate of $1.50 per day, 35 cents per meal. Boarding houses $1.00 per day, 25 per meal.

Don't fail to send your name.

J. P. PINKERTON.

Attention, Knasas!

This issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST brings to our great brotherhood of Kansas the "Last Convention Call." September 25 to 29 is the time. Topeka is the place. The indications fully assure us that this will be our greatest convention, in attendance at least. May we make it mean all in our power for the extension of Christ's kingdom in Kansas. If your church has not yet selected delegates, do so Lord's day 24th, without fail. Collect and send at once by mail or with your delegates all back apportionments. Half fare from all points in Kansas.

At our state convention we will effect the final arrangements for our Jubilee delegation to Cincinnati. We now hope to secure one-half fare from Kansas City. We will have a special car out of Kansas City over one of the best routes to Cincinnati without change. The Kansas party will leave Kansas City sometime Wednesday, October 11th. We will mail soon a circular of instructions to all who have sent in their names. We would be glad also to have the names of all who desire a thirty-day limit to their tickets. This is the religious convention of a century. It will be worth much sacrifice to be there.

Remember Topeka and Cincinnati.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

Of the Marion County meeting much could be said were space plentiful. It was not very well attended, but those present declare it one of their best meetings. The character of addresses was above the average, and the giving for missions and benevolence was splendid, the Orphans' Home receiving nearly $100. Col. W. H. Dulany took a life membership and furnished a bed, while the widow of Col D. M. Dulany gave the Home $25, and Mrs. Geo. Mahan, daughter, gave the Home $15. In our work the responses were prompt, and the Mt. Zion school, with their characteristic kindness to us, paid for the year in full, thanks to L. C. Hendren and Miss Nettie Wood. Col. Dulany ordered charts for the Hannibal school, as did others for their schools. Levi Marshall and the Hannibal church made all perfectly at home and gave us every entertainment possible. The report of the board was good and the pledging insures the same good work for another year.

J. D. Dillard is doing a work for the Orphans' Home that is not robbing any other mission and demonstrates him the man for the place. We all rejoice in it.

Now comes New Florence, remitting the first payment on its apportionment for the state Bible-school work, sending word the other will follow as soon as due. This is the first offering from them, and we are grateful for it.

The Schuyler County meeting was not what it would have been had T. A. Hedges been at the helm, but hoping to work in others this year, he did other work and so did the others, and not a single congregation was notified of the annual meeting except by the press. People were put on the program without their knowing it, and all around the work failed. The Glenwoood brethren went to no little trouble in arranging seats and other conveniences in the park, but none save Glenwood and Lancaster, with two exceptions, were present to enjoy it. In the home of my friends, Byron Spencer and wife, I had every kindness shown me, while the brethren have something to help our work. But I did not strike the Glenwood folks right, and the others were not there, and so did not get enough to near pay railroad fare. In the Lancaster school we have a true and constant co-operant, thanks to T. A. Hedges.

The evangelists are now putting in their time holding meetings, raising money and shaping up the work for winter, and we hope to report funds for at least 12 new houses before the bad weather sets in, and to do this I have promised their salaries promptly every first of each month, and to do this, the schools must remit to this office. Our "surplus" is more than used up, brethren, and I trust you will kindly see that your schools remit their dues in answer to the second quarter's call, now going out. Especially the larger schools.

Are you going to the general convention, and are you going to enjoy the Bible-school Day, and are you not going to do something for the Home and Foreign works? Let evey Bible-school teacher, as well as all the officers, give one dollar each, as Mrs. Davis and I intend doing. No matter what you may have done, send the dollar.

The Randolph County meeting was good, though in the midst of the Moberly fair, and it was well attended. By the absence of some on program, I had a fine opportunity to present our work, and the Antioch friends paid their apportionment in full, and did it so kindly. J. A. Grimes was the president at the time of his death, and the convention passed appropriate resolutions as becometh saints. No work ever had truer or better friend than the work of God in all its departments had in Jimmie Grimes, whom God had taken home, and whose life will long reflect the spirit of the Christ of God among men.

W. M. Featherston made a good president and the Antioch brethren seemed to think nothing too good for their brethren in the Lord. He will repay them for it.

Railroad Rates to State Convention, Jefferson City, Oct. 2-5, 1899.

ATTENTION, EVERYBODY!

The Missouri Pacific, M. K. & T., C. & A., Wabash, Burlington, Port Arthur (south of Pattonsburg), Frisco, Fort Scott and Memphis have all kindly made a rate of one fare for the round trip. Tickets on sale Oct. 2, 3, 4, good to return till and including Oct. 6. Ask your agent several days beforehand if he has his instructions; if not, tell him to ask for them. If any agent on any of these roads will not sell at above rate, but charges full fare, be sure and take his receipt and we will secure rebate. Mind your instructions.

State Mission Notes.

Only one more chance to tell you about the state convention, then it will be here. I have received three invitations to engage in work, in as many parts of the state, from three preachers, any one of whom you would suppose would know of the state convention—during the period of time covered by that convention. This shows either a woeful ignorance or an inexcusable lack of interest, and for fear that some one else may not know I put it down reght here. The state convention meets at

JEFFERSON CITY, OCTOBER 2-5, 1899.

Remember, the entertainment is free to all who come, and they are coming from every part of the state. Don't forget that it is useless to ask me to come to your place during that week. I will be in Jefferson City from Monday at two o'clock until after the close of the last session on Thursday night, and this is the place for every preacher in the state during that time. If it is at all possible for us to be there we have no anywhere else at that time. You owe it to yourself, you owe it to your congregation, you owe it to the brotherhood to attend the state gathering. A church was writing to me in search of a pastor. I recommended a certain brother; they immediately replied that they did not want him; that he did not attend the conventions. I hope the churches more and more will demand this, and then that the will demand of the churches that they send representatives also to these gatherings. In other religious bodies it is considered an honor to be a delegate or visitor to such gatherings. Why not with us? It is the King's business and should be a blessed convocation of the Lord's children.

POSSIBLE BUSINESS

A LAST WORD

about the contribution. I have written to one hundred preachers whose churches have not yet given to state missions. That seems incredible, yet it is true; but listen: only four out of that hundred have replied so far. One said they could not, the others said the would, God bless them.

I am now in the physician's hands. He says I must rest, that I am utterly overworked and broken down. I can't rest until after the convention is over, but you can help me now by sending at once your contribution for state work to this office. It is the anxiety that the year shall show substantial gains and we shall report all debts paid that is telling on me; relieve me of this strain and I will soon be well.

BE SURE

and bring the convention to the attention of the people. We have sent out to 500 churches a nice poster to post up before the convention. But this is not enough; talk to them about it, about the railroad rates, the program, the entertainment. Urge upon them the duty, the privilege, the joy of going, and right then is a splendid time to call their attention to the need of an offering and take it at once.

Everything is indicating a great convention; don't neglect to send your name to J. P. Pinkerton if you want a place to stop during the convention. He is anxious to hear from you; common courtesy demands that you shall write him. Once more, don't forget the offering. Yours in His name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

5 DROPS (TRADE MARK.)

THE WORLD'S GREATEST ROBBER

But all for the Good of Suffering Humanity, for it Robs them of Diseases.

RHEUMATISM, HAY FEVER, ETC.

By the never-failing merit and efficacy of "5 DROPS" many diseases have been robbed of their terror, and the grave of many of its victims. Through the prompt and decisive action of "5 DROPS," thousands have been snatched from the jaws of death and restored to health, happiness and friends. Many a person has been told by the attending physician that they were beyond the reach of medical science. Yet to-day, they live and are a walking advertisement for this remedy, and are likely to reach a ripe old age. This may sound a little skeptical to some, yet it is true, most positively true. We make no exaggerated statement in behalf of this remedy; we hold out no false promises to the sick and afflicted. But we say to all of them, it does not matter how many doctors have treated you, how many remedies you have tried, how long you have suffered, if you have any of the following diseases, you can positively be cured by the use of "5 DROPS," for it never fails: RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, SCIATICA, BACKACHE, ASTHMA, HAY-FEVER, CATARRH, TOOTHACHE, NERVOUSNESS, SLEEPLESSNESS, NERVOUS and NEURALGIC HEADACHES, HEART WEAKNESS, EARACHE, CROUP, MALARIA, DROPSY, CREEPING NUMBNESS, BRONCHITIS, LA GRIPPE, and kindred diseases. So proof positive are we of the effectiveness and highly curative properties of "5 DROPS," backed by the many thousands of testimonials received from grateful persons from every part of the country, that we are fully warranted in saying that "5 DROPS" is daily curing more people than all the remedies on the market combined, and in cases of Rheumatism, it is curing more than all the doctors combined, for they cannot cure chronic Rheumatism. "5 DROPS" can and does cure it, regardless of how severe, or how long standing. "5 DROPS" is not alone the best remedy on earth, but is also the cheapest, for a dollar bottle contains 300 doses. Price per bottle, $1.00, prepaid by mail or express, or six for $5.00. Sample bottles, 25c., but for the next thirty (30) days will send sample bottles for 10c. Agents wanted. Address

Last Reminder for Foreign Missions.

Comparing the receipts for Foreign Missions for the week ending Sept. 15th with the corresponding week, 1898, shows the following:

	1898	1899	Gain
Amount,	$355.22	$2,346 47	$1,991.25

This was a good week. The whole amount received to date is $134,773.26. It will require $15,226.74 to bring us up to $150,000. We are not without hope of reaching it. The time is short, however, and what is done must be done quickly.

Remember, the books of the Foreign Society close for the current missionary year, Sept. 30th, 1899.

This is our last reminder for this missionary year. We are still hoping to be able to report $150,000 at the great Jubilee Convention. This can be done if generous friends will act at once.

Illinois Headquarters, Cincinnati.

The committee on state headquarters cannot undertake to do the corresponding for one hundred and more persons from Illinois, who may happen to stop at the Palace Hotel, which has been selected as headquarters. If you want a room at the Palace do your own corresponding with W. H. Maxwell, Manager Palace Hotel, Cincinnati, O., and tell him the kind of accommodations your desire. When you have made satisfactory arrangements with the manager of the hotel, then we would be glad to have your name as one who has secured a room at the state headquarters. The rates are $1 a day for lodging, and $2 for lodging and meals. Apply at once.

I have just had the following word from Mr. Maxwell: "Our rooms at $1.00 and $2.00 rate for only two people in a room have all been engaged, and at present we can only arrange at this rate to put the ladies together and the gentlemen together, with three or four in a room."

MASSACHUSETTS.

Brockton, Sept. 12.—Three additions last Lord's day.—G. A. REINL.

NEBRASKA.

Sterling, Sept. 11.—Lawrence Wright closed a successful meeting here. Bro. Wright's ability as a lecturer is a great help in a meeting. Seven additions; six by baptism, one by statement.—T. A. MAXWELL.

MICHIGAN.

Mt. Pleasant, Sept. 12.—Wife and I closed a two weeks' meeting at Gilmore, Mich., resulting in nine confessions; two were not immersed because of parental objections. Some heard the gospel for the first time and witnessed for the first time a baptism by immersion. Seed has been sown in many "good and honest hearts."—MEADE E. DUTT, evangelist.

TEXAS.

Ballinger, Sept. 10.—One baptism at our last appointment at Brownwood (Sept. 3). The work at both Brownwood and Ballinger is in splendid condition.—HENRY A. MAJOR.

Texarkanas Sept. 15.—Three additions to this church last Lord's day; two by letter, one baptism. Our hot weather is now broken, so that we hope for a revival in all our church interests.—T. F. WEAVER.

KENTUCKY.

Lexington, Sept. 11.—I am in a meeting here. This is a mission church on the South Side. Young Bro. Russell is pastor. The meetings are held in a tent. My address for September is 444 E. Main Street. Closed a good meeting at Hillsboro, O., just before coming here. Raised the old church debts so that the Church Extension loan can be paid off this year.—J. V. UPDIKE.

Mayslick, Sept. 13.—There were three additions, September 10 to the Church of Christ at this place.—GEO. P. TAUBMAN, minister.

KANSAS.

Winfield, Sept. 9.—We held a meeting at Atlanta during August which resulted in 27 additions to the church. Lot purchased and building and soliciting committees at work to raise funds and build a home. This church will soon be enrolled among the aggressive churches of Kansas.—P. H. GUY.

Waterville, Sept. 8.—The six weeks' revival meetings at Waterville, by Sister Clara Hazelrigg, closed August 14, with 35 added to the church; 22 by baptism and 13 by letter. After resting a week Mrs. Hazelrigg commenced a series of meetings at Blue Rapids where a church and Bible-school have already been established.—E. R. CALLITHAN.

TENNESSEE.

Bells, Sept. 7.—The writer began a meeting at Bells the second Sunday in July which resulted in 21 additions. From Bells he went to Alamo and continued a week with 20 additions and from there to Crockett Mills, where there were 88 additions. These meetings were held without a day's vacation and in the same community. Our tent meeting here is getting along nicely.—J. L. HADDOCK.

Springfield.—Just closed a meeting in Springfield, six additions; four by baptism and two from the Baptists.—LOVIS D. RIDDELL.

Chattanooga, Sept. 14.—I have just closed a meeting of eight days at Arlington. Eight were added to the church. Seven baptisms and one from the Baptists.—W. M. TAYLOR.

INDIANA.

Greencastle, Sept. 12.—Two added by statement at Sommerset Church last Lord's day.—L. V. BARBEE.

Clinton, Sept. 14.—Held a short meeting at New Maysville with six confessions; four of these from heads of families. F. W. Lough, of Waynetown, was my singer, and his work greatly pleased pastor and congregation.—OSCAR E. KELLEY.

Franklin, Sept. 11.—Yesterday at our regular meeting at Hartsville a young man made the confession. A. S. Orcutt, of Indianapolis, helped me in a short meeting at Christian Chapel, which resulted in eight baptisms. Bro. Orcutt did most of the preaching. He is a good man, and an excellent preacher of the New Testament gospel.—WILLIS M. CUNNINGHAM.

ALABAMA.

Birmingham.—Two additions here last Lord's day and one Sunday before last. I held a meeting in August at New Hope and Plantersville with 22 additions, and one at Bethel, Ga., with three additions.—O. P. SPIEGEL.

Deer Park, Sept. 12.—Closed the meeting at Merrill, Miss., last Sunday night after 16 days with 10 people who will become charter members of the church I expect to organize there next Sunday. Three baptisms, six (already baptized) from the Methodists and one from the Baptists. There was not a single member of the Christian Church at Morrill when meeting began, and as this was my first meeting as a preacher and almost my first sermon, I feel like singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." I will locate at Merrill for the present.—DE BYFORD MCCANON.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Brookings, Sept. 4.—The tent meetings at Brookings, conducted by the writer and Miss Pearl Wiley, closed last Sunday with an organization effected numbering over 40. One or two have not yet been received who came out during the meeting. Three elders, two deacons, a church clerk and a superintendent of Sunday-school were elected. They will not build, as two or three church buildings in the place are for sale. The court-house will probably be used until a building is bought. Brookings is the most desirable city in South Dakota to establish our plea, as it has the State College of Agriculture. It is a town of 3,000 people, the county-seat of Brookings County, and is one of the most beautiful towns in the Northwest. A pastor will take charge of the work there at once. We are now in another very promising meeting at Defiance, Ia., their second meeting there this year. Address them there for meetings.—MILO G. CUMMINGS.

VIRGINIA.

Manchester, Sept. 11.—The church here generously gave me the month of August, which I spent in preaching. I assisted John P. Givens at Perseverance, Lunenburg county. There were 12 baptized and several reclaimed; 11 of these came out under Bro. Givens' preaching. It was his farewell sermon. The Perseverance and New Hope congregations gave him a beautiful gold watch. He is very greatly loved. He is at Chicago University equipping himself to preach more effectively. I preached eight sermons at Horse Pasture, my old home church, with nine confessions. Preached one sermon at Hairston's Chapel, with four additions, one being an uncle 85 years old. He is strong and vigorous and happy. I preached six sermons at Mayo and nine were saved. Bro. T. J. Glenn and W. C. Clark assisted me some by prayer and exhortation. Bro. Glenn finds time from his business to preach some. He recently preached seven sermons at Glenn's Chapel, N. C., with 14 additions. He preached a few sermons at a point in Henry county with four added; one being young Bro. Dameron Deshazo, who expects to prepare himself to preach. He is bright and hopeful. I preached two sermons at One Well, the home church of the greatly esteemed D. H. Spencer, who has gone to his reward. Also preached two sermons at Pleasant Grove. During my trip I preached 24 sermons, baptized 32 and reclaimed several. I preached here yesterday. One confession at night. Bro. Cary E. Morgan is expected at the Seventh St. Church, Richmond, next Lord's day. Bro. H. C. Garrison begins the fall work under auspicious circumstances, and Bro. Maxwell enters the work at Third Church under renewed energy. The congregation is pushing the new building to completion. The indefatigable F. M. Anderson is greatly assisting our brotherhood in behalf of state work. He is succeeding admirably.—J. A. SPENCER.

ILLINOIS.

Galesburg, Sept. 11.—One addition to the church at this place yesterday.—C. H. WHITE.

Ingraham.—Ten confessions here last night. J. V. COMBS.

Jacksonville, Sept. 12.—Scoville and Hueston began here yesterday, assisting me in a meeting. Started off with fine audiences and two additions first night.—GEO. L SNIVELY.

Pellonia, Sept. 8.—We are holding the closing meeting of the tent meeting season here. Great audiences, meeting two weeks' old, five added to date, six boat excursions next Sunday. We will be ready for fall and winter work by November 1st, in either protracted meetings, church, institutions or lecturing.—W. H. BOLES AND DAUGHTER.

Carrolton, Sept. 11.—One confession last evening at our C. E. prayer-meeting. Some visible results of our work are seen in this conservative and unspiritual city.—J. SEYMOUR SMITH.

Carlinville, Sept. 8.—We closed our meeting at Atwater Monday, under the preaching of J. W. Knight. There were 55 added to the church; 42 by baptism and only 25 days' work. When the brethren work God gives increase. The entire church is made stronger by having been at work during this meeting.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON, singing evangelist.

Our meeting at Wythe (Warsaw) closed Saturday night, 16 additions, besides the good done to the church. Much of the good done was the result of the excellent singing done by Bro. Francis.—G. E. WILLIAMS.

Ingraham, Sept. 15.—Meeting goes on with 40 confessions in four days; we coninue.—COOBS AND HUNSAKER.

Jeffersonville.—Closed my first meeting this season at this, my old boyhood home. There were 10 added in 15 days, all adults and all baptisms.—S. S. LAPPIN, state evangelist.

Mt. Pulaski, Sept. 7.—Closed a 24 days' meeting with Union Church near Greenfield, resulting in 17 added to the church; 14 by baptism.—C. B. DABNEY.

MISSOURI.

Plattsburg, Sept. 16.—Our big tent meeting is increasing in interest; large crowds and a large chorus of singers. Four confessions last evening.—S. M. MARTIN AND V. E. RIDENOUR, evangelists; T. H. CAPP, pastor.

Blue Mound, Sept. 15.—Bro. Worl has just closed a meeting at Mt. Hope Church with 20 additions; one from the Baptists, one from the Methodists, two by letter and 16 by baptism.—F. M. B.

Riggs, Sept. 16.—Meeting here starts off nicely. I have disposed of my interest in the school at Middle Grove, that I may give my whole attention to the gospel ministry. My next meeting will be at Richfield, Ill. Those wishing my services address me here for the next three weeks. Prof. W. Moore Jones, A. B., Ph. D., succeeds me as principal of Roberts Academy.—T. L. NOBLITT.

Rock Port, Sept. 12.—Fine meeting here on Lord's day, and one addition.—S. W. GLASCOCK.

Higginsville, Sept. 4.—Became pastor here September 1. Had five addition at Butler last Sunday.—ANDREW SCOTT.

Neosho, Sept. 16.—Closed a meeting of two weeks at Grau, I. T., last Lord's day night; 18 additions, enrolled names for a congregation. Will visit that point again in Octob r.—A. C. MATHIS.

Mooresville, Sept. 15.—I have just closed a three weeks' meeting here, with 14 additions; 10 by baptism. I go from here to Mt. Ayr, Iowa.—L. C. SWAN.

Canton, Sept. 11.—Since last report I have had five additions at New Bloomfield, four at Laddonia and two at Salt River Churches. I love the C. E.—J. D. GREER.

Farmington, Sept. 12.—We have just closed a short meeting at Mine La Mott, with six additions. The general outlook for the work there seems good. We are quite hopeful for the church here. Bro. A. B. Moore, of St. Louis, has been secured for a meeting with us in October, and we are getting ready for the strongest pull ever made by the church in Farming on. We also expect to have more readers of the leading paper of our brotherhood soon.—A. M. HARRAL.

Blythedale, Sept. 15.—Our meeting goes grandly on. Thirty additions. We go next to Unionville, to assist Bro. Prunty. There are quite a number of calls from Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Indiana and Illinois we can not possibly fill. One or two more will be all we can fill before moving to Texas.—MORGANS & DAUGHTER.

A. P. Young recently closed a fine meeting at Richland.

A Memory.

BY ADA M. ESTES.

Brown bees buzzed in the clover,
Crickets chimed in tune,
The sunbeams danced and glinted
To perfect a day in June.

Ripe cherries rolled from the treetops
Where birdlings warble sweet,
Roses peeped from the hedgerows,
Daisies bloomed at their feet.

Three children, born to be happy,
Played in this garden fair,
And their peals of silvery laughter
Rang out on the fragrant air.

An angel passing above them
Halted—in love I ween—
And seeing its heavenly beauty,
Threw a kisss upon the scene.

It floated in mistlike lightness
Above each dewy pearl,
Then fell, with the angel's blessing,
On the head of our baby-girl.

She turned her face in wooing
Up to the angel bright;
He smiled to see it flooded
In a halo of saintly light.

He wrapped his wings of beauty
Around our baby fair,
And left but a precious memory
And a curl of golden hair!

Madge.

MINNIE E. HADLEY.

If she had any other name, no one ever heard it.

"It answers to the name of Madge," said the pale, consumptive mother, fifteen years ago, when she left the tiny little waif under the charge of Madam Maguire, at a third-rate boarding house in the city of N——.

The mother had been an actress and a sweet-voiced public singer of good character, but her health giving way she was obliged to retire into the hospital to die, leaving her child under the care, or rather the carelessness, of cold, hard-hearted, ignorant Madam Maguire.

In spite of the liberal contribution of kicks, cuffs and blows by different members of the Maguire family she grew to be a rather pretty blonde of fifteen, with bright, laughing eyes and plenty of curls, when the yearly allowance left by her mother suddenly gave out, and along with it Madam Maguire's patience.

"There's no use a keepin' the gel any longer, now her money's giv' out, an' she's no earthly good heyer," said Madam Maguire to her stupid, growling husband.

"She's everlastin' a gadin' off ter them parks a watchin' the flowers an' a tryin' ter sing like the birds she hears. Better advurtus an' git her a place down country some'ers."

Miss Barbara Jenkins, a very aristocratic maiden lady, who lived "down country," answered the advertisement, and thus a new phase of Madge's life began.

It was a beautiful summer cottage, that of Miss Barbara's, half covered with vines and surrounded on all sides by a broad expanse of shady, velvety lawn, dotted here and there with great circular patches patches of bright-colored geraniums, while on one side the great lazy river went lounging idly off into the distance. Just across were some great blue hills which majestically towered their heads in saucy rivalry.

Off in another direction were the handsome summer residences of the wealthy city people.

"That 'castley-looking building yonder," said Miss Barbara with great dignity on the evening that she drove Madge for the first time in sight of her new country home, "is the summer residence of the Montmorencys, a very aristocratic family with renowned antecedents, one of which is said to have sat in the very presence of Queen Elizabeth herself. I am now crocheting for young Miss Helen Montmorency a necklace from the solid gold thread which embroidered the coat that he wore upon the occasion. I do a great deal of fancy work for them, and one time they invited me to tea."

The last utterance gave Miss Barbara such a thrill of pride that she struck the lazy old horse an extra cut with the whip to wear off her surplus emotion.

"Oh! Beg pardon Ma'am!" exclaimed Madge with a little start, for she realized that Miss Barbara had quit talking and that she herself had made no response; in fact, she was hardly conscious that Miss Barbara was speaking at all. The river, the hills, the trees, together with so much other beauty, both natural and artificial, had thrown Madge into a spasm of intoxicated delight, and the words "antecedents," "Queen Elizabeth," "gold thread," etc., wrought no more impression upon her than the buzzing of so many harmless flies.

"Everything is so beautiful here, Miss Barbara, so very, very beautiful! Oh! I shall be so happy with you, I know I shall!"

But Miss Barbara's pride had been slightly wounded by the careless indifference of a few moments ago, and she answered coldly.

"You'd as well know your place, Miss, right at the start. I bring you here to do my work and not as a companion. Those I choose from the wealthy city people around here in the valley. I'm somewhat poor, but I'm as proud and aristocratic as any of them, and so am taken in."

"I am told you like to sing," Miss Barbara continued, "but I must forbid it while you work for me. Neither must you indulge your taste for reading. I've always held to the idea that it isn't best for working people to read much. It makes them impracticable and too high-minded for the sphere they occupy."

"And remember, child," she continued, growing somewhat sterner, "you are never at any time to enter my sitting room without my special permission; you shall be treated just as all the other working girls about here are."

Had Miss Barbara forbidden her to take a trip to the north pole without special permission, it would have been as much in place, for of all things that Madge least desired, one was to sit in the house and talk to Miss Barbara while Dame Nature was so cordially bidding with all of her many outdoor attractions.

The first three weeks at Miss Barbara's passed rapidly and happily for Madge in spite of her mistress' cold formality and great strain to maintain her aristocratic equilibrium.

"I must drive into the city this morning," said Miss Barbara one bright day.

"Stay outdoors as much as you like, but be sure that you lock the back kitchen door, keep a sharp lookout and don't meddle."

Madge would have been offended at the last injunction had she not been longing for several days to peep inside of the bright-colored books that she had seen so carefully arranged upon the whatnot in Miss Barbara's room one evening, as she carried up a cup of tea to her mistress.

"There is no harm in it," she persuaded herself at length. "The minister said only last Sunday that people who are dying to read should have the opportunity."

So seizing the bunch of keys which Miss Barbara had entrusted to her keeping, she tip-toed to the sitting room, unlocked the door very stealthily, stepped inside and locked herself within.

Selecting a red-backed copy of "Jane Eyre," she raised both windows, nestled herself down very comfortably in Miss Barbara's big willow chair and was soon lost to everything but the fascinating story.

The cool river breeze came through the open windows and touzled her pretty blonde curls, the luxurious rose fragrance tickled the end of her nose, the birds poured their sweet carols into her ears, but Madge was unconscious of it all. Two hours passed thus when suddenly, tat, tat, atat, sounded something in the room near her.

Madge gave a little jump and looked all around.

"What on earth is it?" She held her breath and listened. All was still.

"'Twas only a mouse. How foolish I am!" and she settled down into the chair again. Rat, tat, tat, tat, tat, came the noise again, louder and longer than before. Some one seemed to be tapping at the window, and for the first time in her life Madge was thoroughly frightened.

With a bang she shut the windows, tossed the book into its place and hurried from the room. Locking the door after her, she hardly dared draw her breath until she reached the kitchen where Tabby and Fido were lying peacefully, bathing in the sun.

There could have been no one about the house, else Fido would have barked, as he always did at the slightest sound of an unusual character.

Madge was thoroughly puzzled. "But whatever it was," she said to herself, "Aunt Barbara must never know that I was in her room. Everything is just as I left it and she would only fly off on one of her tangents for nothing."

So she decided it, little dreaming of the trouble that would follow in the wake of this resolution.

Evening came at last without any further solution of the mystery, and with it came Miss Barbara.

"See what I have brought you, child," she exclaimed in softer tones than usual, as she rushed into the dining room where Madge was setting the supper and threw upon the table a package of bright-colored ribbons and hose.

"Faithfulness always has its reward. You didn't go near my room to-day did you?" and Miss Barbara's soft, dreamlike tones immediately hardened down to stern reality.

"No," answered Madge in a quick, careless tone, as though she had hardly heard Miss Barbara's question, and immediately she turned aside her head to hide the little flush of guiltiness and began scolding Tabby,who was every opportunity tangling herself up with Madge's feet.

"There! That's all over with," and Madge drew a long sigh of relief as she heard Miss Barbara unlock her door and enter her room. "Of course she would find things just as she had left them. But the next minute Miss Barbara was back to the dining room, her cheeks very pale her eyes flashing fire and her lips fairly quivering with rage.

"How dare you! how dare you!" she shrieked.

"You renegade! You thief! You have been into my room and stolen, yes deliberately stolen, the gold thread out of which I was crocheting Miss Montmorency's necklace. It was worth at least twenty dollars to any one and invaluable to her as a relic of the ancestor who sat before Queen Elizabeth herself.

"Give it back to me or I shall arrest you; I'll imprison you; you shall go to the workhouse this very night!" and Miss Barbara stampted her feet with hysterical rage.

"But, Miss Barbara," stammered Madge, who was so surprised she could scarcely find her tongue.

"Hush! hush! not a word. Don't I understand it all? "Here's the empty spool from which you unwound all the thread. It was lying on the floor by the window. "And here, what do you call this?" With a sarcastic fling she hurled into Madge's face one of the little knotted, fady ribbons with which she had tied either side of her curls that morning.

"I found it in my room in the willow rocker. You're not sharp enough for a thief."

In vain did Madge try to explain just what had happened and to convince Miss Barbara of her innocence of the theft, although she had gone into the room just to read a book, and that she had heard the strange noise and rushed out.

"A likely story you have hatched up, Miss. The girl who will lie once, will lie twice, and the girl who will lie twice in succession will steal. Bring me that gold thread before morning or I shall arrest you and off you go to the workhouse on the first train. If you do bring it you go back to Madam Maguire's, straightway. I'm through with you once and for all. The house of Miss Barbara Jenkins will not be disgraced by harboring a theif under its roof. Don't speak to me again unless you bring the thread and pack up your duds to go, either one place or the other."

Poor Madge! There were but two ways before her, and both were dark and dreary. "Go back to Madam Maguire's with all of her cruelty and coarseness cooped up in that little hot boarding house"—she would die first. "Go to the workhouse"—she shuddered at the very thought. Women and girls who went there were very, very wicked, she had always heard.

There was a little log out in the edge of the forest where Madge was accustomed to sit and watch the sun go down into the river. With a sad heart she directed her steps thither this evening,not having tasted a mouthful of supper.

The most painful part of it all was her own sense of guilt. Her entrance into the room and her lie to Miss Barbara had cast a stain upon her character which, it seemed to Madge just now, that all the waters of the mighty ocean could never wash away.

However, the little forest spot seemed to welcome her. Somehow she felt nearer to God there than anywhere else. But everything had on it a quiet, good bye aspect. The chirp of the cricket, the twitter of the birds, the rustling of the leaves and all the little woodland sounds which heretofore had seemed so gay and sprightly were now sad and mournful.

Miss Barbaaa had forbidden her to sing, but now she felt that she must give vent to her sorrow in some way, and looking straight up to the beautiful heaven of God her soul went forth in a plaintive little air of grief and penitence.

"My! what a lovely voice you have, child! But how sad you seem. Come, tell me all about yourself."

Madge turned with a little start and beheld the beautiful, kindly face of Helen Montmorency.

"Oh! it is you; I saw you pass Miss Barbara's the other day. I'm so glad you've come to me just at this time. Will you sit by me on this log while I tell you something?" pleaded Madge in tones of mingled joy and sorrow.

Seating herself on the log close beside the homeless girl, Miss Montmorency took the poor little sunburned hand in her pretty white one and heard the simple, honest story through.

Madge told her all—the strange noises, her own lie, Miss Barbara's threats, her horror of Madam Maguire and the workhouse.

"Why you poor, dear girl!" said Miss Helen, smoothing the blonde curls caressingly, "I'm sure you are innocent, else you never could have sung as you did just now. But your story is a strange one and the falsehood is against you."

Then both the girls,of near the same age, sat hand in hand, quietly gazing at the sun's reflection in the river beyond.

It was growing dark. They must separate in a few moments. Something must be done to save Madge from either of the cruel fates pointed out to her—but what was the better way out of the difficulty?

The moon was just rising over the treetops. Suddenly Helen gave Madge's hand a terrific squeeze and pointed toward a clump of blackberry bushes that skirted the forest.

"Look, quick!" she cried. "See! see! yonder it is,right down among the bushes!"

Madge looked in the direction pointed out to her in a dazed, stupefied sort of way, feeling that something terrible was about to happen.

The next moment Helen was bounding toward the bushes, and stooping down she drew out a shining little round thing that looked like a mass of gold as she held it there in the moonlight.

"Why,you stupid little goosie!"she went on, "Don't you see its the everlasting gold thread all woven into a neat little bird's nest? Birdie has flown into the window while you were reading and seized the shining thread in his mouth and has unwound the whole thing and made his nest of it. It was the spool unwinding that rattled against the legs of Miss Barbara's workstand and made the queer noise. What a capital little joke he played for you!" and Helen fairly danced with delight to know that Madge was innocent.

Madge was fairly dazed at this sndden transformation of affairs, but she managed to collect enough of native wit to say very quietly, "Please come with me to explain to Miss Barbara?"

Away they rushed to Miss Barbara's cottage, on the very wings of the wind. Of course, she had to believe Miss Helen's story—but the lie and the sly entrance into her own private room she never, never could forgive, and she remained firm in her determination that Madge should go back to the Maguires.

"Don't cry so, dear," said Helen, as she bade Madge good-night. "I will see you again to-morrow before you go away."

Early the next morning Miss Barbara received a call from Helen's mother.

"We have decided to take Madge to live with us," she said. "I can forgive the lie as I know she has suffered for it,and I even doubt if it would have happened at all under different circumstances. I am told she has a wonderful voice and a great thirst for reading. Both must be cultivated. It were a sin greater than any lie to cause her to dwarf the talents that God has given her."

And so a third time in her life Madge found a home, but this was to be permanent; for though she is now a woman grown and earning her own living by singing in one of the large churches in the city of N——, yet she still finds a warm welcome at the home of the Montmorencys. While God was wonderfully merciful to her in this her first disobedience and sin, yet she was too wise to ever dare or even think of repeating it. Those few hours of intense suffering had made her a better girl; but Miss Barbara never ceases to wonder why it is some people can do such "awful things" and yet "get on," "just as if nothing had ever happened."

The Hopeful View.

BY J. H. STARK.

I may not know my mission, and what I best can do;
I may not know life's vision, that lies beyond my view;
But this I know with sureness, that gives me joy and peace:
My Father knows me truly—from sin he'll give release.

I may not have the learning of bards and sages old,
Nor may I know the meaning of all that life enfolds,
But I know enough of duty to lead me in the right;
I know that Jesus guides me to heaven's eternal light.

I may not preach the gospel beyond the distant seas,
Nor waft God's glad hosannas upon the Orient breeze;
But I may speak a message to those who're near my side
That may cause a soul in bondage to in Christ be sanctified.

I may not give by thousands to send the gospel light,
Nor may I send God's heralds to scatter pagan night;
But I may give my "littles" from out my humble store,
That those who lie in darkness may have the gospel lore.

I may not see my Savior with eyes of mortal sight,
Nor the home that he's prepared me in regions of delight;
But I know when fails this house in which this spirit dwells,
I've a home that is eternal—a house without farewells.

I may not see the angels that hover by my side,
Nor touch their golden pinions, with glory beautified;
But I may hear their whisper, if I am near the cross,
And count heav'nly service profit—earthly service loss.

Virginia, Ill., Sept. 5th, 1899.

Too Big for His Boots.

With great trouble a small body of men were hoisting a heavy log to the top of a blockhouse that was being repaired, after an assault in one of the campaigns of the War of American Independence.

As the log swung to and fro the voice of a little man was heard encouraging the workers with a "Heave away! There she goes! Heave ho!"

By and by there rode past an officer in plain clothes, who asked the little man why he did not help the others.

"Sir," was the pompous reply, "I am a corporal!"

"Indeed," said the other, "I did not know that; I ask your pardon, Mr. Corporal."

Dismounting without further ado, the officer lent a willing hand till the job was done. Then, wiping the honest sweat off his brow, he turned to the little man and remarked:

"The next time, Mr. Corporal, you have a bit of work that in hand, and too few men to do it, send for the commander-in-chief, and I'll come again and assist you."

With which offer and rebuke General Washington left the astonished corporal to his own reflections.—Union Gospel News.

Sins of Omission.

T. HENRY BLENUS.

Many persons seem to consider sins of omission among their least offences. Yet on account of these the Savior has passed the sentence of condemnation. Because ye gave no bread to the hungry, no water to the thirsty, no raiment to the naked, no relief to the oppressed and did not visit those in prison, therefore "depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." What we sometimes, perhaps, consider the inferior and secondary duties of daily life Christ intends should determine our characters rather than those striking and splendid virtues and spectacular demonstrations of piety. Men may build magnificent temples and possess no love for God. Men may give to the cause of religion largely of their means and possess no religion that is real and heartfelt. Human life is not made up of great public events, arresting wide attention, but of minute occurrences. We can better judge of the true spirit and genius of a man's temper by his conduct in minute affairs than by singular and uncommon situations. A miser may make a feast and still be a miserly, stingy, grasping wretch. It is not the striking events, but the daily attendance to the little things, perhaps never mentioned, because little observed, that marks the true character. There can be no stronger proof of a degenerate heart than the inclination to disobey God in things that we esteem of little consequence.

We stand affrighted and lift up our hands in holy horror in the presence of great iniquities and heinous offences of a public nature, while at the same time we pay little attention to what we term the lesser sins of evil thoughts, evil words and deeds, commodious falsehoods and constant deceits, the neglect of God, the growing hardness of heart, the vanities of human imagination and the unfruitfulness of life. But because, as the Master teaches, we have given food to the hungry, drink to the thirsty and clothing to the naked and such performances of life in which there must be on our part sincerity of heart and motive, because we had no desire or expectation that such actions would be made public and because their practice had grown so much into our character that we hardly thought it a virtue to do them, we can have the splendid final acknowledgment of our King, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

An Unusual Wedding.

[Since announcing in our Personal column this week the marriage of Prof. W. E. M. Hackleman and Miss Pearl D. Conner, in Irvington, Ind., we have received the following account of the unique ceremony by which their vows were sealed, and think it worthy of a place in our Family Circle. Too often the vows at the marriage altar are treated too lightly, and this example will help to emphasize their sacredness.—EDITOR.]

"A surprise was in store for a family reunion at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Conner, in Irvington, last night. It was an impromptu gathering, called together by Mrs. Conner. A wedding was unexpected, and the ceremony by which Miss Pearl D. Conner, daughter of the house, became the wife of Mr. W. E. M. Hackleman, was a novel one. At 6:30 o'clock Miss Conner entered the room, carrying the old family Bible; placing the book on a table she said, 'I bring to you to-night the old family Bible which once belonged to my beloved and lamented grandfather. By making this book the center of his home and personal life he has left to his children and grandchildren the richest possible inheritance—a godly example. Cherishing in my heart the memory of this heroic Christian father, who counted the love of home and the character of his children worth more than all the wealth of the earth, I, upon this sacred volume, offer my heart and hand to be joined in holy wedlock with him who has vowed his love for me.'

"As these last words were spoken, W. E. M. Hackleman, accompanied by his mother, entered the room. Taking his place by the bride, he said: 'And I, your devoted lover, placing upon this sacred book this ring, emblem of undying love, offer you my fortune, my honor and my love. Joining my heart and hand with yours, I am prepared to take those vows that shall make us one.'

"The bride's father, the Rev. A. W. Conner, stepping before the bride and bridegroom, requested them to kneel while the Rev. James W. Conner invoked the presence of God. Following this prayer the bride and bridegroom said: 'By the sacredness of the volume which lies under our hands, before God and the witnesses here assembled, visible and invisible, we solemnly promise to live together in the holy bonds of matrimony, promising ever to love, honor, comfort and protect each other till death shall separate us.'

"After the usual ring service the bride and bridegroom were pronounced husband and wife.

"The bride is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Conner. She is associate editor of the Boys' Friend. She has made friends in this and other states by her work with her father and his paper for boys and their friends. The bridegroom, of the Hackleman music house, of Indianapolis, is a singing evangelist of national reputation. He is also a composer of music and a song-book publisher. Mr. and Mrs. Hackleman will be at home at 5522 East Washington Street, Irvington, after October 1."

Worthy of Note.

In papal lands—Italy, Spain, Mexico and South America — only about seven per cent. can read and write. In Bible lands 75 or 80 per cent. read and write.

In non-Bible lands they travel on horseback, donkeyback, etc., and make from 20 to 40 miles per 24 hours.

In Bible lands they go to sleep and travel 1,000 miles in the same time.

In non-Bible lands they have little or no communication. The postman goes on foot, horseback, camelback or donkeyback. In Bible lands they send a message around the world and get an answer in ten minutes.

In savage lands they do not write at all. In half civilized countries they will write you a letter in an hour.

In Bible countries with fast steam press they will print, cut, fold and label 100,000 letters (newspapers) in an hour.

In non-Bible lands they work ox, donkey, camel, etc. In Bible lands they harness the thunderbolt, chain, instruct and make him do man's work.

It would do you good to see him carrying a regiment of men 60 miles an hour, without blowing, panting or tiring.—Rev. L. C. Rice, in The Observer.

Broke Her Heart.

In the death of Miss Mary Ann Balten, last evening, Burlington lost the most eccentric character within its borders. Offended because some of her fellow members of the church objected to the lack of style in her dress, Miss Balten, more than twenty years ago, became a recluse. From that time until her death admission to her home was denied to all callers.

During all that time Miss Balten had not crossed the threshold of the house, where she and her brother, J. Russell Balten, lived in retirement. About twenty years ago Miss Balten was an active worker in the Sunday-school of a church in this city. She taught a class. Comments upon eccentricities in her attire by some of the women members of the church reached her ears,and her Sunday-school class was taken from her. She turned her back upon the church and upon the world. Going to her home she closed the door, and from that day to the hour of her death, scarcely a human being, except her devoted brother, has seen her. The neighbors tried to be inquisitely neighborly, but the door was barred against them. When she died offers of help came from every hand, but all were refused. The funeral will be strictly private.—St. Louis Republic.

If I Were You.

[C. D. Meigs, in an article in the Sunday-school Times, Sept. 2, recommends the following, composed by himself for a Sunday-school Rally occasion, to be recited by some very little child.—EDITOR.]

If I were you—
I'd think about as you think,
I expect.

If I were you—
I'd talk abou as you talk,
I expect.

If I were you—
I'd do about as you do,
I expect.

And so, if I were you,
I'd think and talk and do
Just about as you do,
I expect.

And that is why I'm glad
I am not you,
And do as you do,
But am myself,
And do as I do.

For, if I were some of you,
I'd think the Sunday-school
Could get along without me.
I'd say, "'Tis not for me,
But othsrs, all about me."
I'd do some things, I fear,
To make some people doubt me.

Now, don't you see how bad 'twould be
If I were you instead of me?
And don't see how nice 'twould be
If you were me?

Because, if you were me,
Then you would think about as I think,
I expect,
And talk about as I talk,
I expect.
And do about as I do,
I expect.
And then, of course,
The Sunday-school you'd not neglect,
As you do.
But you'd come every Sunday, I expect,
As I do.

This recitation can be spoiled by being poorly spoken. Let it be thorughly committed by some child who will not "break down" and forget it.

Mamma (putting her little girl to bed). Why, Dorothy, I thought you were going to run a race with yourself. Dorothy (undressing very slowly). Yes, mamma, but I'm the one that don't beat, you see.

* * *

After an absence of half a year she had returned. "Did you think of me often, George?" she asked. "Only once, Aggie," he replied, but it was an awful long think—six whole months!"

DR. KILMER'S SWAMP-ROOT

Is not Recommended for Everything.

BUT IF YOU HAVE KIDNEY OR BLADDER TROUBLE IT WILL BE FOUND JUST THE REMEDY YOU NEED.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh, or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, and it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit, as most people suppose.

So we find that women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble,and both need the same remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y., mention the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Largest Marble Block ever Quarried.

A one-hundred-thousand-pound block of marble was recently shipped from Georgia to Providence, R. I. It is the largest block of marble ever quarried in the United States. It began to approach in weight those huge stones which the ancient Egyptians moved for hundreds of miles and set up in their temples and pyramids long before the Christian era. The Atlanta Constitution gave a picture of the block of marble and the car on which it was transported from the quarries at Marble Hill to Providence. The car was a steel one, and constructed especially for carrying heavy guns for the government. The car weighed 50,000 pounds. The block was 27 feet two inches long, four feet four inches thick and four feet three inches wide. It contained 500 cubic feet.

This is the largest block of marble ever quarried in the United States, so far as is known. The next heaviest shipment of marble on record in this country weighed 60,000 pounds. Georgia marble is highly prized by builders in the North and West, because of its great strength and its proof against weathering.

Among the ruins of Rome many specimens of granula and crystalline marbles have been found. In almost every instance the marbles of granula structure have been reduced to powder in the course of time, whereas the specimens of crystalline marbles are as sound as when they first came from the quarry. Georgia's marbles are of crystalline structure, and therefore will stand for ages.

The Red Box Clew.

Well, most of you are in school now, and have been for a week or two. You are already beginning to remember that Saturday isn't like the rest of the days; you have back that well-remembered feeling at three o'clock, when you are a little sleepy and dull and restless, because you ate a good dinner and then have to sit still and smell chalk-dust and musk; for some girls will always use musk; it smells stronger than anything else, and when you've got it on your clothes people are going to know it. A good deed is the same way. When you perform a kind action, its perfume spreads and spreads in your life, and in the life of the person you made happy. Every once in awhile you remember it and he remembers it, and it makes you both feel good. Well, remembering kind actions is just smelling the perfume of a life. But some people don't believe in perfume; they don't use it, not even cologne, and their ambition is to step around without smelling good or bad. They say perfumery isn't good taste; I expect, if they had their way, they would keep the roses and the violets and the walnuts from smelling (you know how walnuts smell, don't you, when they are curled up in their green rinds? and you'd better look out how you open them, too, or you'll get your fingers stained). Now, personally, I don't use perfumery; but I like to be near people that do, if it's a respectable kind (not musk); and I like to hold a perfumery bottle as close to my nose as the neck will let me, and enjoy it; and it may not be fashionable, but the perfume had no business smelling so good if it didn't want me to enjoy it. Well, every life that is worth anything gives out a perfume, and the odor is just as sweet as the person's heart and as true as the person's mind. If you are good, the world will find it out, and it will rejoice because you are here to make things more pleasant. Because you can't be good off in a corner. Nobody can creep out of sight and hide themselves and be good. If you are any account, you are some account to other people. There are a great many people whose lives give out sweet perfume, a delicate, refined influence that you notice at once, that you can't help noticing. And I am sure you want your lives to affect others in the same way; I want mine to. God put you in the world somewhat in the same way you set out a rosebush. What do you do it for? You don't plant the bush so you can raise a lot of thorns; you want real roses, and not artificial ones. Why! what would you think if you went out to your rosebush some fine morning and found that it was covered with paper roses and roses made out of linen? Well, God wants to smell the perfume of your life; he doesn't want you to be an artificial rose, manufactured in a dancing-school or at a card-table. Children, the sweetest flowers blossom in the church.

But how are you going to get your mind in such a condition that it will give out this delicate influence? Feed it on good literature. What your mind needs is history and poetry and Bible and good stories, too. You can't talk about anything that isn't in your mind. If your mind is full of rubbish, your conversation will be nothing but rattle and bump, like an empty wagon. If you read nothing but novels, you will be no benefit to any company. You will be as dull as a hoe, after awhile. You will need something all the time to excite you, and between whiles you will be lack-lustre and heavy. You will hate to see company come, and when they do come, you will sit up on a chair and say "No, sir" and "Yes, sir" (if you have been taught to say "sir" at all), and everybody will think, How dull you are! And all the while you will be wishiug they were gone so you could finish your novel, or begin another.

But some people don't like novels or any other kind of reading. Well, they are worse. They must interest themselves in something, and if nothing comes along, they hunt something, or make something. They visit continually, or sulk because they can't. They get to lounging down town, and you know what that leads to. They don't like home. So there is no other way out of it. If you are resolved to give out perfume in your life, you must read some history and poetry and Bible, and get something on board for a stormy day. The Advance Society requires five pages of history a week and 20 lines of poetry. I wonder how many of our members will keep the resolutions for an entire year? Many have already been faithful three quarters. Think what a pleasure it will be to know that you have not missed reading a verse in the Bible every day for a solid year! And a quotation every week from some good author—it may be from the Bible if you choose! D. Harold McIntire has two pets, a dog and a colt, named Flossie, and a favorite quotation:

"One constant element of luck
Is genuine, solid, old tenacious pluck."

Emily Riley, of Kearney, Mo., writes: "I am very sorry to write this letter. One quotation would have put me on the honor list had I learned it. I am going to try again, and I am going to try to get others to join. I am the only member in town." So you see here is one who has the "old tenacious grit," and I am pretty confident she will have "good luck" next time. Carl Swift (10) and Donnie Swift (8) have decided on this for their favorite quotation: "Not only strike while the iron is hot, but make it hot by striking." Mabel Bridgewater says: "I would like to do something for our society, so I send a new name, Miss Lidae Smith, Renfrow, Okla."

Don't forget to send a list of your ten favorite characters of fiction or poetry and your five favorites of history. Of the first class "Jo," in Little Women, is ahead. Now is a good time for people to join the Advance Society and take it along with your school work; it won't take much of your time, and it won't interfere with your arithmetic to read a verse of the Bible every day.

Next week—now listen good!—next week a continued story will begin in this department that it will do you good to read. It's a story about boys and girls, such as you meet every day, and there's a mystery in it, and it's a hard mystery to guess. The story is exciting and full of adventure and conversation and things that happen. Now there are a lot of stories for children that never have anything happen in them. They go on and on, and there is no plot, no interest; it would put a grown person to sleep, and the wonder is the author could keep awake while he was writing it. Well, this story, that begins next week, is just as good for grown people to read as it is for children, and it's not about candy nor What Can My Little Hands Find to Do? nor anything of that kind. It is what I say—a story; and not a sermon with good little Eddy and naughty little Bobby Black and Billy Bean to lead him into uninteresting mischief. Not but what the story has a moral—it has several; but they don't all run together and get sticky and choke you when you go to swallow the story. And it's a long story, too, and will run for five or six months, and its name is this: "The Red Box Clew." So look out for next week. Well, I believe this is all I wish to brag, at present, over my story. I have been asked why I never write you any poetry; so here is a little piece:

A WISH AND A MORAL.

Wist my papa wuz a grey rich man
An ad more money ni ever see!
Nen I tood wide in a grey big black ta'age wif glass doors to it
An be as happy zi tood be.
Wouldn't I dwess in booful tothes?
Wouldn't I eat chicken an ice cweam an Sarah Togie chips an watermelon an ever ting what was dood?
Dess I would! an I would make
Folkses happy as I tood.
Nen my mamma wouldn't haff
Scwub in mean ole warshing tub,
Face so wed and eyes so tired and her breaf comin' hard
Wile she wub an wub an wub!
But I hearn dat richy mammas
Don't be bovvered wif dey dirls;
Makes em walk wif duvvernesses,
Doesn't even wet dey turls!
So I dess I be tontented.
Mamma's tired, tourse she is, an you'd be, too, if you done half she does, that I know!
But it rests her up at nighttime,
Tause she loves her dirlie so.

And the new Honor List: Carl and Donnie Swift, Billings, Mo.; D. Harold McIntire, Avalon, Mo.; Mary M. Fitzgerald, Geranium, Neb.; Mabel Bridgewater, Renfrow, Okla.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPPLIES.

It will not be long before time to order Sunday-school literature for the fourth quarter. Schools that are using the supplies furnished by the Christian Publishing Co., of St. Louis, will be sent, on application, a full set of samples in which will be found up-to-date literature adapted to the needs of all grades of those who attend the Sunday-schools of to-day. Send for samples of our Sunday-school supplies and carefully compare them with those you are now using. We want you to see the kind we are offering. Address Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo.

Christian Endeavor.

By Burris A. Jenkins.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 1.

OUR OWN CHURCH: WHAT CAN WE DO FOR HER?

(Psalms 122:1-9.)

(A meeting to discuss denominational work, led by the pastor.)

One of the effects of the Christian Endeavor movement—while it is broadly unifying in its spirit—has been to render its members true to the various pleas raised by their respective churches. Amongst our own young people we ought to preserve our plea. Of all others we ought to seek for unification, to be sure; but we ought not to forget that we it is who plead for unification. We ought to remember that, paradoxical as it may sound, we exist as a separate body for the express purpose of unifying. We are the one great concrete protest against division. That is our justification for being.

Of all religious bodies in America to-day, none has a more hopeful outlook than we. Our very youth and vitality give us hope. The broad, full, sweeping air of our movement is in keeping with the spirit of to-day. The favorite religious cries of the day have been our slogans from the first. "Back to Christ," "Christian unity," "Bible study"—all these are the words most cheered in the conventions, and they are our own shibboleths and have been from the beginning.

Our young people, then, can do these things for our church:

1. They can inform themselves regarding our plea, by reading the life and writings of Campbell, for whom they will have a profound respect if they read of or after him; by reading the best statements of our purposes as set forth by our great writers.

2. They can be true to our position when they have learned it; true in standing for our purposes in the great conventions, not by offensively thrusting our tenets down others' throats at all, but by gently exemplifying the very spirit of unity in their lives and words.

3. They can stand for the cool, calm sanity and intelligence in religion for which our people have always stood. Our movement was a protest against mere emotional, sensational religionism which had too much sway in the Middle West in the first half of this century. Our leaders said, "What does the Bible say? Come, let us reason together. Let us be sane." So it is ours to preserve this spirit of intelligence and not to be swept away by any waves of fanatical, one-sided emotion.

4. They can maintain the liberty of the gospel. Whether from within or without, attempts are often made to curtail the freedom of our thought. Every great reformer has had to stand up for freedom of citizenship in Christ, from Paul to Campbell. Let us do our own thinking, refusing to be hounded, badgered or bulldozed. Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free.

5. They can stand up for intelligent, honest and unbiased Bible study. Alexander Campbell always demanded to know what author of the Bible he quoted. It made a vast difference with him whether a quotation was from Leviticus or Luke. He wanted to know author, time and place of writing, people to whom written. Everything that could be found out about a sacred book. Strange, isn't it, that among our own people should be found some of us who fear that method of study and constantly decry it as dangerous, when, higher criticism though it is, Alexander Campbell was the foremost man of us who practiced it! Needn't be afraid of Bible study, even though it is dubbed historical or higher criticism. It is a harmless bugaboo—nay, it is a useful scarecrow. It scares off superstitions.

6. We can, furthermore, increase the tolerance of our movement. Christian Endeavor has done this for us very rapidly. The local, state, national and international unions have brought us close to people of all religious complexions, and all people need in this world usually is to get together in order to think more of each other. It is we, of all others, who ought to stand for getting together.

7. Finally, we can deepen the spiritual life of our people. Christian Endeavor is doing this, too. Our people, partly due to the influence of this great young people's movement, partly due to the writings of a few deeply devotional men amongst our older leaders, partly due to the aspirations planted in us all, are deepening daily in our spiritual life.

A friend said to me recently, "As we Methodists are getting richer, we are getting less religious, while as your people are getting older, they are getting more spiritual." Let us hope that the former statement is mistaken, but let us trust that the latter is true; and, Endeavorers, let us make it true!

The Bethany Reading Course on the Life of Christ.

From the correspondence which has come in from the readers who have taken the course on the life of Christ during the past year the following expressions of appreciation may be of interest to those who have not as yet enrolled as members of the Bethany circles.

A young lady at Greenville, Ill., writes:

"I have received from this year's study in the life and teachings of Jesus a clearer understanding of his Word and my duty as a follower of his teachings."

Another, in Troy, N. Y., says:

"The good I have received from this last year's course on the Life and Teachings of Jesus is precious beyond estimate, and I cannot tell you how grateful I feel for having this rare chance open to me. My only regret is that I have not had it before. It never entered my mind before that one could get so near our Elder Brother Jesus, and it seems as though I have traveled with him through all his trials and temptations, thus opening my eyes to the fact that I must bestow upon my fellows all the time and talent that I can spare, and also getting right with God myself. I am sorry that more people have not grasped this opportunity, and wish to thank you for granting me this rare privilege. Trusting that next year's course will be as beneficial as this year's, I remain yours gratefully."

A young man from the same city writes:

"I feel greatly repaid as well as deeply grateful to you for this past year's study. I have been able to grasp the deeper underlying thoughts, principles, motives and duties of the teachings of Jesus. I verily believe that I understand him better, as well as myself. Therefore, I feel equipped to a far greater degree to cope with evil and to bring the unconverted into the kingdom. I indeed feel sorry for those who do not avail themselves of this rare treat and opportunity. Again accept my heartfelt thanks."

From Waco, Tex., a lady writes:

"This course of reading on the Life and Teachings of Jesus has caused me to realize more than ever the exalted character of our Master, the simplicity, purity and utter unselfishness of his life."

A young lady in Blocher, Ind., writes:

"In the study of the Life and Teachings of Jesus we are brought into closer relationship with him. The scenes of his life draw from us both admiration and pity. In admiring a certain character, it is but human nature to imitate as far as one's intellectual capacities permit us to do. So in this book we will not only admire the character of Jesus, but it causes us to try to be more like him and to do the things he wishes us to do. The study of this book gives me a clearer understanding of the New Testament. Things whose meaning I never comprehended before have been distinctly set forth, while on other questions I have obtained more satisfactory views than I before possessed."

Another lady in Fowler, Ind., says:

"I consider the study of the Life and Teachings of Jesus to have been of great value to me, as by the study of this handbook with references we understand more fully the trials, temptations and crosses which our Savior was called upon to bear. We get a clearer insight into his character, it seems to me, both earthly and divine, than we would be able to get from the Bible alone."

A lady in Le Mayne, Pa., writes:

"The results of this year's study in these courses are that I have much better knowledge on these various subjects, and the value to me has been incalculable in that it has imbued me with an intense desire to know more. I can testify that I am a better wife and mother and more help in the church work for having taken up this course of study."

A reader in Deer Lodge, Mont., says:

"It has not only been of value to me, but has been a great help in explaining the life and teachings of Jesus to my scholars. It also leads one to study the life of Jesus more closely."

A lady in Chicago has this to say:

"This course is most valuable in setting clearly before the mind the salient points of that great life. In being brief, yet comprehensive, it affords one a clear conception of the life and teachings of Jesus."

The following are picked at random from a large collection of statements:

"It has given me a clearer idea of Jesus' teaching, that we must not only do what he would have us do, but that we must be what he would have us be."

"I understand more fully the mission of Christ's life on earth by a closer study of the Bible. Many questions have been answered and doubts cleared away."

"I cannot measure the value of this course to me. The study I put on it has helped me more than any Bible study I ever did before. The 'Week of Tragedy and Triumph' alone gave me a clearer idea of the events of Christ's life than I ever had."

"It has shown plainly the life and teachings of Jesus to me, and has been a source of much help in understanding his work here on earth."

"The Life and Teachings of Jesus has been a helpful book to me. While I have not mastered it, I know that I have a clearer and more comprehensive view of his life, with a stimulus to investigate the subject further."

These are the statements of readers concerning only one of the three courses for last year. Considering the fact that there are three courses offered each year and that the coming year is the third in the series of the Bethany work, every new reader has a choice from nine different subjects in three groups, and ought to be able to find just the line of work adapted to his needs. It is believed that if our Christian Endeavorers, missionary and Sunday-school workers and others who are anxious to increase their usefulness, knew the value of these courses they would lose no time in enlisting as readers. They are adapted, not only to class work, but to those isolated from any such association and compelled to follow the work alone. Indeed, very many of the readers belong to this latter class, and though there is value in association, yet the lack of such opportunities should never stand in the way of one's effort to utilize the benefit of the Bethany courses.

Full information concerning the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses may be had by writing to J. Z. Tyler, Cleveland, O.

BRECKENRIDGE.

Mrs. Mary. E. Breckenridge was born in Kentucky October, 1836. Died Aug. 31st, 1899. Her maiden name was Scott. She was married to Alexander Breckenridge in 1856. She was persuaded to become a Christian early in life under the preaching of Bro. Payne. Bro. Breckenridge died in 1896. A few short years and she has gone to meet him in that better world. Having no children they gave themselves to caring for orphans; assisting them in getting an education and preparing them for a life of usefulness. The last years of her life, on acount of her afflictions, she had been confined the most part of her time to her home in Edgerton, Mo. But her good works did not cease. She was a regular contributor to the Orphans' Home in St. Louis, Mo., and in order that this good work might not stop at her death she willed $1,000 dollars to this worthy institution. She was a member of the church and always ready to assist in every good work in the community in which she lived. A few weeks before she died she went to see her sister, Mrs. R. W. Beery, who was lying upon a bed of affliction. She had been a mother to this sister when the sister was but a child. Here she was taken sick and died. Here the funeral services were conducted by the writer, Saturnay, September 2nd, 1899, at 8:00 A. M. From the residence of Brother and Sister Beery her body was taken to the cemetery at Plattsburg, Mo., and laid to rest beside the remains of her husband. But her good works live on and many an orphan child will thank God for the life of Aunt Mary Breckenridge. J. W. PERKINS.

JOHNSON.

Thomas P. Johnson was born May 9th, 1825, in Jackson County, Tenn. Fell asleep Aug. 29th, 1899, at the home of his son, J. R. Johnson, in Des Moines. The funeral was conducted by the writer at the old home in Osceola, Iowa. Bro. Johnson moved to Clark County, Ia., in 1854. He was a veteran of the Mexican war, also a captain of the home guard in the Civil war. But best of all, he enlisted in the grand army of the Lord when 16 years of age and proved faithful to end. The first Christian Church in Clark County, Ia., was organized in his home. Four sons and two daughters mourn his loss, but with a blessed hope and the memory of a loving father and wise counselor. Two of his sons have given themselves wholly to the ministry and God is blessing their labors in bringing many souls to Christ. Death to Bro. Johnson was only the gate that opens into a higher life and a better state of things. To him it is the grandest victory; it is all gain. EDGAR PRICE.

Shenandoah, Ia.

MOORE.

Mrs. Alice Mooore was born in Fauquier County, near Warrenton, Va., and died while visiting her grandson in St. Louis, Sept. 7th, aged 76 years. She was a faithful member of the Hannibal church for nearly 50 years She was very prompt in all her living and never missed a service at the church when she was able to be present. Her husband entered into rest in 1855, and all of her seven children have passed away, but nine grandchildren remain to cherish the memory of a noble Christian life. The funeral services were conducted at the Hannibal church, where she loved so much to be. She has joined the church triumphant.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT? For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

MABREY.

S. I. Mabrey was born July 29, 1862, at Bigflat, Ark., and died Sept. 1st, 1899, at Mountain Home, Ark. He became a member of the Church of Christ at this place Dec. 31st, 1882, and and had lived a true and exemplary Christian life and was a devoted husband and precious father to the little family left behind him. The church has lost a faithful member and the community a valued citizen in the death of Brother Mabrey. Peace be to his ashes. A. S. KELLEY.

Publishers' Notes.

ORGANIC EVOLUTION CONSIDERED,

by Prof. A. Fairhurst, of Kentucky University, was recently carefully read by Wm. Ross Lloyd, of Richmond, Ky., and the following is part of his unsolicited notice of this book:

"I commend this work because it is much needed. It is dignified, strong and clear. Darwin, Huxley, Spencer and other leaders of the evolution theory are met in this book by a Christian scholar and answered in a way that will command their respect for the author."

This book has 21 chapters, 386 pages, cloth binding, and the price is $1.50, postage paid.

QUEEN ESTHER.

Below will be found an extract from a literary notice of "Queen Esther" recently published in the Gospel Messenger, the leading paper among the United Brethren:

"From the book of Esther and ancient history the author gleans the information that he weaves into this charming work and brings out the life of the queen so clearly that one can not help admiring her noble womanly qualities. Here the story is told how an orphan Jewish maiden in captivity arose until she became the queen of King Xerxes and was the means in the hand of God of saving the Jewish race from massacre in all parts of the kingdom of Babylon. As some of the Sunday-school lessons for October will be in the Book of Esther, this book, by M. M. Davis, will be of interest to active Sunday-school workers."

"MOSES, THE MAN OF GOD,"

is the title of a new book by Dr. D. R. Dungan, and will soon be issued from the press of the Christian Publishing Co., of St. Louis. With the completion of this book there will be added another to the list of books on prominent Bible characters issued from the press of the Christian Publishing Co. It would be of great benefit to the student of the Bible to read the entire list of books on the following historical characters mentioned in the Scriptures:

"In the Days of Jehu," by J. Breckenridge Ellis, price 75 cents.

"King Saul," by J. Breckenredge Ellis, price $1.00.

"Queen Esther," by M. M. Davis, price 75 cents.

"Moses, the Man of God," by D. R. Dungan, price $1.00.

When you have finished the reading and study of these books we may then have ready other contemplated works on Bible characters.

SAMPLES FREE.

A full set of samples of our various Sunday-school literature will be cheerfully sent to those schools that are not using our supplies, or to any schools just being organized. We want you to see our various kinds and compare them with any now in use in the Sunday-schools of to-day.

FREQUENCY OF THE LORD'S SUPPER.

The above is the title of a small paper covered book of 103 pages by N. J. Aylesworth, A. M., just issued from our press. The subject is considered with reference to its nature and uses, or it is a study of the law of repetition in its relation to public worship. The book has nine chapters, as follows:

I. Spiritual Uses of the Lord's Supper.
II. Spiritual Uses of the Lord's Supper (continued).
III. Does Frequent Repetition Decrease the Usefulness of the Lord's Supper?
IV. Two Distinctive Characteristics of the Lord's Supper.
V. Some Conditions of the Conservation of Spiritual Interests.
VI. Relation of the Lord's Supper to the Sunday Morning Sermon.
VII. The Relation of Works to Spiritual Interests.
VIII. Augmenting Effectiveness by Frequent Repetition.
IX. Progressive Enrichment by Association.

It is printed on clear type, and the price is 25 cents, postpaid.

Socialists not Anarchists.

EDITOR CHRITIAN-EVANGELIST:—I notice in the issue of Aug. 24, under Current Events, in speaking of the riot in France, you classify socialists with anarchists. This is not the first time this classification has appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It is a mistake. Socialism has nothing in common with anarchism. (See Webster's Dictionary.) And furthermore I assure you that no socialist took part in the riot, unless it was to assist in suppressing it. Socialists, not only in France, but in all countries, oppose and do all in their power to keep down riots. Socialism is the only movement in the world to-day (Christianity so-called not accepted) which tokes a firm stand against all forms of the shedding of man's blood by man. (See the party platform.) It believes in that prophecy of Isaiah, not particularly because it is the prophecy of Isaiah, but because it is according to evolution and belongs to the plan pertaining to man's real liberation from economic bondage in this life; that the time is coming when "swords are to be beaten into plowshares and spears into prunninghooks, and nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall war be learned any more." The truth of the matter is that the socialists are the only party that openly declares itself on the side of Dreyfus; the only party that openly worked for his rehearing, and who show by their actions that they believe in his innocence. I notice also that the public press is publishing incidents from the Paris Commune in comparison to the present trouble. The facts are that then, as now, the Bourgeois Society is trying to make it appear that the scientific revolutionary movement is advocating force and bloodshed. Not so, my dear sir. The truth is that the Bourgeois forced the insurrection, placing the communists on the defense, and they, being organized but locally, were not able to keep it off. Now the revolutionary movement under socialism is international, with truth and intelligence the leading factors alike in all countries. No, Mr. Editor, it was not the socialists, but the military, those who attempted the assassination of M. Labori' who are responsible for the riot. Some people object to the Current Events in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, but I thing more of them would be better provided they were not so much in harmony with the present system of economics. Our people are certainly in advance of all other bodies professing ta follow Christ in that we recognize evolution and economics more than they all. We disbelieve the faith-only doctrine for, as James says, faith without works is dead. Now the works part is pertaining to this life, the works part of the teaching of Christ and faith to the life beyond, and is the spiritual part. And inasmuch as we do unto the least of Christ's little ones (those creatures made in the image of God), we unto him. This is the economic side, and those who fail in this kill faith and destroy the first and greatest commandment, the spiritual part.

The evolution of industry and society has put a political front on the economic question. Hence as Christians we must deal with it from a political standpoint. That old cry that Christians and Christian papers must keep out of politics is an old chestnut. They are the very ones that ought to get into politics and lead the battle against corrupt rulings for the overthrow of the present system and the establishing of a system that will give the right of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness to each and all alike. Excuse me, Mr. Editor, I am but speaking my earnest and sincere convictions, and I believe I am entitled to them according to the doctrine of the Christian Church. I believe in the Bible, and especially the New Testament, as it is adaptable to the present age. And the plea of the Christian Church is certainly right. I believe in Christianity, in practical Christianity, and I have the principle of practical Christianity planted in me, but am prevented from exercising it. Why? The system prevents. Look at the empty pulpits and run-down churches. The system did it. Are the pulpits empty where the membership is composed of the moneyed class? No, but in those localities where the laborer is the main support of the ministry they are without preachers. Is this fulfilling what Christ taught? Do the poor have the gospel preached to them? No, but their wages have been reduced to bare existence; no money for the preacher, hence no gospel.

W. W. Cox.

Collinsville, Ill.

[In so far as we mentioned socialists in connection with anarchists, in the paragraph referred to, no reflection upon the socialists was intended. Different schools of thought frequently find themselves side by side in history. They were so mentioned in the newspaper reports and we so stated without comment or censure. In so far as the socialists are attempting to alleviate painful social and industrial conditions we are in agreement; but not with all forms in which it has appeared. The broadest and soundest socialistic platform that we have yet seen is the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.—THE EDITOR.]

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

THE EXILED PROPHET

By J. G. ENCELL

For 60 Days We Offer This Book For $1.00, Postpaid

This book is of especial interest to Sunday-school teachers just now. Some of the Sunday-school lessons for the third quarter of 1899 are taken from the Book of Daniel, and the first seventy pages of "The Exiled Prophet" contain an Essay on the Book of Daniel, written by the well-known author and Bible scholar, Dr. D. R. Dungan. This essay will explain the Prophecy of Daniel, and should be read and studied by the Sunday-school teachers of to-day. Having read this they will be prepared to present the Sunday-school lessons in the present quarter to their classes in an acceptable manner. In addition to Dr. D. R. Dungan's explanation of Daniel the book is an able treatise on Revelation, the author of which has devoted many years of study and investigation to what many think is a "Sealed Book."

The book embraces 245 pages, neatly bound in cloth and profusely illustrated. Send orders to CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., ST. LOUIS.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Acting upon the recommendation of the Minister of War, Marquis de Gallifet, President Loubet has issued the pardon for Dreyfus, who is once more a free man. In his letter the Minister of War cites the admission of extenuating circumstances by the majority of the court, refers to the five years' imprisonment which had already been endured by the prisoner, and to his failing health in consequence, and adds that "higher political interests necessitate the calling up of all the powers which are exacted from governments after a difficult crisis." "The government," he adds, "would ill respond to the desire of the country, which is desirous of pacification, if by acts which belong to it, whether on its own initiative or a proposal of Parliament, it does not take steps to efface all traces of the painful conflict." He therefore proposed the following decree for the signature of the President: "There is accorded Alfred Dreyfus a remission of the rest of his penalty of ten years' detention pronounced against him by decree of the court-martial at Rennes and dated Sept. 9, 1899, also military degradation." This decree has been carried out, and Alfred Dreyfus is now a guest of one of his kinsmen in Southern France. In accepting the pardon he waived his appeal for a new trial, but he and his brother have declared their purpose not to let the matter rest until his complete innocence has been vindicated. It remains, therefore, to be seen whether "the incident is closed," as the Minister of War announces, or whether there is to be a new chapter of revelations sometime in the future.

Inasmuch as certain Catholic societies have protested against the desecration of Roman Catholic churches in the Philippines by the American soldiers, Cardinal Gibbons has paid a visit to President McKinley in his official robes to assure the President that the Roman Catholic Church in this country has no fault whatever to find with the administration's conduct of the war in the Philippines, nor with the policy of upholding the sovereignty of the United States in those islands. If reports be true concerning the relation of the Filipinos to the Roman Catholic Church in the Philippine Islands, there is good reason why Cardinal Gibbons should assure the President of his perfect satisfaction with the treatment of the Roman Catholic Church in those islands. It comes from very high authority that one chief source of hostility toward the United States Government on the part of the Filipinos is the friendly treatment which the church there has received at the hands of the American soldiers. They regard the Roman Catholic Church, with its various orders, as their chief oppressors, and they naturally interpret the kind treatment which these orders receive from our troops as evidence of an alliance between the two with a view of continuing the oppressions. It is altogether proper, of course, that this government should respect the rights of all religious organizations in the Philippines and in other newly acquired territory, but it is important that it also distinguish clearly between what are the legitimate rights of these religious organizations and their unauthorized assumption of power and exercise of oppression over the people, and should make it very plain to the inhabitants of these countries that wherever the American flag floats there is to be neither religious nor political tyranny exercised.

Advices from Alaska report an earthquake of unusual severity along the whole Alaskan coast between Juneau and the Aleutian Islands. There were, indeed, two shocks, one of them occurring September 3d and the other September 10th, the latter being the greater and more destructive. Three eye-witnesses of these terrible earthquakes have arrrived in Seattle, Wash., from Yakutat, and these have brought all the news so far received as to the results of the earthquake. One of these reports that a vessel on the shore of the bay at Yakutat was beached in the mud and then overturned by the violence of the shocks; that another shock more violent than any came just at daybreak, and the schooner was covered by a great tidal wave and sunk. He says: "We ran out of our houses to find that part of the point at Yakutat had been swallowed by the sea. The place where the old Indian and Russian graveyard was had disappeared. That day investigation revealed the fact that the point and Kantack Island had disappeared entirely. Only the tops of the trees showed where the graveyard was." They report traces of the havoc wrought by the earthquake 100 miles south of Yakutat. Later reports will doubtless bring us further particulars as to the results of these remarkable seismic disturbances.

Whether it is to be war or peace in South Africa is still an open question, but it may be closed any day. The British Government has had a Cabinet meeting, and it is reported that there is not perfect unanimity among the ministers in reference to going to war with the Boers. Their reply to President Kruger of the Transvaal is said to open the way for further negotiations, provided there is a desire in the Transvaal to avoid war. It is believed that Great Britain is playing for more time in order to complete preparations. Meanwhile, public excitement is running very high in both countries. An attempted peace meeting in London on last Sunday at Trafalgar Square was converted into a demonstration in favor of war. Fifty thousand Londoners are said to have attended the demonstration, cheering the union jack and national colors and singing, "Rule, Britannia." It was necessary for the police to interfere to rescue the peace orators from violence at the hands of the excited crowd. The declaration of the Orange Free State, that they will back up the efforts of the Boers has, of course, greatly strengthened the latter in their purpose to resist what they regard as British encroachment. While war may be precipitated at any moment, we may still hope that some peaceable adjustment may be reached.

The managers of the Dewey demonstration at New York have had some difficulty in adjusting some delicate questions which have arisen. One of these questions has been the place to be occupied by the veterans of the G. A. R. in the parade. Their commander naturally desired for them a place of honor, but this the general in charge thought would be hardly proper in view of the fact that it was to be a military parade, and he assigned them a place in the rear of the procession. Gov. Roosevelt took sides with the Grand Army people, but found on investigation that the matter was under the control of the city of New York and not under his jurisdiction. It has been decided, we believe, that the old veterans of the Civil War will not take part in the parade, but will give a demonstration of their own at another time. Another question to be settled was whether Admiral Sampson or Admiral Schley should have first place in the naval parade. This question has been decided in favor of Admiral Sampson, we believe, on the ground that he is commander of the fleet. It is to be hoped that these questions of precedence will not throw a damper upon the heartiness of the reception which the country desires to extend to its naval hero.

Nothing seems to advertise a country like war. This seems to bring a nation or a continent more suddenly and fully into prominence than anything else yet known to history. This was true in our own war with Spain, and it is now happening to Africa through the threatened war between England and the Transvaal Government. Enquiries are being made and facts published in relation to this great continent not heretofore generally known. From recent statistics prepared by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics in Washington, D. C., we are told that African imports amount in round numbers to $400,000,000 and the exports to $350,000,000, while of the imports $18,000,000 is furnished by the United States, and of the exports $10,000,000 is sent to the United States. Physically the African continent is in many respects unique. Five thousand miles in extreme length, and over 4,000 in breadth, its area is greater than that of any other continent except Asia, the latest estimates being 11,874,000 square miles. Its coast formation is peculiar in the absence of deep indentations, bays or harbors, and the small number of waterways which offer entrance to the interior. The fact that the greater part of the interior is an elevated tableland, extending on all sides to within a short distance of the coast, renders access to the interior by the few large streams difficult. At the point where the rivers pass from the elevated plateau of the interior to the lowlands of the coast the falls or rapids which there exist prevent navigation, and as a result travel to the interior in Africa by water developed more slowly than in any other continent. Indeed, it was not until the explorations of Livingstone, Stanley, Speke and others, developed the true conditions and made known fact that vast navigable water stretches were to be found in the interior that it occurred to man to transport steam vessels around these falls and put them afloat in the waterways of the interior. When these conditions were clearly established, however, modern ingenuity and energy soon found a means of transporting steamers in small pieces upon the backs of men through the forests, around the falls and rapids for scores and even hundreds of miles, and putting them together, set afloat the steamers which penetrate thousands of miles into the interior and develop facts never before known and which could not have been developed by land exploration in tropical climates and jungles for many generations.

The anti-trust conference of governors and other state officers, which has been advertised for some time, convened in this city on the 20th inst. There were present only five governors, but there were law officers of other states present, representing 12 states in the conference. Gov. Sayers, of Texas, who called the conference, was chosen chairman and made the introductory speech. Gov. Stephens, of Missouri, also addressed the conference. These speeches were criticized by some as having in them a partisan element, though doubtless the speakers themselves aimed only to deal with those causes which they believed to be responsible for the growth of trusts. Gov. McMillin, of Tennessee, who was chairman of the committee on resolutions, submitted his report on the second day of the conference, which was unanimously adopted. The resolutions recommended the enactment and enforcement, both by the several states and the nation, of legislation that shall define as crimes any manipulation or restraint of trade, with provisions for adequate punishment for any violation of this law, involving dissolution of the corporation found guilty of such violation. It also recommended legislation in each of the states for the control of corporations chartered by that state, and the adoption of a system of reports to and examinations by state authority of such corporations. Another resolution recommended the enactment of such laws by each state as would prevent the entrance of any foreign corporation into its limits for any other purpose than interstate commerce, except on terms that would put the foreign corporation on a basis of equality with those created by the state. The report further recommends state legislation, declaring that corporations created in one state to do business exclusively in other states shall be prohibited from admission in any state, and providing that no corporation shall be formed in whole or in part by any corporation, and that no corporation shall own or hold any stock in another engaged in a similar or competitive business. These are some of the more prominent recommendations, and they are to be communicated to the several governors of the states with the request that they recommend legislation in harmony therewith.

WHY NOT?

A telegram received from A. M. Atkinson, as we close up this number of the paper, says: "Let us ask FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS as a token of memory and gratitude to our old and needy preachers, as a fitting crown to our Jubilee."

What could be more fitting in this year of rejoicing over the fruits of the labors of these pioneers, than a free-will offering of $5,000 from the preachers and other individual members and from churches, to care for such of these men as linger with us, and are dependent upon their brethren for their support? Every other fund has received a stimulus from this Jubilee Year. Why not this? Is there any other that appeals more directly to our sense of honor and obligation, to say nothing of that tenderness of compassion for one another, which is so prominent a feature of Christianity? Why not $5,000 for the Ministerial Relief Fund? Why not?

AN OBJECT-LESSON FOR THE WORLD.

It is seldom that any one single event in the world's history stands out in the white light of full publicity before the eyes of mankind as has been the case with the trial of Captain Dreyfus by the military tribunal at Rennes. As we said, during the progress of this trial, it was not so much Captain Dreyfus who was on trial as the French nation. This appears more and more manifest in the light of recent developments. The conviction of Dreyfus, with the concession of "extenuating circumstances" and by a majority vote, only, of the military court, followed by his pardon by the French Government, furnish pretty clear proof that the whole trial was a sort of prearranged affair, by which the army generals were to be saved from exposure, the French Government saved from overthrow and the public sentiment of the world placated, if not fully satisfied.

But all this indicates a sad lack of appreciation of the inexorable demands of justice and right, and of the danger to a nation's stability and honor in any attempt to thwart the ends of justice. What the French nation ought to know, and what the God of nations is teaching France and all other nations by this noted case, is that national injustice is national peril, and that no case is ever settled permanently until it is settled right. If Dreyfus is innocent, as even his pardon in this instance indicates, somebody else is guilty. Some high military officials are guilty of treason; a number of others are guilty of conspiracy against an innocent man, involving perjury and forgery; two military court-martials are guilty of condemning an innocent man in the face of evidence of his innocence, and this is particularly true of the last court-martial; and last of all the French nation, so far as it accepts the pardon of Dreyfus as an end of this whole business, is guilty of conniving at injustice and shielding guilty parties under the specious plea that the public safety demands it. This is short-sighted statesmanship. It is poor morality.

We predict that the case is not ended. The guilty parties will yet be uncovered. The subterfuge of lies will be torn away. This may be done at a fearful cost to the French nation, but it will be worth all it costs. Out of this severe ordeal, in which France stands arraigned for national injustice at the bar of the moral sentiment of mankind, she will come forth a purer nation, with a higher sense of justice, having learned the lesson anew that only justice, righteousness and truth make a stable foundation for a government.

The principle involved in this object-lesson, however, applies to all nations and to lesser aggregations of individuals for the accomplishment of common ends. God is teaching nations that injustice and oppression are elements of social strife and of ultimate disintegration. He is teaching the world anew the lesson that "it is righteousness which exalteth a nation," and that "sin is a reproach to any people." It is for the United States and Great Britain and Germany and Russia and all the great powers to ask themselves the question whether, in the administration of their respective governments, the rights of all men are respected, or whether injustice is perpetuated in some form under the plea of public necessity. Well will it be for the nations of the earth, and for all combinations and organizations of men, if they will learn from this object-lesson what God intends to teach by it, namely, that truth and justice and righteousness are as essential to national and corporate redemption as to individual salvation.

THE WAY OF THE CROSS.

There is but one answer to the world's inquiry after the way of salvation. It is the Way of the Cross. There is but one answer to the cry of the human heart for the way that leads to rest of soul and to enduring happiness. It is the Way of the Cross. There is but one answer to the question as to how the state, society and civilization are to be saved. They must be saved by the Way of the Cross.

This may seem a hard answer, but it is the only true one. Does any one ask for the supreme condition of discipleship to Jesus Christ? It is to take up his cross and follow Him. What do we mean by the Way of the Cross? Not simply that we rely upon the death of Christ as the ground of our hope for salvation. That is involved in it, of course, but more than that is involved. By the Way of the Cross we mean the way of self-sacrifice, the way of losing our lives here that we may find eternal life. By the Way of the Cross we mean the way of crucifixion of self and of all selfish aims and ambitions in life, and the complete and utter surrender of our lives to the lordship and service of Jesus Christ.

Is it any wonder, after all, that men of the world hesitate and postpone the matter of their entrance into the Christian life, seeing that it involves a reversal of all their plans and purposes, aims and ambitions? Not only must there be the turning away from sin in all its alluring forms, but the giving up, as well, of the life of ease and indolence for the strenuous life of self-sacrifice and of service for others. Not only are our sins to be crucified, but our low aims, our low ideals, our self-indulgence and self-complacency.

Nothing is to be gained by concealing this imperative demand of the Christian life. We may cover the cross with roses and hide its cruel nails and its rugged features, but in doing so we win converts, not to a bleeding, self-sacrificing Savior, who pleased not Himself, but poured out His life for the salvation of others, but to some theological formula or ecclesiastical machinery or social club. The church has already too many such converts. What it needs now, more than anything else—more than money, more than talents, more than social respectability, more than costly edifices, more than gorgeous ritual—is a large infusion of the spirit of self-sacrifice in its members, a greater number of converts who are willing to take up their cross daily and follow the Master through evil report as well as through good report, and who are willing to suffer poverty, persecution and even obloquy for His sake and for truth's sake.

But does not this make the Christian life too repulsive? To the carnal mind, yes; but to those that "hunger and thirst after righteousness" it brings a joy and a peace that the world knows not of. Church members are denying themselves to-day the purest pleasure that earth may know, the sweetest joy that the human heart can experience, in refusing to follow the Master along the sorrowful way which He trod for the world's redemption. It is only when we meet with some experience in life in which we lay our all down at the Master's feet and say, "It is Thine, use it and me for Thy service and Thy glory," that we really come into fellowship with the sufferings of Christ, and share in the joy that was His even when "He made Himself of no reputation" that He might accomplish our redemption. Not in lives of luxury and ease, not in lives of self-indulgence and indolence, is the true joy of living to be found, but in the Way of the Cross. Some have learned this lesson; others have yet to learn it, but whoever learns it and walks therein has discovered the true secret of happiness, the true way of salvation and the real meaning of life.

PROTESTANTISM TRIUMPHANT.

That Romanism in its national, racial and ecclesiastical relations is on the decline hardly admits of a reasonable doubt. Its ethical and theological decline has been manifest for centuries and has made up the groundwork of its failure in every other field of action. The immense superiority in all departments of the Protestant peoples is a problem which is just now sorely puzzling Catholicism. The expulsion of Spain from Cuba and our easy triumph over her in other parts of the world has thrust this problem upon Catholic reflection in a form painfully acute to its sensibilities. The Civilta Cattolica, the Italian Jesuit organ, in a recent number made the following frank confession:

Wealth and power no longer belong to the Catholic nations; they have become the appanage of peoples who have separated from the Roman Church. Spain and Italy, France and a large part of Austria, if compared with Germany, England and the United States, are feebler in the military department, more troubled in their politics, more menaced in social affairs and more embarrassed in finance. The papacy has had nothing to do with the conquest of one-half the globe, of Asia and Africa; that has fallen to the arms of the heirs of PLOTIUS, of LUTHER, of HENRY VIII. All the vast colonial possessions of Spain are passing into the hands of the Republic of Washington; France yields the sovereignty of the Nile to Great Britain; Italy, conquered in Abyssinia, maintains with difficulty her maritime influence by following in the wake of England. Here we have we, in fact, all the Catholic countries reduced to submit to heretic powers, and to follow in their traces like so many satellites. The latter speak and act, and the former are silent or murmur impotently. This is how affairs stand at the end of the nineteenth century, and it is impossible to deny the evidence of it. Politically speaking, Catholicism is in decadence.

The principal cause of the social and intellectual inferiority of Catholics resides, according to M. Muller, in the fact that they do not accord to reason and to action the important role which they play amongst Protestants. This eminent Catholic writer, of Bavaria, after declaring that Protestant dogma is un neant, says:

We have, however, to remark a victorious movement of Protestantism spite of the nothingness of its dogma, and a surprising retreat of Catholicism in all domains and in all countries. Wherever Catholicism encounters Protestantism it seems unable to cope with it. . . . In Alsace the increase of Protestants is double that of Catholics. In 1895 there were in Prussia 18,000 conversions from Catholicism to Protestantism, and 2,000 from Protestantism to Catholicism. Worse even than this numerical inferiority is the backward movement of Catholics in all that concerns rank, intelligence and prosperity. In the Catholic states it is simply astonishing to see the influence which a Protestant fraction, a merest minimum, exercises in the direction of political affairs and in scientific questions. One is most struck with this in France and in Hungary.

This is Catholic testimony. There is no doubt about the facts; they do not admit of dispute. What is the matter? Is it not strange that a man of the acuteness and candor of M. Muller does not see that this failure of reason and action among Catholics is a sufficient condemnation of the entire Catholic system, and a complete vindication of Protestantism, as "un neant" as its dogma is?

Here is a frank admission of the numerical and moral decline of Romanism in one of its ancient strongholds, and a much larger area of failure might have been truthfully specified. A few months ago the English press, religious and secular, teemed with facts and figures drawn from authentic sources, showing the shrinkage of Romanism in Italy and in Rome itself, and the rise of a strong Protestant sentiment within the church. A paper is published in Rome, edited by priests and supported by Catholics, as courageously and unequivocally outspoken against the errors and corruptions of Vaticanism as the theses that Luther nailed to the door of the University Church at Whittenburg in the sixteenth century. Whole churches are coming over to Protestantism, at least to evangelical Christianity, and bringing their priests with them, who are changed from Romish priests to Christian pastors. When the writer was crossing Lake Maggiore in the summer of '94, as the boat was landing some passengers at a town of eight or ten thousand inhabitants on the lake-shore, a lady representing the Continental Evangelization Society related the circumstance to him of the recent secession of an entire congregation, several hundred strong, from Romanism, and their reorganization as an evangelical Protestant church with their former priest installed as pastor. She mentioned several other similar instances within the limits of her knowledge. If the decline of Romanism in Italy and other Catholic countries meant the decline of religion and the increase of worldliness and skepticism, it would be something to lament and nothing to rejoice over, for Romanism with all its faults is better than no religion at all. We would rather see a nation Catholic than agnostic or secularistic. The change means something more and something different from this.

The hideous outrage against civilization, to be known in history as the Dreyfus case, is a farther indication of the moral decline of Romanism. The villainy of this conspiracy against an innocent man that has so violently offended the moral sense of the whole civilized world, if not speedily repented of will prove the moral Sedan of the French nation, and the keeper of its conscience, the Holy Catholic Church, will deservedly go down in the general wreck. Unless there is a moral and religious revolution in France in the next few years, two decades will suffice to place her on a level with Spain. The history of the Roman Catholic religion in connection with Latinism is a profoundly significant story as a commentary on the great Apostasy from the religion of Christ. A few more years of evolution and education will surely bring intelligence and character to the front and the Mother of Harlots to the ground.

ABOUT SPECIAL NUMBERS.

The Herald and Presbyter has an editorial on Special Numbers, provoked by a comment of one of its readers on its special "Educational Number." It calls attention to a certain special number of a denominational paper outside of Presbyterianism, in which the publishers get the best of the readers, and it mentions certain undesirable features in connection with special numbers. We desire to make this comment the occasion of saying that it is very easy to overdo the special number idea, and it has probably been overdone in our own journalism. Emphasis is a good thing in a public speaker, but a speech that is all emphasis has no emphasis. A paper printed entirely in Italics would deprive itself of whatever emphasis comes legitimately from the proper use of Italics.

Too many special numbers, voicing special appeals, neutralize the effect intended to be accomplished. This is true as regards the benevolences which are urged in these special numbers; but what is the effect on the paper itself? We presume it safe to say that a large majority of readers prefer the regular edition of the paper with its usual variety of matter to the "special number," and especially is this true if the special feature of the paper is the large amount of advertisements which it contains, and which have been secured on the basis of an enlarged edition of the paper, which enlarged edition in turn has been secured because of the particular benevolence which it is supposed to voice, the same being paid for, perhaps, by the said benevolence.

We believe there is "a more excellent way." In the first place, the ministers can reach the people, and especially the consciences of the people, much more directly and effectively from their pulpits in behalf of these great enterprises of the church. And then the special missionary organs of the missionary societies can supplement the appeals from the pulpit to a larger degree, it seems to us, than has been the case heretofore. This would leave the religious journals free to furnish their regular editions, with occasional pungent editorials and contributions on the subject of missions, which would be more widely read and would prove more effective, in our judgment, than so many special numbers.

We must rely more upon the education and spiritual culture of our churches for the support of our missionary benevolences, and depend less upon special appeals. No doubt there will be times and occasions which call for special numbers of the paper and for special appeals, and it may be allowed, perhaps, that the demands of our Jubilee Year justify to some extent the special appeals of the current year, but we trust that we shall not come to rely upon such methods, permanently, for the carrying on of our work in the future. A man's emotions may be reached by an appeal, but his conscience cannot be permanently influenced without education, and this educational process for the development of the spiritual life of the membership requires the combined influence of our pulpits and our papers, whose regular ministrations should not be disturbed too much by mere appeals.

Hour of Prayer.

OUR STATE MISSIONS.

(Acts 26:13-20; 2 Cor. 8:1-9.)

(Concert of Prayer for Missions.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Oct. 4th.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The natural order for the spread of missions is that which seems to have been followed in the New Testament, namely, beginning at home and extending outward in ever-widening circles until the whole world is reached with the light of the gospel.

The conversion of Saul was an event of supreme importance in the history of the early church. By natural endowment, by training, by his religious experience, culminating in the vision of Christ near Damascus, he was fitted to be a masterful leader of the new cause. After a while spent in Arabia in religious meditation and thought, in which he was adjusting himself to the new situation, he entered upon his great life-work, preaching first, as the passage above tells us, at Damascus, where his conversion occurred, and then at Jerusalem, where he was educated at the feet of Gamaliel, and where he assisted at the death of Stephen, and after that in the regions of Syria and Cilicia, the latter being his native land and his early home. It was after a number of years spent in preaching the gospel in Cilicia that he went to Antioch, at the request of Barnabas, to join him in the great work there. By their joint labors, under the blessing of God, a strong church was built up in this city, which became the mother of foreign missions.

Had it not been for the church at Antioch it is not probable that Paul and Barnabas would have been sent forth as missionaries to other lands. World-wide evangelization must have its base of operations. The home churches constitute this natural base for wider activities. It is easy to see that the years spent by Paul and Barnabas at Antioch were, after all, in the interest of foreign missions. The same is true of the work in Jerusalem and other parts of the home field. We sometimes reproach ourselves for not having engaged more earnestly in the evangelization of heathen nations at an earlier period in our history as a religious reformation. But, after all, this delay was a necessity. There must be churches built up at home as the basis of missionary operations abroad. It required time to build up these churches and train them for such service.

There is danger, because of the large amount of space given in our papers to our national societies and their claims upon our generosity, that the state work will be neglected. It must be evident, however, that just in proportion as state missions are neglected we are weakening the source of supplies, both for our general home mission work and for the work in foreign lands. A day has at last been agreed upon to be observed in the interest of state missions, and it is altogether proper, and, indeed, quite necessary, that the work in the several states should receive this emphasis.

In a letter from the corresponding secretary of our state missionary society in Missouri, a few days since, he informed us that there were 100 churches in the state, not among the smallest or poorest either, but including many of the ablest congregations, which have not contributed $1.00 to the work of state missions during the fiscal year now closing! No wonder his health is breaking down under this burden of neglect and anxiety. In our prayers for state missions let us remember these corresponding state secretaries that are carrying heavy burdens on their hearts, and let us remember these indifferent churches and their indifferent pastors who have neglected bearing their part of the burden.

In almost every state in the Union there are fields quite as needy as some of the foreign fields. Even in those states where our cause is strongest there are destitute regions, neglected towns and cities, where the people are starving for the "bread of life." The object of these state organizations is for the double purpose of supplying the gospel to these needy fields, sustaining the weaker and struggling churches within its own borders, and reaching out helping hands in the wider field of missionary operations, both in our own and other lands. It is quite essential, therefore, to the healthy growth of our missionary operations at home and abroad that the state missions be not neglected.

The spirit in which the mission work in our states, as everywhere else, is to be carried on, is well stated in the second of the passages above cited: "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor that ye through his poverty might become rich." Let this mind and spirit of Christ be in the churches, and in the ministers of the churches, and there will be no difficulty in raising the necessary means to carry on state missions, general home missions and missions in the uttermost parts of the earth. We cannot do better than to pray mightily that God may fill our churches and our ministry with this devout spirit of liberality in the cause of missions.

PRAYER.

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee that Thou didst so love the world as to give Thine only begotten Son to die for it. We thank Thee that He came as a missionary to this earth to turn men from darkness to light and from the power of Satan unto God. We thank Thee for the missionary spirit among His followers which is manifesting itself to-day in the great work of sending the gospel to all parts of the earth. We thank Thee for our great commonwealths and for the missionary organizations which have for their object the extension of Thy kingdom throughout these states, the building up of the waste places therein and the strengthening of the feeble hands. Bless, we pray Thee, the faithful men who are conducting this work, and on whose hearts it rests as a mighty burden, and the army of faithful evangelists who are seeking to plant the gospel and establish churches in all these needy fields. Fill our churches with the missionary spirit and enable our ministers to lead them constantly into larger activities for the advancement of Thy kingdom. And this we ask in His name. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

There is one very significant Beatitude of our Savior which is little commented upon. It is, "Blessed are they who shall not be offended in me." There is a pathos about this language which can hardly escape the thoughtful student. Never was man so misunderstood before or since as was Jesus of Nazareth. He came to found a spiritual empire, which would introduce the reign of God on earth. His nation expected something quite different. They were disappointed in Him. What He came to do for them was infinitely more than what they had looked forward to and desired, but their eyes were holden. They could not understand it. He was a stumblingblock to them. He seemed to them to be an obstacle which prevented the realization of all their national aspirations. They wanted political supremacy; He offered them spiritual emancipation and freedom of soul. They wanted relief from the burden of Roman taxation; He offered them relief from the burden of sin and death, and citizenship in the kingdom of heaven. They wanted war which would humiliate their enemies; He offered them His peace, and proposed to put them in possession of a power by which they could subdue nations to the reign of the Prince of Peace. And yet, in spite of all this, they were offended in Him, with only here and there an exception. On those who had the spiritual perception to recognize the superior character of His teaching and work He pronounced this Beatitude.

After all, perhaps it was not strange that the great mass of men in Christ's day took offense at His course and were unable to understand His program. They lived largely in the flesh, and were too much influenced by sordid and selfish considerations to study sympathetically and appreciate a Teacher like Christ. There is less excuse that men of to-day should be offended at Christ and should stumble at His teaching. Men stumble at the cross to-day in about the same way that the Jews did. Some are willing to accept the ethical teaching of Christ as the highest code of morals the world has ever known, but as to the cross—that is an offense to them. There is no room in their ethical philosophy for a Christ who was crucified, buried, and who rose again from the dead, and who ascended above all principalities and powers. There is no room in their system for a gospel that makes regeneration the condition of admission into the spiritual kingdom. This class of thinkers do not seem to know what sin is. They do not seem to understand the awful ravages it makes in human nature, the deep hold which it has upon man, and the necessity for a divine power to disenthrall men and set them free. The sublime fact of the incarnation has no place in their little system. They want a Christ without a cross, and a salvation without regeneration. But blessed are they who are not offended in these things. Blessed are they who can say with the great apostle "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world hath been crucified unto me and I unto the world."

There are still others, however, who are offended at the breadth and liberality of Christ's teaching. When he said, "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and they shall become one flock, one shepherd," the Jews did not like it, and "many of them said, He hath a devil and is mad, why hear ye him?" He rebuked John for refusing the right of casting out demons to certain persons who did not company with them. He recognized and accepted all agencies that were working for the liberation of men from the power of the devil. He did not come to establish a monopoly of good works, but rejoiced in every co-operative movement or agency. He did not recognize the line of national prejudices between Jew and Samaritan or between the Jews and other nations. If He were here now He would not recognize our denominational distinctions. He would be broader than any party and more catholic than any sect. And yet, if any man attempts to follow Christ in these broad lines of sympathy and fellowship, straightway he must expect to become an offense to many sincere but narrow souls. Any religious movement that attempts to restore the catholicity of Christ's teaching and the unity and fellowship which He prayed might exist among His followers, will find itself running against the deep-seated prejudices of those who have been schooled in mere denominational tenets, and who are offended at Christ's liberality.

There are some who take offense at the ideal of life which Christ taught and illustrated in His own person. Loving one's enemies, praying for those who despitefully use us, doing good for evil, bearing one another's burdens, ministering unto others instead of being ministered unto, doing unto others as we would have them do unto us—all this is said by some to be impracticable. The "Golden Rule," it is said, has no place in commerce and business, and the attempt to follow it would bankrupt any man. Sad to say, this position is sometimes taken by those who delude themselves with the idea that they are followers of Christ and Christians. Yes, Christ is still an offense to many. As an ideal He is far in advance of the world's progress. Even Christians have not yet all made up their minds that they must actually try to put into practice His sublime teaching. But the divine ideal remains and moves before the race like a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, leading the world on to nobler heights. Blessed is the man who is not offended in Christ, but who seeks honestly and sincerely, however stumblingly, to follow Him whithersoever He goeth.

Questions and Answers.

1. When it is said that Jesus was tempted in all points as we, how can this be made available to encourage to reform the low-born, low-bred, and those extremely degraded by low habits?

2. Many newly formed congregations become the prey of would-be leaders at home and traveling frauds from abroad. Would it not be a great gain if in our home mission work we would follow the evangelist with a pastor, approved and sent, or if not that, have the evangelist remain until the congregation is sufficiently taught and experienced to be left to itself?

3. Is there any way to hold and save the families in the Church of Christ who, because of their wealth, education, or prominence, have entered into what the world calls "society," and who feel that the church is not "broad" enough?

There is a disposition among many who started out well to enjoy all that the respectable in the world enjoy, and who, on no account are willing for themselves and children to submit to any discipline in the church, and who absolutely refuse to make any self-denial for the sake of the cause.

T. T. Holton.

Lincoln, Ill.

1. The fact that Jesus was tempted in all points as we are makes Him a sympathetic High Priest, who can be 'touched with the feeling of our infirmities," and who will the more readily, on that account, grant "grace to help in time of need." "The low-born, low-bred, and those extremely degraded by low habits" must be taught that they cannot of themselves resist the temptations that assail them and overcome the power of their evil habits. They must be "born again." Christ must make them free. This is not only true of the class of sinners mentioned, but it is true of all, that, without the divine life implanted in the soul, they cannot hope to escape the bondage of sin. But the vilest sinner, once he is awakened to the knowledge of sin and the desire for salvation, can extract comfort from the fact that Jesus Christ, who is to save him, was once subject to the temptations under which he has fallen.

2. It would, indeed, be a great gain if new congregations organized by independent evangelists or mission boards should receive the care of some competent teacher until they were able to care for themselves. There has not been enough of this wise supervision of newly organized churches, and the result has been that many have fallen a prey either to internal dissension or to the wiles of evil men who have proven to be wolves in sheep's clothing.

3. It is a difficult problem. Especially is it difficult to hold in the church those who have met with sudden good fortune. Their heads are generally turned by their success, and they become devotees of what is called "society," and it often happens that the places in the church which once knew them know them no more forever. Of course, this indicates a very superficial religion, and the only remedy we know for it, and for a thousand other ills, is thorough conversion to Jesus Christ, and a continual cultivation and deepening of the spiritual life in the members. If these fashionable devotees cannot be thus converted it is better for the church that they should leave than to remain nominal members while they are void of the Spirit of Christ, but full of the spirit of the world.

What is "destructive criticism," to which your scribes often refer? Is it something different from "higher criticism"? Learner.

By the term "destructive criticism" is meant a school of criticism which adopts, as one of its fundamental principles, the inadmissibility of the supernatural element in accounting for the phenomena recorded in the Bible. It is called "destructive" because it undermines, so far as it is accepted, the inspiration of the Scriptures, a divine revelation and the incarnation. The critics of this school feel under obligations to eliminate from the Bible whatever can not be accounted for by the operation of natural laws. This is also designated as the "rationalistic" school of criticism. It is no essential part of what is called the "higher criticism," but is an abuse of the principles which are supposed to govern such criticism. It should be remembered, however, that all criticism is more or less "destructive." It is supposed to destroy error and false or inadequate theories; but no criticism that is wholly destructive, and without a constructive aim, is entitled to our sympathy and confidence. Our work as reformers has been both destructive and constructive. Such every true reformation must be, and such all true criticism or investigation of the Bible must be. Many people in denouncing "the critics" have in mind altogether the destructive and rationalistic class of critics, and forget that there is a large class of consecrated, believing scholars who are studying these questions in the interest of truth and to vindicate the Bible from its assailants. These are just as much higher critics as the other class, and should not be condemned along with the destructive school.

Does the New Testament teach that the early disciples came together after dark to take communion, or does it teach that the disciples met on the first day of the week, and did not their day end at sundown? A Brother.

The early disciples did meet on the first day of the week to break bread in memory of their Master, but there is no evidence that they always met at the same hour. In times of persecution they probably met in secret places, before day, so as to avoid their persecutors. No emphasis whatever is laid upon the question of the time of day, or whether light or dark, and no church ought to have any contention about a matter of this kind. It is like a fond mother leaving a keepsake for her children to look at and remember her when she was gone and the children falling into contention and strife about what was the best day or hour of the day to look at the keepsake and remember their mother! The main thing is that we eat and drink in memory of Him, and enter into the spirit of sacrifice which actuated Him in giving himself for the world's salvation.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE EXPANSION OF OUR MISSIONARY WORK.

BENJAMIN L. SMITH.

The last fifteen years have been marked by the largest expansion ever realized in our missionary plans; it is also marked in specialization in effort.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

Francis M. Rains was the first secretary of Church Extension, beginning in November, 1887, and continuing until January, 1891. His work gave the Church Extension Fund an impetus and an influence that continues until the present. He increased the offering every year that he served as secretary.

He was followed by Geo. W. Muckley, beginning January 1, 1891, and continuing until the present. He has been indefatigable in his service of this fund.

The Board of Church Extension of the American Christian Missionary Society was created at the National Christian Missionary Convention which met in Springfield, Ill., in October, 1888. This provided for a board to be located in Kansas City, Mo., regularly incorporated, charged with the duty of raising and administering a loan fund for the aid and relief of our missions in the United States and Canada unable to provide themselves with houses of worship without assistance; also to prepare for making the work of the evangelist permanent, by assuring the newly organized congregation of a home at once, when proper investigation proved that the mission was worthy of aid and could not build alone.

Five years previous to the organization of the present board in Kansas City, Robert Moffett, corresponding secretary, at the National Convention, Cincinnati, October, 1883, recommended: "Many calls have come to us for aid to build houses of worship. To all these we have given but one answer, viz., that we cannot use regular missionary funds to build houses of worship. Wichita, Lawrence, Topeka and Atchison, Kansas; Richland Center, Wisconsin; Pueblo, Colorado; Jackson, Mississippi; Chattanooga, Tennessee, are prominent among the many places where efforts are being made to buy or build church edifices, and where foreign aid will be necessary. Indeed, in many important places the want of a suitable place of worship is the chief hindrance to success.

"In view of this fact, your board has thought it advisable to begin the creation of a fund to be known as the Church Extension Fund, the principal of which shall be loaned upon easy terms to such weak churches and mission stations as may stand in need of such aid. A note has been prepared for general circulation, payable when $5,000 shall have been subscribed, and should be circulated for signatures during the ensuing year."

A committee on Church Extension was appointed, composed of the following brethren: D. R. Van Buskirk, of Indana, president; F. M. Drake, of Iowa; John N. Dalby, of Missouri; A. I. Hobbs, of Kentucky, and Timothy Coop, of England. Later on in the convention the following report was made by the committee:

"Your committee to whom was referred the question of a Church Extension Fund considered the same and beg leave to report:

"1. We are impressed with a conviction of the pressing need of such a fund as an aid to weak and struggling churches striving in the face of discouragements to erect houses of worship. In many cases a little timely aid would enable such churches, not only to become self-sustaining, but in time to become helpful to others.

"2. We recommend that such fund be used only as loans to churches needing such aid, at a reasonable rate of interest, and only in such amounts as may be amply secured by the church property.

"3. That this fund be designated the Church Extension Fund, and that donations and bequests be solicited for the creation of this fund.

"4. That a committee of five members be elected, two of them for five years and three of them for three years, who shall have in charge the loans from said fund, and the securing and collection thereof. They shall report from time to time to the acting board of managers, and shall pay over all money collected, and place all securities in the hands of the treasurer of this convention, and the acting board shall pay out money upon the recommendation of said committee."

This report having been concurred in by the convention, A. I. Hobbs, on behalf of the committee on Church Extension Fund, reported the following as the committee of five authorized by its first report: C. H. Gould, of Cincinnati, O.; S. G. Boyd, of Covington, Ky.; Henry Ranshaw, of Covington, Ky.; Paris C. Brown, of Newport, Ky., and A. S. Ludlow, of Cincinnati, O.

The first subscriptions made to this fund were then given as follows: Joseph Smith, Jr., of Cincinnati, O., $1,000; Timothy Coop, of England, $1,000; F. M. Drake, of Iowa, $1,000, and W. S. Dickinson, of Cincinnati, Ohio, $500.

WORK DONE.

The first report of the committee on Church Extension Fund was made the following year, which showed that $2,105 had been received and three loans made. Under the management of this committee, in three years $4,711.83 was collected and ten loans were made in eight different states.

THE ORGANIZATION OF THE PRESENT BOARD.

The National Convention which was held in Springfield, Ill., in October, 1888, recommended the creation of a separate Board of Church Extension. Accordingly, article VII of the constitution of the American Christian Missionary Society was enacted, which reads as follows: "The society shall annually elect seven brethren to serve as a Board of Church Extension, five of whom shall reside in or near Kansas City. They shall have control of all funds raised to be loaned to the churches needing assistance in building houses of worship. They shall have power to raise and collect funds for this purpose, and for necessary expenses incurred in the management of the fund. They shall appoint their own meetings, make rules for their government, elect their own officers, including a treasurer, who shall give bond and report annually to the auditor and treasurer of the society. The Church Extension Board shall report at the annual meeting of the society. All expenses of the board shall be met from the Church Extension Fund, but no part of the principal shall be used for this purpose."

A board of seven men was elected at this convention, whose names are as follows: T. P. Haley, David O. Smart, T. R. Bryan, Langston Bacon, E. P. Graves, W. O. Thomas, all of Kansas City, Mo., and G. A. Hoffmann, of St. Louis, Mo. D. O. Smart was elected the first president of the board and has served in that capacity ever since. T. R. Bryan has also served as treasurer since the beginning. W. O. Thomas was the first attorney of the board and served until May 1, 1889, at which time he resigned and in June Langston Bacon was elected and has been the attorney of the board since that time. The amount in the Extension Fund which, at this time, was turned over to the board at Kansas City, was $10,662.80. The amount in the fund to-day is, in round numbers, $185,000.

At the time the board was elected there had been 22 loans made in 12 states and territories. Since that time over 400 loans have been made, 125 of which have been paid off, and over $100,000 has been returned from loans and interest and has gone out on its second and some on its third round of service.

In 1890 the rate of interest was changed from six per cent. to four per cent. and the limit of the largest loan was placed at $1,000 instead of $500.

ANNUITY FUNDS.

The National Convention in 1890 recommended the Board of Church Extension to begin the annuity feature in its work. The following was the recommendation: "We request the board to consider and adopt, if practicable, the annuity feature in raising funds for Church Extension, believing it will prove, as in the case of other churches, a successful method for raising money for this fund."

The board did not begin to receive money on the annuity plan until the first of March, 1898, because up to this time the interest on the general fund was not large enough to pay the current expenses.

In the case of annuities the board pays six per cent. for the money and loans it out to pay church debts on our mission churches to save them from mortgage foreclosure. There is now nearly $11,000 in the Annuity Fund.

THE NAMED LOAN FUND FEATURE was begun in 1888 by the recommendation of the National Convention at Springfield. When any person subscribes $5,000 or more to the Church Extension Fund, the fund arising from such subscription is designated a Named Loan Fund in the name of the person designated by the donor, and no part of said fund is ever used for current expenses, but the interest goes to building up the fund and the returning principal continually increases the working power of this fund as it comes and goes. We now have seven Named Loan Funds: "General F. M. Drake Fund," "Standard Publishing Company Fund," "T. W. Phillips Fund," "Frankfort (Kentucky) Church Fund," "Cedar Rapids (Iowa) Church Fund," "Dr. J. W. Gill Memorial Fund," "Asa Shuler Memorial Fund."

THE NEW DEPARTURE.

In October, 1892, at the General Convention held at Nashville, Tenn., it was recommended that the board purchase suitable lots in very special centers for church buildings, the money to be secured and returned as other loans, with four per cent. interest. It was also recommended at this convention that, in exceptional places and at strategic points, larger loans than $1,000 be made. This has proven to be a wise move on the part of our board, for through this recommendation important strategic positions are now held by the board in some of the most important cities in our country, such as Salt Lake City, Alameda, Cal., Hanford, Cal., Trinidad, Col., Chicago, Ill., Topeka, Kan., Kansas City, Mo., San Antonio, Tex., Springfield, O., Huntington, W. Va., Washington, D. C., Homestead, Pa., and Elgin, Ill.; also Everett, Mass.

It was natural that the first thought of the society was to grant only small sums in aid of feeble congregations; this was the alphabet of Church Extension, but we could not be doing that kind of work always. Feebleness is a strong claim for help, but possibilities of large usefulness are a stronger claim. We must increase this fund to $250,000 by the close of 1900.

"BUSINESS IN CHRISTIANITY"

is a quarterly magazine of the board, is mailed to all of our preachers whose addresses can be secured and to such other persons and subscribers as can be interested in the work. The publication of this magazine was recommended by the National Convention, of Chicago, which met in the fall of 1893. The National Convention at Indianapolis in October, 1897, recommended that the board publish a catalogue of church plans varying in price from a $500 mission chapel to a church costing $50,000. Accordingly, the January-March issue of 1898 was made a special church building number and 72 first-class, up-to-date church plans or models are published in that number. This catalogue is sent to any one for 10 cents upon application. It also contains full information in regard to the preparation for and the putting up of the church building. It has been invaluable to our mission congregations.

THE PLAN AND MANAGEMENT.

The Church Extension Fund is loaned for five years, to be returned in equal annual installments within five years or sooner if the mission church so desires. The board requires first mortgage security with an absolutely clear title, and the house must be insured against fire and tornadoes. While the board takes the first mortgage, it is not with the object of foreclosing the mortgage at the end of the five years if the mission church is doing its best to return the money. The fund is made helpful in every way to get the mission church on its feet.

On December 1, 1894, the work having so grown in importance, the board found it absolutely necessary to employ T. R. Bryan for all of his time as treasurer, office secretary, bookkeeper, and to examine every title, deed and article of incorporation, insurance policy, etc. He has entire charge of the administration of the fund in the way of loaning it and collecting it in a proper and businesslike way. When a difficult point arises in the examination of any legal document Mr. Bacon, the attorney, passes upon it.

By recommendation of the National Convention at Indianapolis, and by further recommendation of the Convention at Chattanooga, Tenn., it was urged upon our board and brotherhood to co-operate diligently in lifting the fund to $250,000 by the close of 1900, because of the fact that we have over 2,500 unhoused missions in the United States.

THE BOARD OF NEGRO EVANGELIZATION AND EDUCATION.

The Board of Negro Evangelization and Education was organized in 1890, and was without a secretary during its first year.

The first year showed the receipts to be $35.00; after the expenses had been paid $6.10 was left. January 1, 1892, C. C. Smith became the representative of this work.

C. C. Smith is the son of John T. Smith, an effective preacher of the primitive gospel. C. C. Smith was trained at Hiram College, Ohio, in the days when Garfield and Almeda Booth were teachers and enjoyed the Hiram fellowship in its brightest days.

He began his ministry in 1866, preaching three years for country churches. In 1869 he was called to the church at Youngstown, Ohio, where he remained seven years and built during that time their new church house, costing twenty-nine thousand dollars. In 1876 he was called to Akron, Ohio, where his pastorate continued eight years and where he led the church to larger work on missionary lines, culminating in an offering in 1883 of fifteen hundred dollars for missionary work. In 1884 the acting board of the American Christian Missionary Society sent him to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, to organize a church. The result of his two years' work there was the splendid little church at Milwaukee, which is a star in the crown of the society. He served as evangelist of Southern California for one year. In 1887 he became the minister of the church at Massillon, Ohio, where he built a church house and remained until 1892, when he was called by the Board of Negro Evangelization and Education to become its secretary, and in which work he has continued until now. Bro. Smith's work as secretary of negro mission work is conspicuous for its wisdom and prudence. He has dignified and exalted that work until to-day it has the sympathy of large numbers of our people. In 1896 the collection for negro work was united with the general offering for Home Missions, the Board of Negro Evangelization and Education to receive twenty per cent. of the offerings for Home Mission work, and C. C. Smith became associate secretary of Home Missions.

Bro. Smith is effective on the platform; his power over an audience is known far and wide. His characteristics are: Devotion to the church; he knows no higher love than love for God's cause and love for God's church, and to it he is supremely devoted. It is the passion of his life. Earnestness—all his work is on a high plane of earnestness; nothing of diletanteism, nothing simply for effect, nothing of affectation. Courage — I never knew a man of a higher type of moral courage. Convince him that a thing ought to be done and that it is his duty to do it, and he hesitates no longer; then he speaks the word and does the right though the heavens fall.

The board of negro work has its headquarters at Louisville, Ky., and is as follows: President, E. L. Powell; secretary, W. J. Loos; treasurer, H. L. Stone; J. P. Torbitt, J. C. Sherley, Geo. Darsie, W. S. Giltner; corresponding secretary, Clayton C. Smith.

The work of the board is largely educational. It maintains the Bible School at Louisville, Ky., for training young colored men for the ministry. Of this school A. J. Thompson, A. M., is the efficient president; he is assisted by Octavius Singleton. This school has a record of which it may well be proud.

The second great school is the Southern Christian Institute at Edwards, Miss., under the presidency of J. B. Lehman, with six assistant teachers, with an industrial department where training is given in the different trades, and a large plantation on which needy students can earn their way to an education.

This school is a great light shining in the darkness of that Southland, leading many colored young men and women through industrial education toward personal safety. The third great school maintained by this board is the Lum Graded School at Lum, Alabama, under the care of Robert Brooks, a graduate of the Southern Christian Institute. It is doing a splendid work in a needy field in the black belt of Alabama.

A great test of the work is its reception by the white people of the South. Those who opposed this work in the beginning are its best friends now. They say our schools have changed the social and moral life of the negroes coming under their influence. The Southern people speak of it as a social revolution.

The board maintains from five to eight evangelists in the Southern fields. They have done fairly well, but the great need is trained evangelists, and it is necessary to raise up a body of stronger men among these people. There are at least thirty colored men who were trained in our schools, who are now preaching the primitive gospel. It will delight our brethren to know that the simple primitive gospel is proving itself adapted to the colored people. Other forms of faith appeal to their feelings; they are impulsive. The Calvinistic faith is too cold, but the New Testament faith, not a religion of mere feeling, but warmed with divine love, can be easily understood, and can and does enter into and control the daily lives of their "brethren in ebony."

In 1896 the offering for the Negro Evangelization and Education was merged into the May offering for general Home Missions. Special gifts are always in order for this great and needed work.

Opportunity has hair in front; behind she is bald: if you seize her by the forelock, you may hold her; but, if suffered to escape, not Jupiter himself can catch her again.

THE PASSING OF THE METAPHOR.

N. J. AYLSWORTH.

In an article in the American Review of Reviews for September, by Rev. William Hayes Ward, D. D., editor of the Indepenent, on "The Life and Character of Colonel Ingersoll," the writer says:

"Indeed, as he died at the age of sixty-six years, he rather belonged to the generation just past, and he was, perhaps, the last of a brilliant galaxy of orators, whose style has given way to a method which appeals more to the intelligence and less to the ear, for we are now separating the flowers and fancies of poetry from prose address more than we did, perhaps not wisely."

From the words "flowers and fancies" it would seem that Dr. Ward is viewing the question in its esthetic aspect, and doubts whether it be for the best to dispense with the ornaments of the older literature. Of this I do not care to speak, and should not write this article but for a more serious aspect which the question possesses.

To speak of tropical language as flowery is to miss its profound meaning and higher uses. Kerl, in his Comprehensive English Grammar, says: "The very use of figures implies an aim to express some thought or sentiment with more adequate and becoming simplicity, clearness, beauty and force." Again, he says: "All literature, especially that which has lived longest and delighted the world most, abounds in figures." To affect a style devoid of figures, therefore, is not only to dispense with ornament, but to choose a weaker speech and one which is lacking in vitality. No man of the century has made a profounder impression on his age than Carlyle. Carlyle's force is sometimes terrific, but take away his metaphors and you despoil him of his power. The most vigorous language of any period is its slang; but slang is a tissue of metaphors. Mighty speech is tropical speech. It is living speech. Most of our common words are dead metaphors. Corpses do not carry well the meaning of a living soul.

Tropical language is the language of feeling. Byron says: "I cannot get people to understand that poetry is the expression of excited passion." Strong feeling always bursts into figurative speech. It is dumb in common forms. Taine, in his History of English Literature, says: "Whosoever involuntarily and naturally transforms a dry idea into an image, has his brain on fire; true metaphors are flaming apparitions, which are like a picture in a flash of lightning." It is a great mistake to suppose that the figures of speech have their origin in a desire to be ornamental. When they do, the figures are false and the style is fustian. Figurative language is the true language of emotion. It is a necessity of the heart. "The man with the hoe" will use it if he gets angry. Metaphors are beautiful, not for the sake of beauty, but because the heart is beautiful. Beautiful feelings make a beautiful countenance and beautiful conduct; why not also beautiful language? The beauty that is conscious is already despoiled of its lustre. The holiest, most self-forgetting words ever uttered in this world have been metaphors. When Christ would scorch the hypocrites of his time with his indignation his speech broke into metaphors. When he wept over Jerusalem his sorrow poured itself out in figurative speech. Take away the figure and you will dry the tears. In the awful garden agony, when he went a little apart and fell on his face and prayed, what was his prayer? A metaphor—"Let this cup pass." On the cross the dying eyes wandered over the corwd, as if to find some one, and at last fell on the beloved disciple standing by the heart-broken mother—"Woman, behold thy son," and to John—"Behold thy mother." Tear off the metopher and you quench the tenderness of the dying words.

But is not tropical language extravagant? Yes, if feeling is extravagant. If feeling be extravagant, stifle it; but remember that worship is feeling, and nothing else.

The mother looks into the cradle and sees a little cherub. The whole world says she is mistaken, but Christ said long ago, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Her love is correct vision. All the world laughs at the lover, but he has just discovered what Christ knew long before. He sees in one what eternal love sees in all. Pity that lovers should be disillusioned! The world has always killed its prophets because they could see. That world which fronts the feelings is the spiritual world. Blot it out if you will, but beware! It may turn out some day that our hard sense is brutality. You say sugar is sweet. Yes, but how do you know? Not by science, not by chemistry, not by physics. The sense of taste says so. Well, to the child it is very sweet; to the old man but a little sweet, or even tasteless. Is he disillusioned, then, and is sugar really not sweet. "O no," we say, "the stronger sense is right in this case." How about the heart's tastes, then? Are they right only when they are disillusioned—dead? Show any credentials of veracity for the one which do not belong to the other. Sugar is sweet because the taste says so; God, Christ, your friend, is lovely because the heart says so, and it says so loudest in the grandest men. Are the Portuguese sonnets nonsense, or are they holy? Did not God love Robert Browning as much as Elizabeth Barrett did? She saw facts, then, and looked upon reality. The heart is an organ of vision, not of illusion. True, like the eyes, it does much poor seeing, but that is because it is not perfect.

Look on wrong and grow indignant (shame on you, if you do not!); look on suffering and feel tender compassion; look on human beings and love them; look up into heaven and burst into the white flame of all noble emotion, and your tongue will break forth in the language of feeling, and your speech will be beautiful incidentally, but strong, moving and gracious by necessity.

The force at work in eliminating the metaphor in our time is the predominant influence of the physical sciences. Cool ascertainment and weighing of facts is the mental habit of the time. In this plain work there is nothing to kindle the emotions, and we are dying into the practical—into Sahara. This is well enough for science, but how about religion? Our Higher Criticism has the Bible on the dissecting table, and there is generally not much sentiment in the dissecting room. A growingly prevalent tone of writing regarding the Scriptures is the scholastic. This is admirable for getting at the facts, but what if the facts should be dead when we get them? This style is not conducive to spirituality, and does not become popular address. Woe to the church when she becomes "lukewarm!" But hot hearts must have hot words, and hot words generally have wings.

Beneath this decline in figurative speech, then, we detect a gradual lowering of emotional temperature, and this is a most serious thing for the church. The moment we cease to feel, we cease to be Christian; for Christianity is great and noble feeling.

The question has another aspect. The spiritual life is nourished by the unseen, but we live in the unseen only through the imagination, and we bring the unseen world to the apprehension of others only through the language of imagination. Woe be to us when we can express all we have to say in the language of the marketplace! We can conduct theological discussions, and talk about missionary work, and about church prosperity, and about duty very well in this language, but we cannot bring heaven down to men in this secular speech. Alas for the church when her words cease to quicken!

What shall we do, then—cultivate a florid style? By no means. Artificial ornament is justly offeneive. What is needed is—

1. That we should not believe in and seek to cultivate a barren style in obedience to the dictates of prevailing custom.

2. That we shall not be too dignified to feel. Nothing is so dignified as a statue, and nothing so dead. We should look on things that broke the heart of Christ and have moved all noble men until we see them vividly as they are, and then our language will take care of itself. The last thing we shall think of will be flowers, but our speech will be beautiful, and it will be as the water of life.

Deeper Spirituality.

"What concerns us more . . . . is the deeper spiritual life and the more intense religious activity of Christian people."—CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, Sept. 7.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—These words from the editorial chair reveal, in my judgment, the real power of any church or people.

The deeper spiritual life does not mean more debate, more argument, more discussion about this plan or that, the truth is, our Christian development, our growth in grace, is the true measure of the real manhood, measured by Christ.

It is not this school or that, this wing or the other, but this: does Christ find in our lives fruits or leaves only?

It costs the church or the individual less to discuss than to propagate Christianity. It is easier to prove that we are right theoretically, than it is to sacrifice for missions and to push the work on to a glorious finish.

In early days every position was questioned, our plea was doubted, but to-day we are known far and near. Christ's prayer for unity is a familiar thing. The leaven has permeated the mass and the era of spiritual growth, development and power is with us. Not that our leaders lacked spiritual power; they were giants in their days, or the fruition of their labors would not be what it is, but let us see that the true measure of greatness is not only money and members, but consists especially in our relation to him by whom are all things, and for whom all things consist, who is the Head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him who filleth all in all.

May the truth as it is in Christ thus shine out from every life, from every church and from every religious journal.

Our Budget.

—Missouri Convention next week.

—Let us have a full representation at Jefferson City.

—These cool autumn days should be full of the notes of preparation for these coming conventions and the autumn and winter's work.

—In the report of a last Sunday's sermon in one of the Monday morning papers the reporter naively states that "a very suitable text preceded the sermon." That is very well. It isn't a bad idea to have a text of Scripture somewhere about the sermon, and the most appropriate place, perhaps, is to have it precede the sermon!

—Dr. Talmage preached last Sunday on "Christianity and Longevity." It is not, however, a long life that we need to covet so much as a deep life, a rich life, a useful life. Jesus' life was brief, but how full of intense activity!

—And so Miss Julia Dent Grant has become a Russian princess, the ceremony having been performed in the Greek Church, by which she became the wife of Prince Cantacuzene. Wonder if these Old-World sprigs of nobility do not smile at our professed love of democracy, as long as they can capture, with a title, the daughters of our wealthiest men.

—The receipts of the Home and Foreign Missionary Societies are approximating, inspiringly, the sums which they set out to raise the current year. Let us all be represented in these contributions. So shall we better enjoy the feast of fat things at the Jubilee Convention.

—In all your giving do not forget the cause of state missions. If this languishes all our other missionary interests are bound to suffer. Keep in touch with your state corresponding secretaries.

—If you are going to be a bird of any kind, be an eagle, a nightingale, or even a sparrow; but do not be a parrot and cry, "Polly wants a cracker!" just because you heard some body else say it. Do not take up a charge against another and repeat it, parrot like, without even knowing the meaning of the words, much less the truthfulness of the charge.

—J. Z. Tyler has an article in this paper on the purpose and method of the Bethany C. E. Reading Course which we are sure will be appreciated by our readers. The time is at hand for the fall and winter course, and it is important that all begin well.

—We regret that a number of interesting articles, reports of conventions and letters have to go over another week. Some of these are in type, among which is an article from J. B. Briney, of Moberly, Mo., on the book of Daniel.

—What the Catholic News says is "the most significant and costly structure in England and perhaps in the world" is going up within a few minutes' walk of Wesminster Abbey in London. This structure, the Catholic News says, "will be far larger than Westminster Abbey, which was stolen from the Catholic Church." It has already cost $10,000,000, and at least as much more is to be expended before it is completed. This it strikes us is a somewhat expensive way of taking revenge upon the Protestants of England, but probably less harmful than others of its history. This new building is to be called "Westminster Cathederal," and is to be the center from which the Catholic Church will put forth new efforts to bring England back to the fold it left in the reign of Henry VIII. But it is hardly a question whether old England has no higher sense of religion than the spectacular side of Romanism. The trend of her Protestant population does not now seem to be in that direction.

—Some fine meetings reported in our evangelistic department this week. The meeting at Jacksonville, Ill., by Scoville and Huston is opening up with great promise. Twelve additions on last Sunday were reported by wire on Monday morning.

—J. G. M. Luttenberger, of Dorchester, Ill., requests that all persons in Macoupin and Green Counties, Ill., who expect to attend the Jubilee Convention, to address him as above. If enough names can be obtained a special car will be secured for their accommodation.

—Elsewhere in this paper is an encouraging report from the secretary of our A. C. M. S., at Cincinnati, Ohio. The report states that the offerings now exceed $91,000, with enough in sight to insure $95,000. But it should not be a cent less than the $100,000. It will not do for a great people to come so near a great mark and yet fail. Another memorial gift would do the work. Or a small but united effort from the churches would fill the cup of joy at the Jubilee Convention.

—We learn through Benj. L. Smith, Cor. Sec., Cincinnati, O., that the Central Traffic Association has just made a proposition for extension of Jubilee Convention tickets for thirty days, by depositing ticket and paying fifty cents fee. This matter will be taken up with the other railroad associations at once, and as soon as they acquiese in it the matter will be consummated, and the extension will be made certain. We have no doubt the other roads will comply.

—The corner stone of the new church edifice being erected by the Church of Christ in Sullivan, Ill., was laid with appropriate services Sept. 16th. The day following was also an high day with the church. The pastor of the church, E. W. Brickert, was assisted in the corner stone services by A. H. Harrell, C. Reed, Dr. A. L. Kellar and others. The address was delivered in the courthouse yard by A. A. Wilson, pastor of the Christian Church in Mattoon, Ill. At night F. W. Burnham, pastor of the church in Charleston, preached. The two days' devotional services ended in the courthouse with an eloquent sermon by the pastor, E. W. Brickert. Sister Brickert also greatly added to the interest of the services by her solos. The new house of worship when completed will be a handsome structure of modern church architecture, and will cost when completed about $10,000.

—The request and suggestion of Brother Richardson elsewhere are both timely and wise. Let us have a convention that will move along on time, and still leave the impression of completeness, without the sense of hurry and external pressure. In order to do this it will probably be necessary to omit lengthy introductions, all apologies, of course, and boil down the peroration. "One word more" should be religiously excluded, and a "single remark," unless absolutely essential to prevent explosion, should be kept hermetically sealed up until after the adjournment, and if necessary, printed in the record. The man who does not "want to make a speech" should not be permitted to do so, for there will be enough of the other kind.

—Last week in Our Budget column we made mention of an article that was not in the paper. The article referred to was Brother Atkinson's appeal in behalf of the Ministerial Rellief Fund. The article was in type, but overlooked in the forms. But it is in this paper and we trust will not be overlooked by the reader. Can we make any reasonable claim to the fullness of Christianity, or even to the fullness of the Spirit, with so important a factor in our work, the care of dependent aged ministers of the gospel, treated wholly as a matter of indifference? Can we even claim to be consistent in the face of the contrast between this and other of our ministries? This is a legitimate part of our home mission work, and it should have its proportionate share in our prayers, our sympathies and our offerings. Do not, then, forget the aged dependent preachers lest there be a lack in the cup of our jubilee rejoicing. Send an offering at once, as indicated in Brother Atkinson's article.

—A. C. Maupin, of Wytheville, Va., says: "I am certainly pleased with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST."

—At last accounts the offerings for Foreign Missions this year were within $1 400 of the $150,000 mark. This is the last week on this year's account, but the brethren certainly will not permit failure to reach the full amount. If the entire amount is raised, the enthusiasm and joy of the convention will be greatly increased, not for the money's sake, but because of the work that it will do in foreign lands.

—Last Sunday was a red-letter day with the Sunday-schools of the Churches of Christ in St. Louis. There were special rally services at Mt. Cabanne, Beulah, Tuxedo, and probably other places not yet heard from. There was a full house at each of the churches named. At Beulah the Bible-school celebrated the sixth anniversary of its child, the Beulah Christian Church. At Mt. Cabanne a beautiful souvenir button was given to each member of the school present. The St. Louis churches seem to be opening up a new and vigorous campaign.

—This has been the richest harvest for Church Extension in its history. "The total receipts to date for the year have now passed the $40,000 mark," is the latest word from Secretary G. W. Muckley. The gain to date in offerings over that of last year is now about $15,000. When one thinks of the good that this money will do in procuring homes for houseless churches, it makes the heart swell with gratitude. But let this good work not stop at this point. The best of the harvest for Church Extension ought to come in the first part of October.

—If any church having a dozen or more copies of the hymn and tune song books in fairly good condition desire to donate them to missionary purposes and will notify E. M. Barney, Perry, Okla. Ter., he will pay the express on them to that place and be grateful for the gift to the work there.

—The notes on the Sunday-school lesson for Oct. 1st appeared in our issue of Sept. 14th. The time for the quarterly review slipped up on us unwares, as this should have been the week for the omission of Dr. Willett's notes. But failing in this we omitted his notes last week, so that they should not appear in our columns too far in advance of their time. His notes on the lesson for Oct. 8th, therefore, appear in this paper one week ahead of the day as usual. This we do that our more distantly located readers may receive the paper before the time for the school study of each lesson.

—The Reform Bureau's latest report, just received, includes an abridgement of previous reports, and so a history of the organization, which has earned large dividends from very small investments. The Bureau wrote the law that broke up divorce colonies, also the anti-canteen law—a great moral victory, even though nullified for the present—and has secured several laws for the protection of girls, and defeated a dangerous gambling bill. Eight other bills prepared by the Bureau have been favorably reported, except the last one introduced, which is a divorce law for the District of Columbia similar to that of New York, allowing remarriage only in one case. This bill is now likely to receive increased attention since the whole subject has been brought to the front by the battle for the exclusion of the polygamist Roberts from Congress, in which the Bureau is leading, though embarrassed by an overdrawn treasury just when the land needs to be sown with literature and petitions on this and other subjects. The Bureau will, however, supply a statement of the case and a petition, and also its report, to all who apply with stamp.

—Christian College, Columbia, Mo., opens the new session with the largest attendance in its history. Mrs. Moore is to be congratuleted upon this magnificent success which has been justly earned. A high grade school for young ladies in the West is a matter of very great importance. Let us hope that the success of Christian College is the prophecy of larger success for our other institutions in the state. Christian University, we learn, too, has opened with a larger attendance than it has had for many years. Pres. Lockhart's faith and energy deserve this increased prosperity.

—The trial of Dreyfus seems to have so aroused the moral conscience of France that some precautions are about to be taken in regard to the moral atmosphere of the Paris Exposition in 1900. An anti-vice crusade is to be inaugurated. The police will be instructed to enforce the law against all scandalous performances and immoral exhibitions, and if they do not succeed the higher authorities are to be used. They have not forgotten the criticisms on their 1889 Exposition.

—The Reform Bureau's latest suggestion on the canteen issue is that renewed appeal be made to the President to submit the anti-canteen law to his new Secretary of War, Hon. Elihu Root, who is an eminent lawyer and Y. M. C. A. director. Another plan of the Bureau is to publish literature in Spanish on American Christian institutions, especially on the American Sunday, for our new islands, in response to a request to that effect made by Gen. Henry when governor of Porto Rico.

—Names are sometimes more familiar than faces. All have heard of A. M. Harvuot, pastor of the Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, O., and chairman of the general committee on the Jubilee Convention, but all have not seen his face. And as he is one of the men in particular whom you will want to see and to know we present to you his likeness on our first page this week. When the great convention is over it will be written that to A. M. Harvuot belongs great credit for his skill and untiring energy, to which the success of the convention, the comfort of the guests and the beauty of the order is so largely due. From the first Brother Harvuot has worked day and night for the success of the convention, having an ambition, with others, to make it the greatest by far of any in our history and deserves to go to record as one of the factors of its success. On another page of this paper we present the picture of two other important persons. They are Justin M. Green, chairman of the assignment committee, and Lottie S. Nichol, chairman of the reception committee. With these pictures you will need to make no further inquiries as to who they are when you have occasion to meet them in Cincinnati.

"What's in a Name?"

Everything when you come to medicines. A sarsaparilla by any other name can never equal Hood's, because of the peculiar combination, proportion and process by which Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses merit peculiar to itself, and by which it cures when all other medicines fail. Cures scrofula, salt rheum, dyspepsia, catarrh, rheumatism, loss of appetite and that tired feeling.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

—Rear-Admiral Montojo, who commanded the Spanish naval forces in the battle of Manila Bay, and who has been on trial before the Supreme Court, of Spain, has been condemned to retirement without the right of promotion. On the other hand the United States cannot find sufficient expression of its gratitude and appreciation of the man to whose naval skill and bravery Montojo owes his misfortunes. This is not the irony of fate, but an exhibition of the law of "the survival of the fittest." Those who were responsible for the misfortunes of Admiral Cervera ought to accompany Montojo in his "retirement without the right of promotion" for justice's sake.

—Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C., in his tract upon "Living and Dying Nations," in the following words sharply criticises our nation for imitating other nations in the things that have led to their undoing:

Why should we cast aside our Anglo-Saxon traditions to welcome the nude to our galleries and homes, when every nation from which we have borrowed it is either dead or dying? Since France is dying of the worst of plagues, French pictures, French plays and French novels should be quarantined, as they are in England and Canada, like ships from infected ports. The problem of impurity is the question of life or death to nations, which have died chiefly of internal causes; not of free silver or free trade, but free love. Moral questions should, therefore, be the supreme questions in politics; those that conform to Gladstone's definition of the purpose of law—"to make it as hard as possible to do wrong and as easy as possible to do right."

—The report of Church Extension offerings in this paper indicate the largest gains yet obtained in that work for the first three weeks in September. The gain of last week over that of the same week in 1898 was 1,353. The receipts for the first three weeks in September amounted to almost $7,000. The receipts for the present week ought to put it up to $10,000, and two weeks prior to the Jubilee Convention up to the $15,000 mark, the amount actually needed from the churches this year so as to reach the quarter million mark by the close of 1900.

—Out in the field, working away for the children and the Master, I have just read and in some instances reread your most excellent editoriol, "Dangers and Uses of Biblical Criticism," and it says things so well that I have felt for so long ought to be said, and the saying of which I feel sure will tend to do much toward bringing about a better feeling among those that are brethren, that I must thank you for it. I could not say it myself, for I did not know just how to do it, but you have put it so nicely and in such finished taste that I have taken it upon myself to ask some few men to read it very carefully. I have felt for a long, long time that certain brethren were not putting you in the right fraternal fellowship, especially along the line of Biblical Criticism suggested, and feeling that this editorial will do great good for all the work and that all the leaders greatly rejoice in it, I very gratefully thank you for it.

H. F. DAVIS.

—I have read with interest what you and others say about consolidation of missionary societies, etc. I like the idea of consolidation, but do not like the one collection idea. Why not take up missionary collections three or four times a year? A large majority of the members are not prepared to give at one time all they wish to give to missions. They could give more, and more satisfactorily, if the collection were taken three or four times a year. The churches could arrange this part to suit themselves, but we could have one central board to distribute the funds.

Most fraternally yours,
R. T. WALKER,
Box 209.

The one-collection idea is no essential part of the plan of the unification of the societies. Local churches can manage that to suit themselves. Unification means one society, one national convention, one president, one general board with sub committees, one general secretary with as many other secretaries for special interests as might be needed, and one general treasury, with as many sub-treasuries as are necessary.

—At the St. Louis Baptist Association, held in this city last week, an action was taken looking toward the formation of a Baptist Sunday-school Association for St. Louis and vicinity. This appears to us to be a matter that commends itself to other religious bodies as wise and promising of good results. The Sunday-schools have become our best Home Mission fields and recruiting stations, and anything that looks toward a better cultivation of this soil certainly has the promise of rich results. In any city or county in which there is a number of schools of our religious order they can certainly be made more efficient by co-operation, and in many instances could support a special evangelist for a part or all of his or her time in the field.

—Benj. L. Smith authorizes us to announce that the Southwestern Association has granted the rate of one fare for the round trip to the Jubilee Convention. The Central Traffic Association has arranged to extend tickets until November 15th by depositing and paying 50 cents fee; the other Associations have been asked to make the same arrangement.

—The following card from one of our most efficient pastors ought to relieve any church or preacher from any fears in changing from the specific department offerings to the pro rata plan.

Yesterday was our "Home Mission Day" and we gladly report a total to date of $322 50, a gain of more than $100 over last year. This amount according to our plan is apportioned among the different departments of "home work." Angola had a gift last week of a beautiful lot for a parsonage. We will build in the spring. E. S. MEDBURY.

—Have just read aloud to my wife your editorial on "Dangers and Uses of Biblical Criticism." We are both delighted with it. It is a word fitly spoken and hits the nail on the head. I believe with you that the "Higher Criticism" is a bugaboo with many good people. I do not see how you can take any other position with reference to it than the one you do take. The future will certainly vindicate the wisdom of your course. You will be misunderstood, but that is to be expected where so many are uninformed. The province of a religious journal is to teach the truth, not to publish things that will please the people. Very truly yours,

J. W. ALLEN.

—I. J. Spencer, pastor Central Christian Church, Lexington, Ky., Sept. 17th preached a vigorous sermon on "Worldliness" in which he took occasion to severely condemn indifferent and careless citizens as well as corrupt politicians and moral outlaws of every description. Of the former class he said:

I blame myself and others—every voter, every minister, every newspaper editor and every taxpayer—who does not refuse to support a corrupt candidate for office and who does not speak out and work against him. If we vote for corrupt men we are partakers of their crimes and partners in their guilt.

—The purpose of this letter is to congratulate you and to thank you for the timely and valuable editorials you have written on the subject of the "Unification of Missionary Interests." I endorse every line you have written. I am sure you will have the support of the Disciples of Christ in this state when the time comes for action. That was a beautiful and richly deserved tribute you paid Dr. W. K. Pendleton in this week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Your paper grows better and better with the passing years. I wish you continued growth and perpetual fruitage. I hope to meet you and Sister Garrison at the Jubilee Convention. You both have many friends in Fayetteville, who often speak of you in the most affectionate terms. With sincere regards,

Your unchanging friend,
N. M. RAGLAND.

If your Brain is Tired

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. T. D. CROTHERS, Supt. Walnut Lodge Asylum, Hartford, Conn., says: "It is a remedy of great value in building up functional energy and brain force."

PERSONAL MENTION.

Alfred Brunk, of Newman's, Va., is spending a few weeks in Cherryvale, Kansas.

Russell F. Thrapp, of Pittsfield, Ill., was the speaker at the annual "chicken and fish fry" of the church at Meredosia, Sept. 20th.

C. D Purlee, of Princeton, Ill., is assisting Ellis Purlee, pastor of the church in Stafford, Kan., in a meeting in Stafford.

C R Henderson, of Paris, Mo., and G. D. Edwards, of Hamilton, Mo., called at this office on Monday. They are on their way to Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass.

Clark Bateman, of Storm Lake, Ia., is ready to locate with any church in need of a regular minister or wanting a protracted meeting.

W. A Meloan, of Rushville, Ill., preached for the First Christian Church, East St. Louis, on last Sunday and paid his respects to this office on Monday.

F. E. Udell and wife, of the Central Christian Church, this city, have just returned from a three months' tour in England and on the Continent.

The poem in our Family Circle, by John S. Martin, of Virginia, Ill., suggested by the 137th psalm, correlates happily with some of the Sunday-school lessons of the last quarter.

Orvis F Jordan, of Sibley, Ill., has been called to the work at Fisher, Ill., and will take charge Sept 24 Bro. Jordan is a graduate of Eureka College, class of '99.

J. G. M. Luttenberger and his wife, of Dorchester, Ill., has been in the city for a week. Sister Luttenberger is under the care of an oculist who has removed an incipient but threatening growth from one of her eyes. She hopes to be well in a few days.

E J. Emmons, pastor of the church at Manley, Neb., writes that any church in need of a good preacher, seven years a pastor, with a wife accomplished in music and active in church work can be put in communication with one by addressing him as above.

Rev. A P. George, State Superintendent of the Missouri Sunday school Association, preached at the First Christian Church of this city on last Sunday. Reports say that he preached a good sermon and took up a good collection for the Missouri state Sunday-school work.

Gen F M. Drake, we regret to learn, is confined at his home in Centerville, Ia., with a somewhat protracted illness. We are sure our readers will join with us in the sincere prayer that his health may be speedily restored. It would be a disappointment to many should he not be able to attend the Jubilee Convention.

On the first of October J. P Lichtenberger will enter upon a new field of labor. He goes from Canton, Ill., to Buffalo, N. Y. Bro. J. P. Lichtenberger has been called to the Jefferson St. Church of Christ, Buffalo, N. Y, to succeed Lowell C. McPherson, who is soon to go to Havana, Cuba. He begins his new pastorate Oct 1st.

The Mt. Cabanne Bible Club, this city, of which mention was made in our edition of last week, as contemplating another four years' course of Bible reading, appointed a committee, consisting of J. H Allen, F M. Call and F. M Wright, to outline a course therefor. Very naturally, their pastor, D R Dungan, was called into consultation by the committee, and hence the statement in Our Budget paragraph.

D G. Wagner, of Lordstown, O., leaves for Huntington, Ind., Sept. 26th, where he will deliver a responsive address at a reunion of the people from Northeastern Ohio and Huntington County, Ind, which is held annually. He goes from there to his home at Mt. Morris, Ill, where he will spend a short vacation with his parents, and from there he will go to the National Convention before returning to Lordstown.

J. W. Coggins, of Mexico, Mo., has been in the hands of a specialist in this city for the recovery of his somewhat depleted health, for the past week, and is improving. He is the pastor of the church in Benton City, Mo., and says that they hope to dedicate their new church building in October.

W E. Garrison, our interesting correspondent of the wheel, in Europe, sailed for America on the steamer Amsterdam, Sept. 21st He concluded his bicycle tour at Berlin, having completed 3,133 miles thereon. From Berlin he went by rail to Paris to spend a week before sailing for the United States, and before this reaches our readers he will be at his home and work in Irvington, Ind. His illustrated letters of travel will continue nother week or two before closing.

Miss Susie M. Browning, who died Aug. 10, 1899, near Avalon, Mo., in her will, after remembering her mother, sister-in-law, nepews and neices, left $50 to the Christian Orphans' Home, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and about $175 each to the following institutions: Christian Orphans' Home, in St. Louis, Mo.; Foreign Christian Missionary Society, Cincinnati, O.; the Missouri Bible-school Work, H. F. Davis Cor Sec., and School of Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn. The memorial of her life appears in our obituary column in this paper.

On last Sunday morning the Beulah Christian Church of this city extended a call to W. A. Moore, of Webster City, Iowa, to become its permanent pasior. Bro. Moore has been on the ground prospecting and will accept the call. Bro. Aldinger has been supplying the pulpit for some months and concludes his temporal engagement with the love and esteem of the entire church. Bro A J. Marshall, our city evangelist was present at the Beulah Christian Church on Sunday morning and expressed himself delighted with the activities manifest and the outlook of the church.

J. W. Allen and wife, who have been spending the summer at Macatawa Park, have left for Spokane, Wash. Bro. Allen resigned his work in Cleveland in the early summer and will probably take up work in Washington. This will make a strong addition to the ministerial force in that new state, but we shall greatly miss Bro. Allen from this part of the great field, where he has labored so successfully and won such a high place in the confidence and affections of the people. With their elder son in business in Chicago, and their younger in Eureka College, Brother and Sister Allen turn their faces toward the great Northwestern field. Our best wishes go with them.

Prof. H. L. Willett spent a part of last Lord's day in St. Louis. Detained by a wreck on the road he did not reach the city until 1 P. M., thereby missing his appointment at the First Congregational Church, both morning and evening, as the audience was dismissed for the day before his telegram was received. He spoke to a union meeting at the Central Christian Church, at 4 P. M., on the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses, and Bible Study, leaving in the evening for Maryville, Mo., where he is to deliver a series of Bible lectures during the week. His lecture here excited much interest in the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses.

P. A. Davey, pastor of the church at Charlestown, Ind., having been selected as a missionary to Japan, has concluded his work there and will sail from San Francisco for Yokohama on the 29th instant. At San Francisco he will be joined by Miss Carrie Goodrich, of Cleveland, O., who will also accompany him as missionary to Japan. Miss Goodrich is a member of Dr. J. Z. Tyler's congregation. Brother Davey was born of English parents in Australia and came to the United States seven years ago. Since here he has graduated in the Bible College and University at Lexington, Ky., and has been for 15 months the pastor of the church in Charlestown, Ind. On his departure from this congregation last week a large and touching farewell and God-speed-you reception was given him. On his way to the Pacific Coast Brother Davey paid his respects to this office. We are informed that W. S. Payne, of Princeton, Ky., is likely to succeed Bro. Davey at Charlestown.

IOWA PERSONALS.

A. M. Haggard preached at Winburn, Sept. 17th.

H. Ford, of Australia, desires to lecture in Iowa while taking studies in Drake University.

Prof. Edward S. Ames preaches to-night (Sept. 24th) for the University Place Church.

Secretary B. Denny is in the Southeast of Iowa. He is at Fort Madison to-day.

Pastor H O. Breeden made a hasty trip eastward last week to put his son into the Culver Military Academy.

A. E. Gory, of Oskaloosa, was in Des Moines at the state board meeting, Sept. 18th. He reports two added.

Vernon Harrington, of Minburn, when last heard from, was in a meeting at Carson and reported two baptisms.

Noah Garwick, a Drake University student, recently closed a meeting at Luther and reports six added

Charles D. Hougham, also of Drake University, reports seven added at Indianapolis in a short meeting.

J W. Babcock, of Drake University, is in a meeting at Moravia. He reports a fine outlook for a strong organization. He is using a tent.

F. A. Sheets, of Fontanelle, is in a tent meeting near Casey. At the end of the 15th day he reports 17 added to the Lord and a new congregation assured.

Chancellor W. B. Craig is very happy over the increased attendance of students at Drake University. There are now enrolled 450, which is more than the number at the same time last year by by 128. This does not include the students in the law and medical departments.

A. C. Bondurant, a trustee of Drake University, the founder of the town of Bondurant, Ia., an old citizen of Polk Co., died Saturday, Sept. 16th. The services were largely attended from Des Moines. Pastor McCash, assisted by Chancellor Craig, had charge of the funeral.

Ministerial Relief.

The brotherhood are earnestly entreated to give devout consideration to this brief message in behalf of a sacred and needy ministry.

The Board of Ministerial Relief is without sufficient funds with which to pay the slender allowances promised to the worthy brethren whose better care we seek to secure. It will require about $1,200 to meet the obligations falling due Sept. 30th, of which amount we now have available only $200. The expectations concerning the "Special Day" offering were not realized. Only 230 churches observed the day set apart to this holy ministry. Brethren, what will you do to relieve the board of this embarrassment? Shall we go up to our Jubilee Convention filled with joy on account of God's mercies, while many of those by whose heroic service those mercies mere multiplied unto us are denied the comforts which our promised gifts would supply? What about a Jubilee greeting to this "remnant of the old guard," whose burdens it should be our pleasure to bear? It is only the truth to say, We have reached a supreme moment in the history of this our newest and most beautiful ministry. Let us act as becometh saints. Indifference invites shame. The Lord preserve us from the sin of forgetfulness. What you do, I pray you do quickly, and above all do it lovingly. The time is short. Brother, sister, this message is addressed to you. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

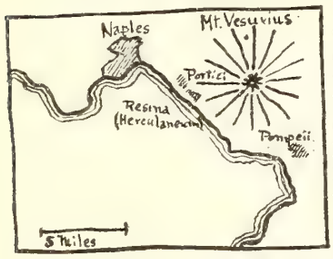
A. M. ATKINSON.

Wabash, Ind.

To the Speakers at the Jbiulee Contion.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Permit me, as presiding officer of the Jubilee Convention of the American Christian Missionary Society, to offer a a suggestion and prefer a request. You have seen the program, and know it is so full of good things that not a moment is left to be wasted. If we are to receive the full benefit of its sessions, the convention must be prompt in its progress, from first to last. It is my purpose to direct it with this end in view, and I ask your cordial assistance. In the preparation of your addresses, may I ask that you keep in view the time assigned you, and rigidly restrict yourself to that limit. Remember, also, that an address which you can read or recite in your study in thirty minutes will require forty minutes for delivery before an audience. It will be an unpleasant duty to call you down before your address is finished, and I beg you to spare me that embarrassment by condensing your remarks sufficiently to fall easily within the time assigned you. Thus you will save me from an unwelcome duty, and yourself from an imperfect address.

Trusting you will accept this recommendation in the fraternal spirit in which it is offered, I am fraternally yours,



W. F. RICHARDSON.

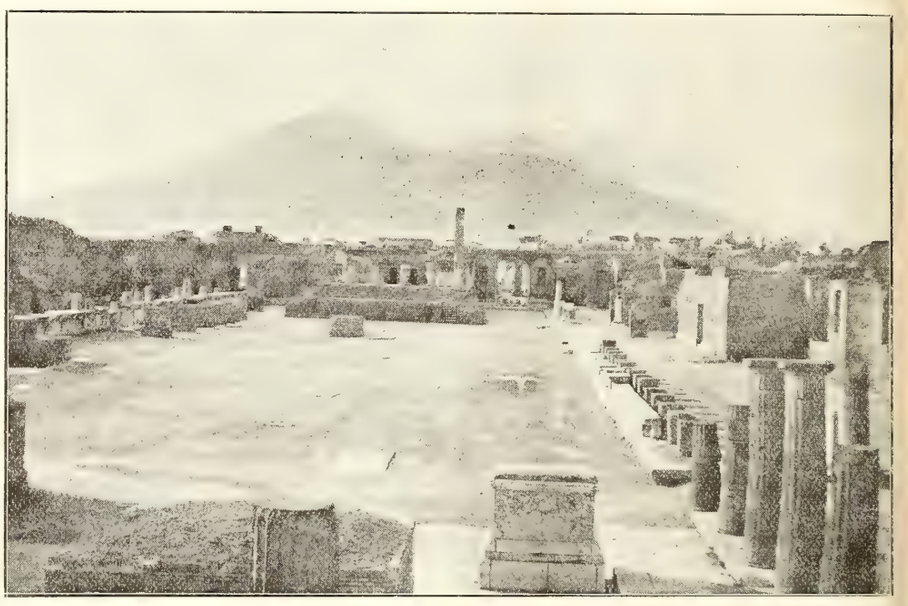
Wheeling Through Europe—VIII.

IN AND AROUND NAPLES.

The suddenness of our decision to take the boat at Genoa for Naples left little time to inquire particulars about the vessel. We knew only that it was a freighter, which made no provision for carrying passengers, and that we must take with us whatever we expected to eat during the trip. So we purchased provisions to last from Saturday afternoon until Monday morning (no small quantity) and boarded the ship. There was some doubt in our minds about getting our bicycles properly stowed on board, and we could not explain because not a soul on board, so far as we could find, spoke anything but Italian. But our hotel porter gave us the key to this and many another situation when he said, "Show the captain a franc, and he will understand."

We passed out of the harbor with a rich Italian sunset and a glorious view of Genoa, which almost moved us to forgive it for the reception we had received the evening before. The Mediterranean was glassy, calm and blue past all comparison with other waters. Under these conditions we staid on deck with no thought of going below to find our berths. When, late in the evening, we began the search we found that there was no cabin, and of course no berths. The choice lay between the hold and the open deck. We chose the latter, and laid us down to peaceful slumber with a bare deck below us and the stars above. The following day was Sunday, but the lack of a common language between ourselves and our half-dozen fellow-passengers and crew made it impracticable to conduct religious services, as we did on our eastward journey across the Atlantic. All day we sailed within sight of the Italian Coast with occasional islands on the right, most notably Elba, the last residence of Napoleon. During the day we experimented in the matter of beds, and found that as a mattress a coil of hawser is preferable to bare deck. This discovery was useful that night.

It was early morning when we entered the Bay of Naples. This splendid harbor, with the far-famed islands of Capri and Ischaia for its breakwaters and Mount Vesuvius for its lighthouse, has been enthused about so much that it is no longer possible to say anything fresh. It never was possible to say anything adequate about it. But the fairest feature of the bay, to my eyes, was a white ship, above which floated a familiar flag. It was the battleship Olympia, with Admiral Dewey on board.



The steamer does not come to dock, but anchors in the harbor. Long before it has come to a standstill it is surrounded by a fleet of rowboats, each manned by one oarsman and from four to seven supernumeraries who seem to have nothing to do but ride out and back. It is a perpetual marvel to me that Italy as a whole does not starve to death. Such a vast majority of the people appear to have no business but to stand around and watch the rest of the crowd do nothing. We rode ashore in a boat in which one man rowed and five looked on. They all tried to lay a finger on our wheels as we were getting them on shore, and probably they expected a gratuity all around, but we could not see that their services contributed to our well-being. So, mounting our wheels, we turned our backs on their reproachful glances. We have turned our backs on a great many reproachful glances of that sort in Italy, and a bicycle is a convenient ally in such a case.

Naples is not a city with which we will fall in love while riding along the dock on a bicycle. The part which we chanced upon first was crowded, muddy, rough and wet, and offered one every reasonable facility for breaking his neck. But we made friends with Naples at once in spite of this. Entering a little restaurant (the most Italian-looking place we could find) for breakfast, there was placed before us a bill-of-fare a foot long. It was the first time in Southern Europe that we had been able to get more than coffee, bread and butter for breakfast. The only familiar word on the list was "macaroni," so we ordered that and checked off a few other items here and there at a venture. The macaroni is always served as a course by itself and frequently as a meal by itself, but in either case it is not considered good form to serve less than about a bushel for two people! Our other orders proved to be lucky guesses and, in short, we decided at once that Naples was a good town and could have any sort of streets it pleased without offending us. I really suppose the waiter thought we were taking an early dinner, for it is utterly un-European to conceive of eating anything worth mentioning for breakfast. But we loved him for his mistake, if it was a mistake, and our goodwill naturally extended to the whole city.

The first thing to do on reaching Naples is to go out and see Pompeii and Vesuvius. These are the sights which have to be "done," and you may as well go about it at once. After that you can spend your time most profitably by simply loitering about the streets of Naples and watching people live. A Neapolitan never does anything indoors which he can do in the street. Consequently, they buy and sell, wash, cook, eat, drink, sew and dress the baby in the midst of the passing throng and frequently take their midday siesta under the same conditions. Of course, when the street becomes too crowded they overflow into their houses, but this is considered a hardship. When anything has to be done in the house, milking is the first choice. The milkman brings around a herd of goats instead of a wagonload of cans, and if any customer happens to want his milk delivered on the sixth floor it is considered the goat's business to carry it up, and the milking is done at the top!

But all these features of Neapolitan street life we saw for the present only with a passing glance, while we proceeded to the serious duty of finding the road to Pompeii. On the recommendation of an untrustworthy acquaintance we took the longer road which goes around the north side of Vesuvius. It was as dusty as a road can be and passing hot. The vicinity of Naples is always apt to be both in August. Still, it gave us our first view of country and village life as it is lived in Southern Italy. The costumes, for instance, afforded an interesting study. For boys under ten there are two styles about equally in vogue, and no third. One consists of a shirt; the other is the same without the shirt! The first time a troop of these little naked savages ran after us through a village shouting their miniature war-cries, I was at a loss to know whether a Dahomey village had been transplanted to civilized Europe, or a new crop of infant Archimedeses had just rushed from the bath to announce some new discovery. On second thought the complexion of the youngsters agreed better with the theory of African origin than with any hypothesis involving a bath.

When you are approaching Pompeii, be careful or you will go past it. It is not as well advertised as it would be in America, the entrance is not conspicuous and the town is invisible from the road. You do not go down into a shaft, as at Herculaneum, and as one expects to do to see an excavation, but up to the top of a hill. The town of Pompeii has had a chequered career. In the old Roman days it stood, a city of twenty thousand people, on a hill at the foot of Vesuvius, at the point where a stream flows into the Mediterranean. An earthquake came and tipped over everything in the town, leaving only the pavements and the stone watering troughs in the streets. The enterprising citizens rebuilt at once in the fashion of the time, using brick and stucco instead of stone. Sixteen years after the earthquake came the great eruption of Vesuvius, in the year 79, and the new town was buried thirty feet deep under a shower of red-hot ashes and pumice stone. Subsequent disturbances changed the coast line of the Mediterranean and moved the stream. The modern excavations are simply the cutting off of the top of the hill formed by the volcanic matter, and the excavated part of the town now lies open to the sky, as it did in the first place. For the archæologist it means a vast supply of invaluable data for the study of Roman art, architecture and domestic life of a definite period, viz., the seventh and eighth decades of the first century of our era. To the casual visitor it offers the picturesque desolation of a vast ruin and the interest which always attaches to anything which has lasted so long. For visitors of all grades between the specialist and the casual sightseer, the significance and interest of Pompeii will depend on what the visitor brings to it. It is a surprisingly large place, and I wondered how one volcano could belch forth enough stuff to cover it, but my wonder ceased when I had climbed Vesuvius and had seen it in motion.

After visiting Pompeii we spent the night at Resina, beneath which lies the buried city of Herculaneum, preparatory to making the ascent of Vesuvius. Resina and Portici are practically one town, separated only by the vast palace built by Charles III., the Bourbon king of Naples, a century and a half ago. The two towns together have twenty-five thousand inhabitants, but so far as we could find there was not a hotel in either. We wandered up and down, looking and inquiring, until hope was almost gone. Then a young fellow undertook to guide us to a place. To our surprise he took us to the Palace. Our summons was answered by a man who was evidently a servant, though not a menial, and after a parley he agreed to give us a room for a modest price. We were led through a series of vast apartments, half furnished in a style of antiquated magnificence, and finally landed in a chamber about the size of a small cathedral. The canopied beds were not an inch under nine feet long, and the windows, which came to the floor, opened upon a marble gallery that ran a hundred yards out into the park. There was a general flavor of mild decay about the whole place which showed that it was not much used at present as a royal residence, but evidently, too, it was not used for any other purpose. I have never solved the problem, so can state but these simple facts. But the reader will admit, I think, that a bicycle trip is not without kaleidoscopic change and the possibility of adventure, when it leads a man to sleep one night on a coil of rope in the bow of a Mediterranean wineboat and the next night in a royal palace under the shadow of Mount Vesuvius.

We had resolved to climb Vesuvius without a guide, and we won out in the end, but it involved a running fight most of the way up the mountain. For impertinent pertinacity and shameless insistence upon being employed, the Niagara hackman is a feeble rival of the Vesuvius guide. As we were leaving the main road at Resina, at the foot of the volcano, we pointed to an ascending road and said interrogatively to a passer-by, "Vesuvius?" He answered affirmatively and started after us. We waved him back and, being still on our wheels, soon distanced him. Two miles farther up, when the road became too rough and steep for riding, we left our bicycles at a wayside inn and, as we were starting on, our man appeared from below, puffing as a man will after a two-mile run up hill, and insisting with all the breath he could spare that we had employed him as guide. Meanwhile, three small boys had joined our retinue, all professing ability to show us all the short cuts. Trouble ensued between the man and the boys; also between us and the man and, to a less degree, between us and the boys. Eventually all four followed us. Presently two other guides appeared and joined our party. We told them plainly that we wanted no guide, but all six stayed with us, hastening when we hastened and stopping when we stopped. Half way up the boys dropped off. At the end of the public road and the beginning of the rough path which leads over the lava to the foot of the cone, they made their final stand. Here a guide might really be useful, and they pled with us: "Impossible without a guide! Difficult! Dangerous! Everybody takes a guide. Much better to have a guide. Me guide. Six francs. Five francs." Heedless of all warnings and appeals, we struck across the lava. I have no hesitancy in saying that it is the worst stuff I ever saw to walk on. In general form it lies in irregular ridges and hollows like the waves of a stormy sea, tilted at the angle of a mountainside. In surface it is like a pile of huge cinders, loose enough to roll when you step on them and sharp enough to cut your shoes to shreds. We missed the path almost immediately because a recent outburst of lava had changed the face of that part of the volcano and rendered our map useless. But we struck across the loose lava toward the cone, one of the guides following afar off and shouting his appeals, "Four francs; three francs!" until the distance became too great and his breath gave out. After a mile or more over this sea of cinders we found the path, and with little more effort we reached the foot of the cone. One is surprised to find how accurately Vesuvius corresponds with one's previous idea of what a volcano ought to be. There is the mountain with fig and olive orchards at its base and vineyards on its sides. Higher up there is the utter desolation of the lavafields. Above rises the cone, a smooth, steep hill, a thousand feet high, of black volcanic sand. From the foot of the cone it takes hard climbing to reach the top in an hour and a quarter. There an official takes charge of you, whether you want him to or not, collects a good round sum as government tax, and conducts you to the verge of the crater. It is a mistake to suppose that Vesuvius has retired from active life. As you gaze down into the abyss there comes a rumbling noise, and a burst of smoke issues from the throat of the crater three hundred feet below you. As the column of smoke rolls up, there comes, mingled with it, a flash of flame, and ashes and red-hot stones are thrown high into the air. This sort of thing happens about every four minutes and the observer, standing at the edge of the crater, can easily imagine that something serious is about to happen.

The descent of the sandy cone is accomplished in less than ten minutes. At the foot our three boys met us and conducted us down the mountain. As guides they were useless, but as foragers they earned their fee, for they ran ahead and gathered wild blackberries which they left waiting for us by the roadside on dishes of leaves. The Neapolitan urchin, when he has passed the savage age of simple nakedness, is the most perfect gamin in Europe, with the possible exception of the Parisian street Arab, and he adds to his gaminly qualities a certain suavity and grace which render him a fascinating type. Such were our three barefooted scouts on Vesuvius.

MISSIONARIES DEPARTING.

Those two dearly beloved missionaries to China are gone again from their native land to far-off Sinim. Of that land it is foretold that it shall be part of the holy empire of Him who shall have the heathen for his inheritance. Therefore, with both joy and sorrow we have said farewell to Bro. and Sister Remfrey Hunt. They had a valedictory meeting at West London Tabernacle. At Hornsey Tabernacle we have on more than one occasion during the past year been privileged to hear Remfrey Hunt. He kindly came over a few weeks ago to say farewell to our church and congregation. Like Bro. and Sister Arnold, the year before, these two missionaries have won all hearts. What pleases us all is that there is such immense versatility about all our foreign missionaries. We have listened to one after another, year after year, and all give varied and novel views. These men and women move in no ruts. Their minds are wonderfully elastic. Nothing could have been more different than the sermons and lectures of Arnold and Hunt, and yet the curious thing is that these are both stationed at the same part of the field. They work together at Chu Cheo. It is delightfully refreshing to hear reports giving such a wide range of observation. Well, Bro. and Sister Hunt and their little ones are once more on the wide rolling waters. Shall we ever see them again? They are in fine health and spirits. They love their work passionately and only want to live and die in it. In that they are like many more of us. There is all the fascinating spell of absolute and infallible truth to inspire us in this our mission to the world, as well as the powerful additional attraction of the sure conviction that this same mission must triumph.

OUR APPROACHING CONVENTION.

I mean our English convention. It takes place at Gloucester, in the west of England, next week, Sept. 12, 13 and 14, and our indefatigable Bro. Spring and his people are busily preparing for the occasion. It is a singular fact that our churches which are planted in our old cathedral cities seem to flourish best, just where it might be supposed that the chance must be the very poorest. But I think I understand the philosophy of the great success of the Churches of Christ at Gloucester and Chester. They were of course started by men as talented as any among us, for otherwise failure might have been conspicuous at the start. The ability of the leaders has, I admit, been the prime factor. But it was my duty as a young minister in my days in the great sectarian world to raise a new Baptist cause at Chester. The success of that work was very gratifying to the English Baptists throughout the country, and I accounted for it on the same principle which accounts for the wonderful success of the Churches of Christ our evangelists have planted at both Chester and Gloucester. I have a reason for putting this topic before my American readers. In our ancient cathedral cities Anglicanism is supposed to have its peculiarly sacred preserve, and all Nonconformists and Free Churchmen are looked on as audacious poachers. But extremes of thought and action always provoke in human nature a corresponding reaction. I soon found at Chester that the arrogant exclusiveness and formalism of the clergy generally repelled as many good people as it allured. Indeed, wherever I went about the city of churches I found numbers of people offended and disgusted at the assumption of the Established Episcopal Church. So it resulted that an earnest Nonconformist had a splendid opening. I only had to take full advantage of the opportunity. When that magnificent polemic evangelist, M. D. Todd, father of E. M. Todd, of Dayton, Ohio, landed in England and went to work in Chester, he found the same causes at work in favor of a grand onslaught on the walls of the sectarian Jericho. People were everywhere lying round, waiting for they could not precisely define what; but they knew when they heard that American missionary—that wonderful missionary—that he had brought them what they unconsciously and vaguely had been craving. I was one of the craving ones. I had given many good souls what they had wanted, for I had founded a flourishing, and loving, and earnest Baptist Church, in which it was almost as great a joy to work as in some paradise; but there was an indefinable something hungered for by my own soul, after which I was dimly groping, which nobody had brought to me. But I knew what it was that I needed as soon as I came to know Todd, Earl, Moore, Timothy Coop and Garrison (for you, Bro. G., were at that time in England). Well, it is just in the hotbeds of perverse old ecclesiastical pretension, like our cathedral cities, that the conditions of ready and powerful reaction towards the simple, ancient, hallowed gospel are created ready for us. No American missionary of the New Reformation should fear to come and assault any one of these strongholds. He would soon raise a powerful church. The right sort of people abound; but the men to send, and the money for the early campaign, are lacking. We are doing what we can, and certainly we shall one day do much more than is possible at present. Our little battalion was never so full of fight.

SOUTHAMPTON.

We have a promising sphere without a minister. There is no pastor at Southampton, that beautiful and growing town which has peculiar interest in America and great claims on the sympathy of American Christian friends. H. Lincoln Gow has retired into the business world. He is a fine business man, and has set up on his own account in trade in Harlesden, a flourishing suburb of London. He will do well, for he is a very honorable and diligent worker in any calling that he undertakes. He is as full of love for the pulpit as ever, and he will preach a few welcome sermons to my own people during my absence from England. I have been enjoying a social visit to Bro. and Sister Gow, spending with them in their new abode a very delightful evening, and wishing them Godspeed in their new departure in life. Gow left Southampton with the love of the people, and the sphere is in good order for his at present unknown successor. The sudden departure of Bro. Romig for America was a severe disappointment to Southampton friends, who had entered into negotiations with him as to the prospect of his remaining among them. News of domestic sorrow constrained him to go very abruptly off to his native land. Dr. Buxton had previously been compelled to disappoint the church also. He had accepted a call to this country with the view of taking up Southampton, but his appointment to a university presidency prevented his proposed scheme. The Southampton church earnestly desires an American preacher of the best stamp and it well deserves one. We have a few men here well fitted for the post, but they are fully occupied and well fixed, and if some fresh American incarnation of this Reformation cannot be exported by you and imported by us, then one of these may have to be unfixed; and probably the church then vacant will repeat the same cry for one from the West to come over and help us. American evangelists are greatly appreciated and loved in this country. The Anglo-American Alliance has long since been consummated as far as the Disciples of Christ are concerned.

PATCHING THE REFORMATION.

The Protestant Puritan Reformation has broken down. The state-established religion of England is precipitated into desperate confusion. Wherever I go I meet with Evangelical Churchmen who are in dark despondency, or with High Churchmen who are exulting over the downfall of what they sarcastically call the "Deformation." The Ritualists were till recently actually jubilant. They had reason to be so. But the Low Church or Puritan people just now see a gleam of light. The new request of the Archbishop of Canterbury to the clergy to discontinue the use of candles in processions and of incense in worship is being sullenly but generally obeyed. The bishops are one by one falling into line with the Archbishop. But the serious feature of the situation is that Lord Halifax has just burst out into open mutiny, issuing a long and red-hot manifesto against the Archbishop's policy and calling on his fellowmen to agitate to save their church from raids upon Catholicism by the prelates. This action is sure to work dire havoc. It will further and hopelessly increase the discord in the Anglican body, which is already divided by chasms over which nobody seems able to build any bridges. High Church, Low Church, Broad Church and Stiff Church are all in antagonism. Yet these altogether constitute what is called the Church of England. It is simply a big Noah's Ark, full of clean and unclean beasts, herded together and snarling at each other incessantly, only ceasing to howl at one another when they howl in unison at some unfortunate Nonconformist who happened to give them a look in.

MY NEXT LETTER

will be written on the Atlantic, as on Sept. 16 I take passage for New York by the St. Paul. If any kind friends wish to communicate with me, they may do so through Bro. McLean. As I write this letter the biggest ship on earth is setting sail to-day from Liverpool for New York. The White Star liner, Oceanic, starts with 2,000 passengers and 10,000 bottles of beer!

New York Letter.

Coming to Tully, N. Y., to-day, on "The Queen City Special," one of the fastest and best trains out of New York, we were made to feel anew as we sped along strange and beautiful country the force of the fact that ours is an age of marvelous material progress and that ours is a country, perhaps, without parallel in scenic beauty and natural resources. The Deleware, Lackawanna and Western Route affords a splendid illustration of this. Leaving the metropolis at 10 o'clock in the morning the "Lockawanna Route" first brought us through the populous sections of Northern New Jersey, literally teeming with beautiful and rapidly growing cities and towns, where thousands of New York's business men have either their permanent or summer homes. It is a section not only abounding with wealth, luxury and beauty, but it is also richly suggestive in historic associations. Some of the most powerful of the Indian tribes made their home in these regions; especially is this true of the Naricoticongs, who dwelt about Lake Hopatcong, now one of the famous and beatiful summer resorts of the East. Among the cities of interest on our way is Morristown, which was first made famous by Gen, Washington, who passed the winter of 1799 (one hundred years ago), in what was known as Ford's Mansion. In latter years it has been purchased by many of the wealthiest citzens of the place, and is now the headquarters of the Washington Society and a kind of historic museum, where many most interesting relics of Revolutionary times may be seen.

Such is the speed of our train that before we are aware of it we are plunging through the wild and rugged scenery of the "Delaware Water Gap," that delightful region where the Delaware River breaks through the mountains, forming one of the most charming spots—one that the lover of nature feasts upon with increasing satisfaction. In the gap we speed between great mountain walls, along the edge of the river, but in a few moments are far above the cities of the Pocono Mountains, overlooking one of the most splendid scenes to be witnessed in this country. The sweep of vision traverses much of New Jersey and Pennsylvainia and fills the soul with inexpressible delight. The contrast between the two views is so marked that great variety is afforded. In fact this is one of the most pleasing features of the whole route. Passing over the mountains we soon run into the practically inhaustible coalfields of the Lockawanna region, and soon into the booming new city of Scranton. Then passing over the mountains we run to Binghamton and to Tully through a section of agriculture and farming lands as beautiful and varied as one might wish to see. The scenic beauty, the commercial and manufacturing interests, the populous and growing cities and towns and the splendid equipment of the Lockawanna Road, makes the trip delightful indeed. Speaking of this road it is also interesting to note that the very day before our journey the Lockawanna people broke the record for time between New York and Buffalo. A "news paper train" left New York City Sunday morning at 3:18 and in seven hours and twenty-three minutes it was in Buffalo—a distance of 410 miles. This breaks the record even of the State Empire Express of the Central Road. Truly, ours is a wonderful country and a progressive age; these facts are abundantly illustrated in traveling over the Lockawanna Route.

We are now in the midst of our annual state convention, at Tully, where Bro. Jos. Tisdall is the pastor. Many familiar faces are seen and a few new ones among the preachers. And a number of faces seen in former conventions are sadly missed. Among them that of our late Bro. W. J. Lathrop, who passed into the unseen from Auburn, N. Y., on the 12th of September. He was one of the oldest and most beloved preachers of the state, has been a preacher for 36 years and most of that time he labored in the Empire State. His home in later years was at Brewerton, where he ministered to the church for many years. Many changes have occurred among the ministers of the state this year, which together with the missionary work I will speak of in my next letter.

Our work at 169th St. starts off well this autumn. Several confessed and obeyed the Lord in baptism; others will follow. The Sunday-schools are larger than usual and rapidly growing. The spirit and outlook of the work is inspiring. If any Disciple contemplates making a home in New York we should be pleased to help locate such near the 169th St. Church. Investigate the claims of our section at least.

It's Worse For a Woman

To suffer with skin disease than it is for a man, for a smooth skin and a clear complexion are essential elements of female beauty. When the taint of scrofula is in the blood it will be sure to show itself soon or late. Often its manifestations are as repulsive as they are painful. Many people have been cured of scrofula in its most malignant forms by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This remedy is remarkable for its power to purify the blood. It absolutely eliminates the corrupting elements. It makes the blood clean and rich. It increases the action of the blood-making glands, and so increases the quantity of pure blood supplied to the body.

"I will forever thank you for advising me to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery," writes Mrs. Jas. Murphy, of Fonda, Pocahontas Co., Iowa. "It has cured me of chronic scrofula, of twelve years' standing. I had doctored for the trouble until I was completely discouraged. I also had chronic diarrhea for twelve years. I am in good health now—better than I ever was in my life, owing to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I took several bottles of the 'Discovery' before I stopped."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, a work for every woman, is sent free, on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps (to pay cost of mailing only), for paper edition. Cloth-bound, 31 stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Non-Territorial Expansion

means paying rent for a poor farm. Now is the time to secure a good farm on the line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway in Marinette County, Wisconsin, where the crops are of the best, work plenty, fine markets, excellent climate, pure soft water, land sold cheap and on long time. Why rent a farm when you can buy one for less than you pay for rent? Address C. E. Rollins, Land Agent, 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Kansas City Letter.

The statements in my last Kansas City letter on the subject of our unemployed preachers and unoccupied churches have brought me a good many letters of endorsement as well as many oral expressions of approval of my sentiments. It is manifest that we have been practicing folly in our extreme independency, and we are now suffering its natural effects. We shall never find a cure for the restlessness of our preachers and the fickleness of our congregations, except in the abandonment of our selfish and suicidal policy of "every fellow for himself." Shall we have the grace to admit that we have some things yet to learn from our religious neighbors, and notably how to co-operate for the common good? I believe we shall, and that thus we shall fill out our high destiny.

Meanwhile, let us cultivate the spirit of brotherhood by securing the largest possible attendance upon our missionary conventions. Our Jubilee Convention ought to bring at least ten thousand Disciples of Christ to Cincinnati. Our various boards will have inspiring reports for us of the past year's work; the music will fill our hearts with the joy of the Lord; the addresses will broaden our horizon and intensify our zeal; the very presence of the hosts of the Lord will thrill us with a new sense of the coming triumph of Christ's kingdom, and we will return from that great gathering to better serve our Master and more sweetly enjoy our fellowship in the Lord. Do not fail to go.

Our Missouri Disciples must not forget the state convention at Jefferson City, October 2-5. We must hold such a convocation at our state capital as will be worthy of our numbers in the state and the glorious plea for which we plead. Bro. T. A. Abbott, our corresponding secretary, has secured a very low rate from the railroads, one fare for the round trip, and the larger our atttendance this year the surer will we be to secure the same rate next year. Let all our preachers buy round-trip tickets instead of using their clerical permits. It will cost them just the same and they will count in the figures of the railroads. One word more to every church and preacher in Missouri. Have you taken your offering for our state work this year? If not, please do it at once, and send to Bro. Abbott or to the treasurer, Bro. Bryan. Do not be among those who have sat idly by while others were working to bring our state to the Lord. Your state board needs your help and the Master expects it. Bro. Abbott is ill, but will not give up his work, so deeply is he concerned for the success of our cause in this state. Will you not help to bear his burden by cheerful and prompt assistance?

The writer was permitted to attend the opening of Christian University at Canton, Mo., on Sept. 5th, and enjoyed the occasion exceedingly. The day was filled with interesting exercises, so varied as to avoid wearying the people, and included a bountiful basket dinner on the university campus. It was my first visit to Canton, and I was pleased greatly with the place and people. The view of the Mississippi River and valley from the cupola was an inspiring sight. The praises of Pres. Clinton Lockhart are on every tongue. It is felt that he can build up the university to the stature it ought to reach, if it can be done at all. The outlook is hopeful for the present year, and we trust that a bright future awaits this honored institution of learning. Bro. J. W. Hardy, as chancellor, is already planning larger things for the school, and if enthusiasm and energy can succeed, we shall hope soon to hear of the endowment of Christian University. Bro. Davis Errett is the beloved pastor of the Canton Church, and is doing a good work. It was my pleasure to visit, while at Canton, our revered Bro. B. H. Smith, formerly president of the university, and for a half century an honored and eloquent preacher of the primitive gospel. For some years now Bro. Smith has been helpless from paralysis, but his mind is as clear as ever, and he is able to talk freely of his faith in Christ and his joy in the Lord. It was a spiritual delight to commune with him and to join in tender prayer and praise to the good Father in heaven. Bro. Smith asked me to say for him to the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that his faith in the Savior grows stronger daily, and that his hope of heaven is clear and sure. He will not be able again to preach in public the gospel he so loves, but his sick room is a sanctuary to which many of his affectionate friends go often to have their strength renewed by his patience and faith. Through a ministry of suffering he is yet preaching for Christ.

Bro. F. L. Bowen and wife, our city missionaries, have been spending a short vacation with friends in Rock Island, Ill., and their return has been delayed by illness, to the great regret of all our people here. What we are now afraid of is that they will come back too soon, before they are well enough for work, and get sick again under the burden of the arduous toil of their missions in this city. They are constantly growing in the love and confidence of our people.

All our pastors are at home again, except Bro. Haley, who is expected in a week or two. We are looking forward to another good year of work for the Master in this growing city. We are occasionally frightened by the efforts of some church to take away one of our good pastors, but are hoping that the home ties will prove strong enough to keep them here.

W. F. RICHARDSON.

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 16, 1899.

Texas Letter.

Morgan Morgans, the well-known evangelist, is to cast his lot in Texas. Brownwood is to be his home. We extend to this faithful and successful preacher a hearty welcome to our state.

A. J. Bush, as usual, has done a fine work at Celeste. While holding a meeting there he learned that the C. P.'s had a good church house for sale. He began at once to urge the brethren to buy. He succeeded, and now they have a splendid house at about one-third of the original cost.

Dr. A. G. Thomas, of Atlanta, Ga., has been visiting his daughters in this city, and while here has done some good preaching for us at the Central. He is one of the most elegant gentlemen I have ever seen, and a man of vast and varied information. He held a meeting here some years since and is much loved by our people.

The cotton crop, once so promising, on account of the drouth will be very short. This, after all, may be a blessing to our people. If it serves to impress the importance of diversifying the crops, it will be a blessing. Our soil is fine for cotton, but why confine it to cotton when it will produce almost any other crop as well?

This drouth will bring another blessing, too; it will teach our Texas towns the vital lesson of preparing adequate water supplies for the summer. Our preachers have often been accused of saying too much about water, but no such charge can be laid at the doors of the city fathers of Texas. But the lesson is being burned into them, which is perhaps the only way it can be made impressive. Costly fires are of common occurrence, and as a result, insurance notes will go up and the pocketbook, the tenderest organ of man, will cry out for more and better water, and then, but not sooner, it will come.

And still it will teach us another important lesson: dust alone or heat alone is terrible; but when the two combine they are almost unbearable. The scarcity of water combines them, for when it is scarce the streets are not sprinkled. This has forced us to try the oil from the Corsicana oilfields as a dust settler, and it works like a charm; so much so that it is now predicted that it will take the place of water in street sprinkling.

R. C. Horn, of Collins County, an old schoolmate, is doing a great work in the community where he has lived many years. At Roseland, where he held a meeting in August, they are soon to have a new house. And there are two new houses in course of construction in that county.

F. D. Wharton is also in the house building business at Whitt. They already have a liberal amount raised and the remainder will be forthcoming soon. One factor in this is in the fact that they have recently increased their Courier list from three to fifteen copies.

Add-Ran University opens most favorably; as does Randolph College at Lancaster. Both are good schools and they richly deserve a liberal patronage.

Many of our people will go to the Jubilee Convention; more than ever attended any one of our national conventions. "Uncle Charlie" Carlton, of Bonham, will be one of the few present, who was a witness of the beginning of this work fifty years ago. It will be a glad day for these old heroes. Heaven bless them.

Ed. C. Smith, Jr., is the three-year-old son of Ed. C. Smith, Sr., a deacon in the Central Church, and a bright boy he is. The other day, seeing some one oiling a floor, he asked his father who made oil. The father told him that God made it. He then asked how God made it. And the father had to confess his ignorance. The little philosopher, after some reflection, said, "Well, papa, I'm glad God made it, even if I can't tell how he did it." There is a large class of people, many of them quite pretentious, who might well sit at the feet of this child and learn lessons of wisdom.

The Best In Six Years.

The week following the third Lord's day in August witnessed the best county meeting in the way of work that has been in Pike County for the past six years. The sermons by Brethren Marr, Chinn, Dutcher and Brooks were of a very high order. Secretaries Abbott and Davis were present, and full of their usual enthusiasm. Bro. McCully was called away, and hence could not fill his place on the program. While the attendance was not large, the spirit was earnest and the responses in the way of pledges for the future work far exceeded any meeting we have had the pleasure of attending. A number of the sisters gave $5 apiece, and thus by their example and earnest talk over $50 was added to the amount pledged by the churches. The next meeting will be with the church at Frankfort, beginning on Monday night after the third Lord's day in August, 1900. The church in this city is moving along reasonably well. There have been some twelve added by letter in the last few months.

"YOU MAY BEND THE SAPLING, but not the tree." When the disease has become chronic and deep-seated it is often difficult to cure it. That is the reason why it is best to take Hood's Sarsaparilla when disease first shows itself.

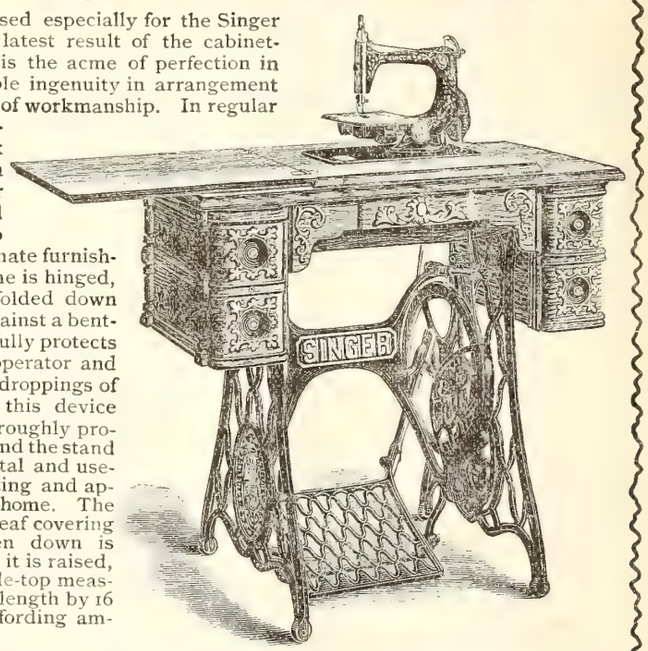
Birthday Thoughts.

The 5th of August was my 70th anniversary. What shall we think, say and do? Think, talk and write about birthdays. Lay aside your 70 cents for the Sunday-school "Birthday Offering." It will make $150,000 if the rest of the million Disciples of Christ and the Sunday-school scholars will do the same. Give to every worthy poor person you see as they may have need, so long as you can. Lay aside all shamefacedness and send your prettiest youthful 30th birthday picture to your dear Standard that you have loved and read so long, even from its first issue. And also send your very prettiest manhood picture at your 50th birthday to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that you have also read and loved from its first issue, with your very best thoughts for all their readers, to induce them to improve their "baby talk" about giving their little pocket-piece offerings like the Lord's dear poor only can do, and come out like men and women with their hundreds, thousands and millions, doing business with a rich, glorified King, who once hung upon the cross for them. Then tell some of the good things you can remember that has been said about you and that you can say of yourself; then take an offering and go to the great Jubilee Convention in real, material form, shake hands with every good brother and sister you meet, as we used to do, and look nice and sweet and hear our Lord tell you "to take a low seat, please, and keep thyself still." Then hear, "He is the best hold-on in a revival that we have"—Isaac Errett. "The best leader of the social service that we have met"—Bro. Garrison. "The best all-round worker that has yet visited Des Moines; come and live among us"—H. O. Breeden. "The leading of that social service at Cincinnati Convention brings you an invitation to become the pastor of the Second Church in our city"—O. A. Bartholomew, Philadelphia, Pa. Please excuse further references.

Well, Pharaoh exalted the butler and killed the baker on his "birthday," and Herod killed John the Baptist "on his;" don't know about their first birthdays. The birth of Moses and of Jesus terrified the rulers. The birth of Jesus from the unseen world left the devil in chains and the key of hades in his own almighty hand and placed him on the highest throne of the universe, supreme in heaven, and now in glorious conquest on the earth with victory in every battle and the final triumph almost in sight with riches and glory and honors already for bestowal upon his faithful heroes. Shall we gird ourselves quickly and fight valiantly with all our powers? Yes, we will.

Our little round log, partly Buckeye, Hoosier cabin, poor parentage "birthday" is so little; God bless them, they were Christians all the same and kept a preachers' hotel all their lives. The mother went to heaven in her 84th, the father now waiting the angel's call in his 94th year. Eight children, all living, and all Christians but one. He knows enough to send him to hell sure if he lets the devil deceive him a little longer. May the parents' prayers yet prevail. The first opportunity is the right time. We were only ten, a little barefoot boy. Commenced preaching at twenty. Baptized thousands, wearing out three suits of overalls. Evangelized in Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Kentucky, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan and California. Was pastor (preacher) in a dozen churches, including Homerville, Ripley, Monroe, Oxford, Millersburg, Napoleon, Mansfield, Bellefontaine and Wooster, in Ohio, and Corry, Pa., and Normal, Ill., and Williamsport and Beech Grove, Ind.

Was secretary of the Indiana C. M. Society one year, and delegate with one other representing that state at Louisville when forming the Foreign C. M. Society. Thank the Lord, was on the committee of five, including Bro. W. T. Moore and O. A. Burgess, on order of business.



Attended the annual conventions from the beginning of the fifties to the eighties. Made the motion to connect our Sunday-schools with the mission work. Was in the ranks when the gates of hades tried to divide us and failed. Bro. A. I. Hobbs was speaking for union resolutions. A. Campbell was in the chair, bowing his head at each sentence of the speaker; Mrs. Campbell in the audience shaking hers at each of the dear brethren, all in a fusillade, each wanting to say something, but all silenced by a call for the question. Vote taken; resolutions sustained and all gently greeting each other as brethren in the Lord and, if possible, loving more dearly than ever before. And why? Because we loved Jesus our Lord more than all human institutions, and many times more do we now. Won't we have a good time when we meet at the Jubilee? Oh, if they all could only be there! We mentioned men and babies a while ago about giving. Well, to just think it only takes ten cents each from a million of Disciples to make a hundred thousand, and five cents each from the children to make fifty thousand more. Suppose they take a notion between this and the Jubilee to give a dollar each and the children fifty cents: that would make one and a half millions! We took a notion in the last few months to give the Ohio C. M. Society, the American and the Foreign, each $50, and the same notion to give Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota North and South Dakota and Kansas, including the Foreign, the same. Yes, and Indiana, our own native state.

Secretaries will hear from M. Gorsuch, of Nashville, Ohio, in due time. What if some of our Rockefeller millionaires, looking upon our booby business, and each one of a half dozen should beat the whole of us before the day of Jubilee? They see that a little food and a little raiment, for a little while, is all that they or their family can ever use. Board and clothing is all that the best can have. Let us sell and give to the Lord's poor heathen and take draft from our Lord for a mansion with him. Give our trash for the true riches! That rich young man didn't know who was talking to him, nor his ability to pay, nor the value of the offering, or he never would have gone away sorrowful. Our rich young men know who he is and what he can give, and eighteen of them are being ordained every day to work for the Lord under the contract. Thank the Lord, a dozen or more call us their father in the gospel. God bless our young men. We heard one confess his Lord last Sunday evening after preaching for Bro. Black in Chicago. We hope he will be a minister. Heard Bro. Smith also address his thousand members, and seven-hundred Sunday-school in the A. M., on the "Gospel of Love." His church only two years old. We visited the Divinity School a short time at Chicago. Think it is mentioned in the 13th and 14th chapters of Ezekiel, in an old time Divinity School. The only danger is getting too smart. Bro. McGarvey with his puncture will keep us all right. A few words more to our rich men and we close. It is not long since we knew a rich friend to offer the American physicians the half of his millions for a short lease of life. They could not accept. He then went to Europe and offered the whole to its physicians and it was not accepted. He returned to America and went to work for the Lord and gave it all to him. We heard another rich friend offer to a young man for a healthful body, two banks, two gold mines, or a majority of the stock, and a wheat ranch with a rental value of 25,000 sacks, and it was not accepted, because neither was capable of meeting the conditions. Let us all be wise and meet the conditions our Lord has given while the opportunity is ours, and God bless us in the name of Jesus!

The Singer Automatic

This table, devised especially for the Singer Automatic, is the latest result of the cabinet-maker's art, and is the acme of perfection in convenience, simple ingenuity in arrangement and thoroughness of workmanship. In regular course, it is supplied either in oak or walnut, but can be made to order in any kind of wood desired, finished to match the most ornate furnishings. The machine is hinged, so that it can be folded down below the table against a bent-wood shield that fully protects the dress of the operator and the floor from all droppings of oil, lint, etc. By this device the machine is thoroughly protected from dust, and the stand forms an ornamental and useful table that is fitting and appropriate to any home. The hinged extension leaf covering the machine when down is folded back when it is raised, thus making a table-top measuring 40 inches in length by 16 inches in width, affording ample room for work.

Sold on Instalments. You can try one FREE. Old Machines taken in Exchange.

INDIAN DAYS.

This beautiful country between the Miamis was in early days the scene of so many conflicts between the Kentuckians and their red neighbors that it was called the "Miami Slaughter House."

British and Indians traversed it during the Revolutionary War in an expedition up the Licking into Kentucky, and Capt. Byrd erected two block houses, the first buildings on the site of future Cincinnati.

In 1786 Major Stiles was chasing house-stealing Indians across the Miami country and was so struck with the rich valley soil that a settlement was made two years later. They landed in November at what is now Columbia, one of the city's suburbs, five miles from Fountain Square. There were but twenty in the party, but they were superior men. Block houses were erected for protection of women and children. Cabins were built around them and about all was thrown the usual frontier log stockade. They came down the Ohio on green oak rafts, which were now broken up for floors and doors to the new cabins. The rich soil had long been in a rude state of cultivation by the redmen and yielded surprising crops; tradition says one hundred bushels of corn to the acre, and one who lived in the Middle West in pioneer days does not doubt it.

The next summer other settlers came. The Indians were threatening. One-half the men worked the fields while the other half stood at outposts, rifle in hand. At night all retired to the block houses. While the crops were growing they pulled the bulbous root of the beargrass and, pounding it into flour, baked a bread and lived thereon.

Now Losantiville was founded on the very spot where our friends who come via boat this autumn will land. The settlers landed in winter. They were poor and lived on game and fish. They erected out stations and tilled the soil, and were often under necessity of defending themselves by rifle. The most remarkable of these attacks was led by the notorious Simon Girty, the white renegade, who could even teach the native savage cruelty. His warriors outnumbered the little garrison ten to one, yet behind their wooden stockade they gallantly defended themselves with success. Oliver Hunt, who was surveying in the vicinity, was the only man captured. He was tied to a sapling within sight of the garrison, a large fire built near enough to scorch without burning him, then as he grew insensible to pain, incisions were made in his flesh and live coals poured in, and he was freely supplied with water to keep life as long as possible. Many such tales are told of the pioneer life of a century ago, which was as full of heroism as that celebrated by the classics of the ancients.

In 1792 Mad Anthony Wayne established a fort and brought his soldiers down and put young Capt. Wm. H. Harrison, whom the city now honors with an equestrian monument in Garfield Place, in charge.

This new addition to the population did not add much to the morals of the pioneer community. The commander was of strict moral habits, but the soldiers had been years in the wilds, cut off from refining influence, and with no amusements but such as their own ingenuity could devise, the consequence was the bottle, dice-box and card-table. Such a school was not calculated to advance community welfare, and a distressingly large per cent. of soldiers and citizens found drunkard's graves. Out of nine lawyers in the now growing village, all but one went the way of the sot to a premature end.

The last landmark of those early days was torn down back in the late forties. It was the first church, erected among the first buildings, and stood near the site of the fine First Presbyterian Church of to-day. There worshipers came with their rifles across their knees and worshiped like the Plymouth Fathers.

Standing on a rising knoll of ground on the site of the Baptist Church, built in Columbia in 1790, is the first monument ever erected to early settlers. It was dedicated in 1889 with a great centennial celebration over the landing of the first brave pioneers. In Eden Park is "Pioneer Grove," each tree planted in the memory of one of these brave, adventurous spirits who made the great West of the present a possibility.

Jubilee Convention Notes.

The committees are busily at work arranging for the convention in all its details. We are trying to make it pleasant and comfortable for all who come.

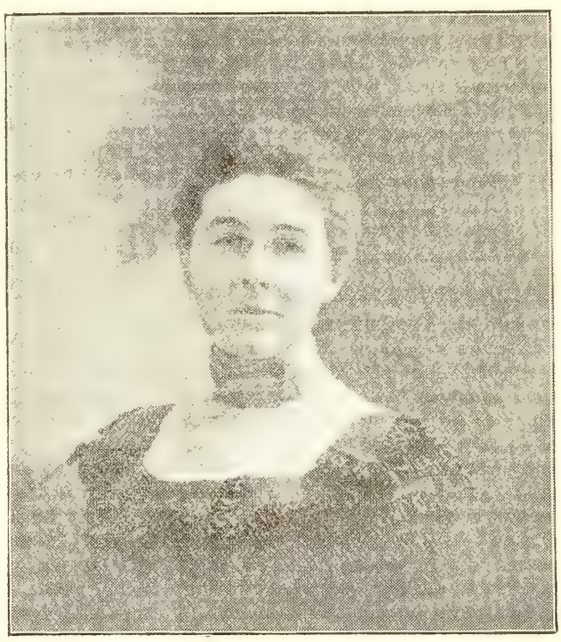
We have not yet received the names of the ten thousand who are coming, but expect to have them soon. Do not delay the matter of sending your names to the committee.

The music committee has arranged to have a large chorus at each evening session and the song service will be an inspiring part of the program. Come prepared to assist in this part of the worship.

All special trains and most regular trains will be met by some member of the reception committee before they reach the city. At the depots this committee will take you in charge and bring you to the Central Christian Church the convention headquarters. From the Central Church you will be shown to your homes. None need fear about knowing what to do upon arrival in the city.

The assignment committee has been working faithfully and has secured homes for nearly five thousand people. It is impossible, however, to secure this number of homes within three blocks of Music Hall. Let no one stay away fearing they cannot secure a home. We will provide for all who come. Send your name at once to Justin N. Green, Central Christian Church.

The buildings which will be used are the Central Christian Church, the Richmond Street Christian Church, Music Hall and the Odeon, a hall in the same building. We hope to have a good restaurant in the Music Hall building, where dinner and supper will be served.



On Sunday a large number of the pulpits of the city will be occupied by our preachers. In Covington alone we will need nineteen preachers to fill the pulpits now offered to us, while there are others yet to hear from. You will, on that day, surely be enabled to hear your favorite preacher.

And then the great communion service in Music Hall at three o'clock in the afternoon. Surely, no one will want to miss that. We hope no one will wait until after Sunday to come.

The college banquets and reunions will be pleasant social events. A. W. Taylor, of Norwood, has arranged for the Drake University banquet to be held at the Hotel Emery on

Near the $150,000.

A brother writes us this morning that he will send $5,000 for Foreign Missions by the 30th day of this month. We will then be only $1,400 short of the $150,000 mark. This may be read in time for the friends of the work to help us. Please do not conclude that somebody else will send the $1,400. Your offering, whatever it may be, may insure the $150,000. Every dollar will count now. It must reach us by the 30th of September to be included in this year's receipts and to help us on the $150,000. If it is necessary, it may be sent by telegraph. We must not fail now.

Christian-Evangelist Special.

Arrangements for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST special heretofore announced in these columns are almost completed. So much so that we can now say positively that a special train carrying delegates and friends who are going to the Jubilee Convention will leave this city en route thereto after the arrival of the trains from the West on Thursday morning, Oct. 12, 1899, and make the run to the Queen City on limited time. The best rate that we have been able yet to secure is $9.00 for the round trip from St. Louis. Parties who may wish to go will not, however, be confined to this one train, for arrangements will be made with the road which will carry our special train guaranteeing the same rate to all who can not go with the party but who will wish to go at another time. Full details regarding the purchase of tickets and time of trains and entertainment of delegates and further concessions as we may be able to obtain from the railroads will be announced next week. Meanwhile send in your names and be registered with the large number who will go with us and thus help us in securing more favorable terms if possible.

Missouri Headquarters.

Delegates and friends desiring accommodations at the Missouri hotel headquarters are most respectfully urged to send their names at once to the chairman of the committee in charge of the arrangements for St. Louis and Eastern Missouri.

A contract has been entered into with the Palace Hotel at $2 per day on the American plan, and the Hotel Emery at $1 per day on the European plan. Do not write the hotels, as all the assignments of these accommodations will be made through the committee. Write at once to Mr. W. H. McClain stating when you expect to arrive in Cincinnati, how long you expect to remain, and the kind of accommodations desired, and assignments will be made so that you can proceed at once from the train to your hotel.

Arrangements have been made by which special cars, containing the delegates from California, Colorado and Kansas, as well as those from Western Missouri, will be attached to one of the special trains under the direction of the committee; leaving here either Thursday morning, October 12, or Friday morning, October 13. Delegates desiring the fellowhip of these delegates from the Far West should arrange to arrive in St. Louis on the morning of one of the dates above mentioned.

In addition to the official trains under the charge of the committee there will be three frains each day for the accommodation of the delegates who may not be able to leave with the larger parties

For full particulars, address Mr. W. H. McClain, 1312 Chemical Building.

Jubilee Notes.

LET THE CHURCHES APPOINT DELEGATES. Every member of the Church of Christ is asked to participate in the deliberations of the convention, but the voting is to be done by life directors, life members, annual members and delegates from the state boards.

Every church that has contributed $10 or more to the treasury of the American Christian Missionary Society should appoint a delegate to represent it at the convention.

Do not neglect to appoint a delegate. Give him a certificate of his appointment.

The following will do:

Bro. (or Sister) ..... has been appointed to represent the..... .....Church at the General Convention, at Cincinnati, Oct. 13-20, 1899.

The Sunday-school Program—Jubilee Convention.

I wish to call the special attention of Sunday-school workers to the very important fact, that one section of the Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati, October 13th-20th, will be given entirely to the Sunday-school work. The program for this section will be under the direction of Howard C. Rash, of Kansas. This will take up one entire afternoon, Thursday, October 20th. It is desired and expected that superintendents, teachers and all others interested in the Sunday school work, will be in attendance, and contribute to the interest and advancement of this important feature of the convention work. The Sunday-school committee of the Jubilee Convention make the earnest request, that superintendents and teachers, everywhere, call the attention of their respective schools to this provision made for the consideration of the Sunday school work at Cincinnati in October.

In our cities it is very much desired that conferences may be held, and all Sunday school workers be enlisted, and if possible, induced to attend our great Jubilee Convention.

We append below the program as provided for the Sunday school session. Suitable music, devotional exercises, and a full, free discuss of the various topics will be interspersed. Such resolutions as are thought proper to come before the convention will be here introduced and considered.

Program of Sunday-school Section.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON, OCT. 19TH.

Vice President, R. M. Giddens, presiding.
Howard C. Rash, in charge of program.

2:00. Song Service, Prof. C. E. Millard, in charge of music.
2:15. Primary Work, Mrs. A. A. Buxton, Kansas City.
2:40. Grading and Management, Marion Lawrence, General Secretary International Sunday-school Association, Toledo.
3:10. Bringing the Pupils into the Church—Decision Day, P. Y. Pendleton, Cincinnati.
3:30. The Past Fifty Years of Sunday-school Work Among the Disciples, J. H. Hardin, President Eureka College, Eureka.
4:00. The Next Fifty Years of Sunday-school Work Among the Disciples, F. G. Tyrrell, Chicago.

We are hoping for most excellent results from this Sunday-chool session at the convention.

Call for Jubilee Singers, No. 2.

The indications are that we will have a full grand chorus at the Jubilee Conventions. Already a large number of fine singers are registered. There is still room for at least 100 more, 600 in all. We want all those who sing at home to be in the chorus. It is necessary that names be sent now. Send names and part sung by each, and receive the music and badges. The singing will be glorious.

That $100,000 for the Jubilee.

The receipts of the A. C. M. S. up to noon Saturday, the 23rd, are $91,000. Pledges from individuals and churches make it certain that one week from to day the receipts will reach over $95,000. Many friends solicit us to keep open books a few days longer, giving a chance to the friends of Home Missions to make up the remaining $5,000. We do not believe the church at large will allow us to fail, now that we are so near.

Now is the time to send gifts on the annuity plan or otherwise.

Railroad Rates.

The railroads have announced the following rates for our Jubilee Convention:

CENTRAL TRAFFIC ASSOCIATION. East of the Mississippi, north of the Ohio River, west of Buffalo, Pittsburg and Parkersburg.

One fare for the round trip; tickets to be sold October 12th, 14th, 16th and 17th.

WESTERN PASSENGER ASSOCIATION. West of Chicago, St. Louis and Peoria to Rocky Mountains.

One and one third fare for the round trip; secure certificate from the agent of whom tickets are purchased, paying full fare coming; when the certificate is properly signed at Cincinnati you will return at one third fare.

It is thought better rates will be secured by our brethren. For the best rates write to

George Halbert, 502 Guaranty Loan Building, Minn

D. D. Burt, 1134 26th St., Omaha, Neb.

W. W. Williams, 206 Fourth St., Des Moines, Ia.

Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

I want to call the attention of the brethren who desire to come South to Arkadelphia, Ark., the educational center of the south part of the state. We have a town of 4,000 inhabitants with no saloon, a good public school, two good colleges, with cheap lands all around. Good bottom land can be bought from $2.50 per acre on up, owing to improvements and nearness to town. There is a good opening for several kinds of factories. I am no land agent, nor have I any property to sell, but am interested in building up a strong Christian Church here, and so in inducing good working members to locate here. We have a church of about 40 members with a neat little house and are being assisted by our Home Mission Board.

If you desire a mild and healthful climate, where there is an opportunity of securing a home cheaply, in a good moral community, I think you would do well to come to Arkadelphia. If you desire more information, write me inclosing stamp, and I will do all I can to assist you. E. S. ALLHANDS.

Ridgley Church Offering.

In rural districts the churches, as a rule, do not attract much attention, but occasionally they loom up with a good time that should go on record.

Ridgley Christian Church, near Moro, Ill., enjoyed one of these occasions on Sunday, Sept. 3rd, that being the beginning of Bro. W. H. Groner's 21st year as pastor of this church. While the hands of our congregation are never closed against doing good, yet we have a way of doing things that is all our own. Instead of taking up collections on different Sundays of the year, we have one day set apart from all the rest, when we bring in the sheaves to the Lord's storehouse and try to make our mites mighty. On this day we have morning and afternoon services in our unpretentious temple and a basket dinner at noon in the beautiful grove that surrounds the church —a physical love feast along with the spiritual.

Our active membership numbers less than forty, hence we can claim to be a scriptural two or three gathered together, compared with some congregations; but we strive to make our offerings full and free when the tithes are counted. Our collection this year amounted to $25 99, which we take pleasure in distributing equally in state work, Home Missions, Foreign Missions and Church Extension.

We know that the Master's needs are great, and only wish that our collection had been the reverse of the figures, making them read $99.25, that the good might be fourfold, but our earthly increase in this vicinity does not increase much. We suffer from drouth, insects and short crops that give cents where we had hoped for dollars. KATHARINE STAHL.

Church Extension.

RECEIPTS FOR THIRD WEEK OF SEPTEMBER, 1899

1899, receipts from 146 churches	$1,281.10
1898, receipts from 88 churches	622.03
Gain	$659.07
1899, receipts from individuals	$1,165.00
1898, receipts from individuals	470 85
Gain	$694.15
1899, average contribution of churches	$8,77
1898, average contribution from churches	7.07
Gain	$1.70
Total gain over same week last year	$1,353.22

Total receipts for the first 23 days of September, $6,693 12; gain of $2,322 over last year for the same time.

1st.—The receipts from churches continue to be very encouraging. It will be noticed that the contributions from the churches the third week are more than double that of last year for the same period. We have already gained 108 contributing churches over last year.

2nd.—Another gratifying thing is that the churches are nearly all reaching their apportionments.

3rd.—If the receipts continue as they are coming in now, we will get about $10,000 in September. We ought, then, to get $5,000 the first two weeks of October. Churches should not fail to get their offerings to this office before the Jubilee Convention begins.

4th.—Churches that have not taken the offering in September should use the first two Sundays of October.

5th.—Let the offerings continue unabated until every missionary church sends in the amount asked.

6th.—It should be rembered that the collections for Church Extension does not stop in the month of September, but continues through October and November.

First District of Kansas.

The missionary convention of the first district of Kansas, this year, was held at Holton, the county-seat of Jackson County. The convention sermon was preached by Brother W. S. Priest, of Atchison. His theme, "The Message and the Man," was full of good, wholesome thought and enjoyed by all present.

Wednesday morning was given to a discussion of "The Needs of the District." Our president, F. W. Emerson, pastor of the Holton Church, made us a very earnest, practical talk in his address to the convention. Next came addresses by A. W. Davis, of Hiawatha, and Brother Le Baron, of Marion, Kansas, on "Church Finance." The latter substituted for Brother O. L. Cook, our state secretary, who could not be with us.

The afternoon session was in the interest of Christian Endeavor and was one of the very best of the convention. The paper of Mrs. H. E. Wikoff, of Seneca, on "Missions and C. E.," was requested for publication.

It is very evident that we have become quite infatuated with Brother W. T. Moore, of Columbia, for his services are in great demand in Kansas.

Thursday morning was the Bible-school session. Several excellent papers were read, and that of Mrs. V. C. Hough, of Holton, on "Our Obligation to the Child," was requested for publication.

The afternoon session was under the auspices of the C. W. B. M., Mrs. M. C. Rogers, of Nortonville, presiding. The addresses, reports and discussions all showed that the workers in this department of the Lord's work in the first district of Kansas have the same zeal that characterizes them in every other section where these consecrated women are banded together in His name.

The session of Friday morning was unique in regard to the subjects discussed, e. g., "Congregational Discipline," "Qualification and Character of an Elder," "The Elder's Work and Responsibility," "The Work of the Deacon," etc. These discussions were both spirited and spiritual.

Immediately following there were the reports of committees and the election of officers.

The committee on time and place selected Nortonville as the place for our next convention.

The closing session of the convention on Friday afternoon was as full of interest as any other. The outlook in the first district for the coming year is full of promise.

The tenth annual convention of the Churches of Christ in Tennessee will be held at Memphis, Oct. 2-7.

The railroads grant all delegates and visitors one and one-third rate on the certificate plan. Buy tickets to Memphis. Ask agent for certificate. This when signed by the secretary will return for one-third fare. Don't neglect the certificate. We expect the greatest convention in our history. Churches and Sunday-schools should appoint delegates next Lord's day. Send names to Wm. D. Rice, Linden St. Church, Memphis, Tenn. He is chairman of entertainment committee. Come, let us rejoice together.

State Mission Notes.

We are surely very much under obligations to the railroads for the good rate they have given us to the Jefferson City convention. We never had as good rates to any state gathering before. I move a vote of thanks to the following roailroads who have granted the of one fare for the round trip to Jefferson City from all Missoari points; tickets on sale Oct. 2, 3, 4, good to return including Oct. 6. Note the names carefully and see if your road is mentioned: Missouri Pacific, M. K. & T., C. & A., Burlington, Wabash, Santa Fe, Rock Island, Port Arthur (south of Pattonsburg), Frisco and Ft. Scott & Memphis. This is the

on this matter; be sure and read what was said in last week's paper about taking a receipt from any agent of any of the above roads who will not sell you tickets at this rate. Don't let him put you off wlth any excuse whatever; get the receipt. If your road is not in the list buy to the nearest point on one that is, and thence into Jefferson City.

DID YOU, OR DID YOU NOT?

What? Send your name to J. P. Pinkerton for your entertainment? You ought to do it now. Remember, passengers coming by way of C. & A. or M. K. & T. will be transferred; bus tickets are attached to your railroad tickets. The bus will take you right to the church, where all will first go. Then you will be assigndd homes. Don't any of you fail to CONGRATULATE

Bro. W. E. M. Hackleman, our handsome, happy leader of song; because he has made himself a fit subject by marrying one of the sweetest girls, Miss Pearl Conner. So we can look for a wonderfully happy leadership when he presents his Silver and Gold song book, pulls out that wonderful horn and thinks of his sweetheart; what music there will be!

THE BOOKS

close on the 30th day of September, you know, but if it should be that you bring money, and I think a lot of you are going to do so, to the convention, we will find a way to keep the books from getting locked so you can't get in. So bring all you can and we will smile upon you as we never smiled before.

BROTHER PINKERTON

says they are pushing things night and day in Jefferson City, and will have all things in complete readiness. There will be no failure there. Neither will there be any failure on the part of the men who have been selected as our representatives on the platform. They are all strong men and will prove themselves workmen of which we need not be ashamed before any audience.

C. C. HILL

writes that ten or twelve will go from California; there ought to be a great gathering, for such reports are coming from all around. One came in with a sad countenance the other day and declared that everybody was going to the Jubilee Convention and nobody was going to the state convention at all. I turned over three or four letters to him and told him to read, and he changed his tune right away. There are always some croakers around, but I know that we have the promise of a great convention.

REMEMBER,

the entertainment is free. The little church has lots of friends, and they are lending a willing hand, so that there will be an abundance of room. Still, if you want to go to the hotels, they have made a rate of $1.50 per day, and boarding houses $1.00. Then the leading restaurant will serve meals to delegates at 20c. per meal. Thus all can be suited. Now then the last word to all is, COME!

T. A. ABBOTT.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

To see the benefit of your work, brethren, think of the Cumberland Presbyterians, with their annual Bible-school Normal, but no field work, and they have in Missouri 592 churches and 232 Bible-schools, or less than half as many schools as churches, and one of their ministers was free to say that the trouble is, "we spend too much time and money in our annual gathering and not enough in the field."

The Macon County meeting also suffered for want of some one to see to it, though the Bethel brethren made preparation for large delegations, resulting in much loss to them. Macon City was well represented, so was Fair View, but the others were conspicuous by their absence. In the field work nothing seems to have been done. Oscar Ingold, A. S. Mears and others did hard work for the convention, so that all things were ready and the Hodgen brethren made daily trips to the railroad, but to no good. J. D. Dillard and I had the time and used it to the profit of the work and the workers, who in return were kind to us.

M. H. Wood is at Sarvis Point in Douglas and hopes to report the money for a new house before he leaves them, also a good meeting and a Bible-school reorganized. There have been nine additions to date, while immense crowds from many parts of the county were in attendance. Our evangelist has not missed a day in more than a month, and the Lord has blessed him in all his work.

The Lewis County meeting would have seen a great day but for the rain. Yet, Clinton Lockhart moved along in the work as if all things favored, and the giving at the right time was splendid. The reports from the field were good and the people will support a worthy cause, is my experience. The Lewistown brethren were very kind, entertaining all delegations most cheerfully, and my home was so pleasant that I must again thank good friends. The Flacks have abated none of their interest for the kingdom, while R. B. Caldwell and Lee Roberts are towers of strength at Monticello. Lewistown did our work proud, and Monticello paid up on last year and renewed for this. Mrs. R. B. Caldwell, Monticello, is to be our county Bible-school superintendent and Lewis will be reported for the next convention. You see, the ladies will get the statistics some day.

Bro. Geo. S. Washburn very kindly conveyed me to his delightful home near Sweet Oak, where I had pleasant fellowship with J. B. Corwine, as we discussed the field. As he does always, the nights of my stay were given to our work, and an offering of more than their apportionment was made, and Mrs. Maggie Washburn will be our Knox County Bible-school superintendent for the coming year.

Bro. DeVoss, superintendent, handed me the apportionment of LaBelle in full, thanks to him and the school. Bro. Corwine preaches for them too, and the school has always stood by us and the children of Missouri.

John Giddens, so true to the Lord's work, and who never loses a day if possible from it, sends greeting to the brotherhood, asking that they help keep him in the needy parts of his district, so that he may gladden them with the report of his work at the end of this quarter. Brethren, will you not remember all the force this way? Will you not do it immediately?

I regret missing our state gathering, and would not, only a promise to Tennessee, under impression that it was later, will compel me. Let no one else be so mean, but everybody go. Make the railroads glad of the especially low rate granted you, and Bro. Abbott to shout for joy. You ought to do it, every one of you.

Is yours to be a banner school at California, friend? and if so, get ready. H. F. DAVIS.

Some men want the earth, but Lieutenant Peary, it seems, would be satisfied with the North Pole if he could only find it.

WOULD you rather buy lamp-chimneys, one a week the year round, or one that lasts till some accident breaks it?

Tough glass, Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass," almost never break from heat, not one in a hundred.

Where can you get it? and what does it cost?

Your dealer knows where and how much. It costs more than common glass; and may be, he thinks tough glass isn't good for his business.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

Address MACBETH, Pittsburgh, Pa.

From Honolulu.

"In God is my salvation and my glory;
The rock of my strength and my refuge is in God,
Trust in him at all times;
Ye people, pour out your heart before him.
God is a refuge for us."

Since my return to America, last September, it has pleased God to open the hearts of his church to supply the needed funds for the return of myself together with my family to Honolulu to engage in his work there. He has watched over us for good in our journey and we are now looking to him for guidance in the work.

The following is a report of all offerings received for the journey and our personal expenses:

Receipts of work done for the Kansas C. W. B. M., $240; personal offerings already reported, $66.18; offerings of Indiana churches: Madison, $7.75; N. Madison, $6.71; Salem, $23.05; Orleans, $3.15; Mt. Gilead, $2.06; Spencer, $4 06; Mrs. D. C. Branham, Indianapolis, $1.00; Mrs. Mary Cobb, Indianapolis, $1.00; Y. P. S. C. E., Eldorado, Kan., $5.00; Annie Beecham, Topeka, Kan., .50; N. Topeka Church, $1 50; Emporia, Kan., auxiliary, $5.05; Mrs. Ramsey and Hall, Emporia, .95; Mrs. Hardcastle and Kenyon, Emporia, $5.00; First Church (Bro. Smither) Los Angeles, $17.10; Bro. M. J. Ferguson, Compton, Cal., $1.00; Mrs. Lydia Luse, San Francisco, $2.00; Honolulu Church, $19.00; Miss Alice Beard, Kailua, Hawaii, $25.00; Mrs. May Hopper, Honolulu, $30 00; Mrs. Louise Kelly, Emporia, $5 00. Total, $471.06. Expenses of Indiana journey, $31.35; expenses of Honolulu journey, $259.95.

Special courtesies were extended to us by the churches of Topeka and Emporia on leaving Kansas, and the Honolulu church has given a warm welcome.

Bro. and Sister Luse gave us an entertainment in San Francisco and Bro. and Sister W. K Azbill have received us for Christ's sake in Honolulu. Most lovingly and tenderly has God been with us and for us, both in his personal care and in his love reflected from the consecrated hearts of his people. Hands often lifted in holy prayer have touched ours and blessings have been given that have strengthened and encouraged us.

Here is a dearth of Christian work and workers. "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" The way is not yet clear, but he who is in the light knows it even to the end, to rest and home, and will reveal it.

"And all things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer believing, ye shall receive."

CALLA J. HARRISON, care of
W. K. AZBILL.

Evangelistic.

UTAH.

Salt Lake City, Sept. 18.—Four added by letter since last report.—W. H. BAGBY.

MISSISSIPPI.

Joxon, Sept. 19.—Have had 61 additions in the last four weeks; 52 baptisms and six from Baptists among the number. —JOHN A. STEVENS.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, Sept. 16. — The meeting in Valina continues with 18 additions, and more to follow.—J. M. CANFIELD.

Greencastle, Sept. 18.—One added last night at Hamrick's from the Baptists. Two last month by statement.—L. V. BARBRE.

MICHIGAN.

West Sebewa, Sept. 16.—J. W. Humphrey, evangelist for third district, has closed a meeting at this place, resulting in 22 baptisms and the organization of a church of 36 members.—P. C. PEACOCK.

IOWA.

Storm Lake, Sept. 20.—Our work here moves along nicely. We close our work October 1 with 37 additions, but the work is unusually hard, as we have here 10 churches to a population of 2,500.—CLARK BATEMAN.

OHIO.

Lordstown, Sept. 22.—With our own forces we closed a short meeting of one week. The visible results were four additions; three by letter, two of them from the M. E.s and one young man made the good confession. We expect to do a good work in this place.—D. G. WAGNER.

CALIFORNIA.

Pasadena, Sept. 15.—There have recently been seven accessions to the East Side Church, of this city, three of whom were baptized. The writer leaves in a few days for the East and the Jubilee Convention. The pulpit will be supplied by W. T. Kendrick in my absence.—H. ELLIOTT WARD.

NEBRASKA.

Sept. 2.—Our meeting at Blair closed Sunday night at high tide. The old debt of $150 was erased, house dedicated and 20 good additions. All this done during our short stay. Bro. C. C. Atwoood, of Kansas, preached the gospel in all its fullness. We begin a meeting at North Bend, Sept. 24.—F. HOWARD SWEETMAN.

ARKANSAS.

Staunton, Sept. 20.—I closed a short meeting at Thayer, Mo., with 13 added; eight by obedience. I have received into the fellowship of the church during the past year 51; 26 by obedience.—T. H. SPEER.

Hebron, Sept. 21.—One added by baptism at Arkadelphia last Lord's day.—E. S. ALLHANDS.

FLORIDA.

Sept. 6 —A. B. Huring, of Lake Park, Ga., held an eight days' meeting at Burnum Church in Hamilton County, closing the first Sunday in this month, which resulted in 27 accessions; 23 by baptism. Florida is an open field, white unto the harvest for mission work.

Jacksonville, Sept 18—We had another important addition at our regular morning service, at the Adams St. Christian Church yesterday.—T. H. BLENUS.

KENTUCKY.

Lexington, Sept. 20.—Bro. Updike had to close his meeting here on account of sickness. He preached three sermons and broke down. We feel that we have missed the opportunity of our lives to build up the cause here. I am now open for engagement with either church or evangelist. Address 192 Spring Street, Lexington, Ky. For a Southern field I could furnish a tent that will seat one thousand people.—C. M. HUGHES.

Lexington, Sept. 22.—Our meeting at Robinson closed Sunday night with 21 additions and a great revival of interest among the members of the church. Bro. W. P. Jennings did the preaching in a very forcible and convincing manner.—LOYD M. FORD.

KANSAS.

Topeka, Sept. 21.—Thirty-six in all at the Iowa Falls (Ia.) meeting I never saw such complete satanic co-operation against a gospel meeting in my life. But a strong church is now organized, a beautiful hall rented, money raised for a pastor, a pastor called, Bro. W. F. McCormick, a Sunday-school and Ladies' Aid formed and well officered. Iowa state and district boards were behind this and the Vinton meeting. One hundred and sixty-six were added in the two meetings. Vinton church is building. J. F. will not build this winter. Churches desiring my services will address me at Topeka, Kan. I go next to Melbourne, Ia. —D. D. BOYLE.

TEXAS.

San Antonio, Sept. 18.—Our Sunday-school started off the fall work with an attendance of 183 yesterday. We presented each scholar with a pretty button—a perpetual reminder of Sunday-school obligations and an advertisement for the school. Services well attended throughout the day despite rain. Our Mexican brethren held baptismal services upon the banks of our beautiful San Antonio River, and four were buried with Christ in baptism. Sept. 10th we baptized one young man from the Roman Catholics and one from the Cumberland Presbyterians and received one by letter from Broadway, Louisville. Bro. Quinters, our Mexican evangelist, made a tour of San Marcos, Readsville and Lockhart a few weeks ago, and 14 made the confession. Our work among the Spaniards is prospering and ought to be encouraged.—GEO. B. RANSHAW.

ILLINOIS.

Normal, Sept. 19.—Three added recently.—E. B. BARNES.

Walnut, Sept. 21.—Sixteen confessions to date; house full. J. E. Parker preached the Word with plainness and purity.—WILL F. SHAW.

Watseka, Sept. 18.—Another added here yesterday at our regular services. This congregation will be well represented at the Jubilee Convention in October.—B. S. FERRALL.

Mackinaw, Sept. 18.—Ten confessions in a meeting at Allentown, a mission point of the Mackinaw Church. — HARVEY G. HOWARD, pastor.

Geo. L. Snively, pastor of the church in Jacksonville, reports 23 additions to date in the Scoville and Huston meetings in that city; 12 on last Sunday.

Charleston, Sept. 21.—Two confessions at prayer-meeting last night. Have recently entered upon my fourth year's work at this place. Much work to be done.—F. W BURNHAM.

Camp Point, Sept. 16.—Meeting at Northboro, Ia., closed last night with an organization of over 30 members. Sectarianism was rife, but the gospel was heard and obeyed. My next meeting will be held in Eutaw, Ala.—R. A. OMER.

MISSOURI.

Tarkio, Sept. 18. — Large audiences and good interest here yesterday. One confession. —A. R. HUNT.

Meeting at Macon third, fourth and fifth Lord's days in July, by H. A. Northcutt; result, 13 additions.

Meeting at Holliday second, third and fourth Lord's days in August, by J. J. Lockhart; result, 20 additions.

Meeting at Union, Monroe County, first and second Lord's days in September, by J. J. Lockhart; result, 31 additions.

Meeting at Illinois Bend, Adair County, first and second Lord's days in August, by A. P. Terrell; result, nine additions.

Schell City —Just closed a four weeks' meeting at Grove Church, Vernon County, with 36 additions; 26 conversions, five by letter and five from the Baptists.—H. R. PRICE.

Roby, Sept. 13.—I have just returned from Plad, where I held a meeting, organized a church with eight members, had four additions and received a call to preach one fourth time for them. Will move there the third Lord's day in October.—G. W. HAMILTON.

St. Louis, Sept. 19.—I have just returned from a little vacation of two weeks spent in a meeting at Mokane, a little town 125 miles west of here, on the M. K. & T. R. R. J. H. Thomas, of Fulton, preaches for the church at this place one-fourth of his time. He was with us during the second week of our meeting. I had never met him before, but found him a true yokefellow in the work of the Master. This meeting, as is the case with nearly all our meetings, closed entirely too soon for the best results. I shall long remember my stay among the very hospitable people of Mokane and vicinity. I am now ready for a vigorous fall and winter campaign in our own city, the most important field in the state.—S. B. MOORE.

The Fourth Christian Church, this city, E. T. McFarland pastor, reported four additions on last Sunday; two Sundays.

Kirksville, Sept. 22,—Five additions at our regular service last Sunday. Forty additions since I began a month ago.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Unionville, Sept. 22.—The congregation at Blythedale, was very weak. Our short meetings there resulted in 42 additions. Now they are strong enough to build a house and employ a preacher. We elected the necessary committees and they began work on a house at once, and expect to have it completed by the first of the year and employ a preacher. We never enjoyed a meeting better. They know how to treat evangelists royally. May the Lord bless this noble band of brethren. We are assist Bro. Prunty in a meeting here.—MORGAN MORGANS AND DAUGHTER.

In Captivity.

BY JOHN S. MARTIN.

By Babylon's flowing waters
A captive people stand;
And their eyes are red with weeping
For their dearest fatherland.

They've hung their harps on willows,
And no more their voices ring,
For they mourn for far-off Zion
With hearts too sad to sing.

And yet amid their sorrows
Their captors ask a song;
But they cannot sing of Zion,
The home for which they long.

They would sooner far forget
The cunning of their hands,
Then to sing the songs of Zion
While they dwell in foreign lands.

Jerusalem they'll not forget,
Nor to their captors bow;
They'll not forget her happy songs,
Though they cannot sing them now.

The God of Jacob heard their grief
And knew their constancy;
Then raised up one whom they knew not
To loose and set them free.

So let us from their constancy
A lesson of wisdom learn:
Let our hands forget their cunning,
Ere from our God we turn.

Ethics of "David Harum."

MARY E. WARE.

One of the ironies of fate is, that the book that was refused by five different publishers, when finally accepted by Appleton's, was the most popular and best selling of the year '98.

Another peculiar fact about this delightful book is that it was written by a business man who had never graduated in college. Genuis will out.

The book as a whole is a charming bit of realism toned with the finest touches of sentiment. The plot, if it may be said to have one, is very simple. It suggests in some way a bouquet of wild flowers.

Nothing could be more artistic than the subtle way in which John Lenox's quiet good breeding contrasts with David Harum's want of social training.

Mrs. Bixbee, David's sister, is the personification of mother-love. Having no children of her own, she has all the more love to give to the children of the real mothers.

Mary Blake, the heroine, is a type of the well-to-do American girl, who was not so much "impressed with what money procures for people as what it saves them from."

David Harum is the central figure of the book. The author allows him to tell the story of his life in conversations with John Lenox from time to time. Each conversation is a complete story in itself, told in the dialect of Western New York, interspersed with slang and illustrated with metaphors drawn from his horse racing experience.

David's outer actions were often seemingly harsh, yet he was very kind-hearted. In the end of his dealings you found out that the harshness was only a cloak thrown over his generosity.

The sense of gratitude for a kindness and the feeling of bitterness against an injustice were as strong in him as in the heart of an Indian.

One of the strongest chapters in the book describes his releasing a thousand-dollar mortgage one Christmas morning from the home of Widow Cullom, because her husband had taken him to the circus when he was a boy and had given him 10 cents to spend. It was the first real pleasure of his life. It aroused in him a respect for himself. With that 10 cents he started out into the world.

He could never forget how unkind his oldest brother had been to him. "He took perticler delight," said Mrs. Bixbee, "in abusin' an' tormentin' Dave, an' the poor little critter was just as 'fraid as death of him, an' good reason." When this half-brother was too old to work, his townspeople appointed a man to visit David and ask him to take care of the penniless old man.

David absolutely refused to help the brother individually, but told the committee man to send him to the poorhouse. "When he dies, git him the tightest coffin you kin buy to keep him f'm spilin' the earth as long as may be, and then you send me in the hull bill. But this has got to be between you and me only. You c'n tell the rest of the committee what you like, but if you tell a livin' soul about this understandin' and I find it out I'll never pay one cent an' you'll be to blame. I'm willin' to stand on them terms between the town of Whitcom an' harm, but for Lish Harum, not one sumarhee."

David was keenly and sensitively moral, but not a church member. He was particularly severe upon inconsistent Christians. In speaking of a horse trade in which he had been cheated he said, "I wa'n't on my guard, knowin' him to be a deakin' an' all that, an' he lied to me so splendid that I was took in clean. He done me so brown, I was burnt in places."

Mrs. Bixbee was a devout Christian and tried very hard indeed to get him to go to church with her. In one of his conversations with John he said, "I'll have to admit that I ain't much of a hand fer church goin'. Polly has the principal charge of that branch of the bus'nis. Polly used to worry me about it till I fin'ly says to her: 'Polly, I'll tell ye what I'll do. I'll compermise with ye. I won't undertake to foller right in your tracks—I hai'nt got the req'sit speed, but f'm now I'll go to church reg'lar on Thanksgivin' time.'

"Wa'al, sir, fer the next five years I never missed attendin' church but four times."

He estimated the preacher, not by the sacredness of the message he bore, but by his individual force of intellect and character. Again in one of his conversations to John he said, "I wa'an't a very reg'lar church goer, but I have ben more or less in my time, an' when I did listen to the sermon all through it gen'ally seemed to me that if the preacher 'd put all the' really was in together, he wouldn't need to have took only 'bout a quarter of the time. But what with the scorin' fer a start an' a laggin' on the back stretch, an' every now and then breakin' to a standstill, I gen'ally want to come down an' out o' the stand before the race was over. The' is a good many fast quarter hosses, but them that c'n keep it up fer a mile is scurce."

In his business relations, outside of horse trading, he was strictly honest. He not only thought of his own interest, but of those with whom he was carrying on the transaction. He wanted to dismiss an employee who, though capable in some directions, had not the ability to manage a country bank; before employing another he found him a situation elsewhere.

In speaking of this ex-employee he said, "Timson was honest enough as fer as money matters is concerned, but many a time he done more mischief with his gibble-gabble than if he had took fifty dollars out and out. The fact is, the kind of honesty that won't actually steal is a kind of fool honesty that is common enough, but the kind that keeps a feller's mouth shut when he hadn't ought to talk is about the scurcest thing a goin'."

He was capable of deep and tender affection. When his wife died he paid his neighbor, Mrs. Jones, for taking care of his only child. He was called to Chicago on business; while he was gone the child was taken sick. He hastened home, but it was dead before his arrival. This was the greatest sorrow of his life. He came in after the funeral and said to Mrs. Jones, "I am goin' out West. I can't say how long I shall be gone—long enough anyway to get it into my head that when I come back the' won't be no little feller to jump and around my neck when I come into the house. Do you think you'll rememebr him some?"

"As long as I live," said she, "jest like my own."

"Wa'al, 'long as you remember him, he be in a way livin' to you, and as long 's that I allow to pay fer his keepin' an' tendin' jest the same as I have."

"She lived twenty years," he said to John, "an' I wish she was livin' now. I never drawed a check on her account without feelin' I was doin' somethin' fer my little boy."

You can not close the book without feeling, no matter what one's failings may be, that good sense and a kind heart triumph over all of them.

Our Neighbors.

Somebody near you is sturuggling alone
Over life's desert sand;
Faith, hope and courage together are gone—
Reach him a helping hand.
Turn on his darkness a beam of your light;
Kindle, to guide him, a beacon fire bright;
Cheer his discouragement, soothe his affright—
Lovingly help him to stand.

Somebody near you is hungry and cold,
Send him some aid to-day;
Somebody near you is feeble and old,
Left without human stay.
Under his burden put hands kind and strong;
Speak to him tenderly, sing him a song—
Haste to do something to help him along
Over his weary way.

Who are our neighbors? Look up, and behold,
Pressing on every hand,
Little ones, lonely ones, sad ones and old;
Everywhere see them stand.
He is our neighbor whom we can befriend;
He to whom comfort or aid we can lend,
Or he whose footsteps we may cause to wend
Toward the heavenly land.

Dear ones, be busy, for time flieth fast;
Soon it will all be gone.
Soon will our season of service be past;
Soon will our day be done.
Somebody near you needs now a kind word;
Some one needs help such as you can afford;
Haste to assist in the name of the Lord—
There may be a soul to be won.

SCENES IN THE TROPICS,

OR TRUTH, LOVE AND BEAUTY.*

BY LESLIE COLLINS.

III—Beauty.

"Old as I am, for ladies' love unfit,
The power of Beauty I remember yet."

It was early spring. The weeping clouds had faded from the skies and the welcome sun smiled down in pleasant beams. The warm winds, seemingly "perfumed by an unseen censer," scattered fragrance through the air and heretofore sad and silent birds soared and sang upon the breeze. The growing, ever-verdant grass, shedding tears of joy, glistened in the morning sunlight like untold, countless gems of wealth, and the pleasing green soothed the tired eye. The lazy, languid, drooping lilies—calla lilies; the bewitching-tinted, perfumed roses, the beautiful carnations, the lovely purple blossomed cactuses, the night-blooming cereus from the dusk-opening buds to the charming morning glories, with their strange, fantastic forms and their mellow tints of starlight, some of blushing Mars, some of mild and azured Venus, and others of the dim and delicate shades of far-off Neptune. The delightful woods that ever lure the weary traveler to their bowers, the sultry valleys and the high volcanoes, I remember all. Could I forget their memories? Ah, no! Even now, as I glance back across the burning sands of a sorrowed past, they appear as beautiful oases in an arid desert. Thus the days were full of sunshine and the nights were fair and cool when I whiled away the hours mid the beauties of the tropics. It was on an island park where lovely lawns and narrow winding lovers' walks led to shady dells and fond retreats. How vividly return the scenes, and with what cherished memory I recall the joys! The wide, white, paved streets, the long, crowded avenues with their endless passing throngs, the modest little rills, out of which gold and silver fishes leap into the air and fall back contented with their lot, or upon whose sloping, velvet banks a mother deer stands proudly caressing her trembling fawn. The smooth and artificial lakes o'er whose quiet waters beautiful swans glide gracefully. The silent groves among whose pensive solitudes the proud peacock struts away his proud existence. The leaping, playful fountains that throw their crystal sprays high in the air only to be kissed by sunshine into rainbows of peace. The groups of lifelike, inspiring statuary around whose massive granite bases beds of blooming flowers look up to some mighty man, or behold the charms of a fallen Sappho or a marbled Venus. The handsome birds—all birds of Paradise—their souls fired by the flames of spring and their little hearts pulsating with the one great passion, swelled their throats in anthemed praises and made music for the world. Ah, yes! I remember one charming creature. Her loveliness will forever haunt my breast. She was very fair. Her charms were many, and her voice was sweeter than the nightingale's. Once she told me she had come from across the sea, and she sang me a little love-song in her native tongue. I remember how it calmed my heart, and with what extreme joy my hovering muse would sometimes catch the faintest echo of its sweetest chord and weave it into rhyme. In my soul I hear it yet. The music never dies and I can only liken it unto the sweet and well-remembered strains of some serenading lover's guitar I once heard while floating o'er the moonlit waters of most lovely Venice. Have you ever been to Venice? Can you imagine? But one day I missed her from her favored haunts. I was told that she had gone away and that her mound was further down the dell. I wandered there and strewed the place with flowers. I think the roses' cheeks were damp with dew; I know my eyes were dim with tears. And upon the tomb I wrote—"Beauty."

Grief-Stricken Animals.

Lovers of sport, whose guns have brought down many a swift-winged bird or fleet-footed animal, may perhaps be able to match the following stories by memories of their own. The first is extracted from James Forbes' "Ornamental Memories."

A member of a shooting party killed a female monkey, and carried it to his tent. The tent was soon surrounded by forty or fifty monkeys, who made a great noise, and seemed disposed to attack the aggressor.

They retreated when he presented his fowling piece, the terrible effect of which they had witnessed and appeared quite to understand, but the head of the troop stood his ground, chattering furiously. The sportsman, who perhaps felt some compunction for having killed one of the family, did not like to fire at the creature, and nothing short of firing would suffice to drive him off.

At length the monkey came to the door of the tent, and finding threats of no avail, began a lamentable moaning, and by the most impressive gestures seemed to beg that the slaughtered animal might be given back. The dead body was accordingly given to him. He took it sorrowfully in his arms, and bore it away to his waiting companions.

Those who witnessed the extraordinary scene resolved never again to fire at one of the monkey race.

A case equally pathetic occurred at Chalk Farm, near Hampton, in England. A man set to watch a field of pease, which had been much preyed upon by pigeons, shot an old male pigeon that had long been an inhabitant of the farm. Its mate immediately settled upon the ground by its side and showed her grief in the most expressive manner.

The laborer took up the dead bird and tied it to a short stake, thinking the sight of it would drive away other depredators. The bereaved bird, however, did not forsake her mate, but continued day after day walking slowly round the stick.

The kind-hearted wife of the bailiff of the farm at last heard of the circumstance, and immediately went to afford what relief she could to the poor bird.

On arriving at the spot she found the hen-bird much exhausted. It had made a circular beaten track around the dead pigeon, giving now and then a little spring towards him. On the removal of the dead bird the hen returned to the dovecote.—The Peninsular Methodist.

Interesting Bibles.

A tribute to the Bible comes indirectly from the interest which is shown in copies that are rare, or that have peculiar associations. Many private libraries are enriched by single copies of the Bible. Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan has a magnificent copy of John Eliot's Indian Bible, printed in Cambridge, Mass., in 1663, for which he is reported to have paid $1,000. An original Mayflower Bible, evidently belonging to the Whites, the parents of the first child born in the Plymouth colony, has recently been discovered, so to speak, in a private library, where its value was not known. This Bible has notes on its pages and margins which connect it with the eventful voyage. There is even a crude pen-and-ink sketch of a ship labeled the Mayflower.—Bible Society Record.

The Poverty of Christ.

Oh, my King, and was it so,
Didst thou suffer all this woe?
Didst thou wander thus forlorn,
Bearing poverty and scorn;
Lord of all the realms above,
'Reft of home and human love,
In the world that thou hadst made,
Nowhere couldst thou lay thy head?

If we could at all conceive
All the glory thou didst leave,
All the splendor of the throne
That for us thou didst disown;
Catch but one imperfect ray
Of thine everlasting day,
And in that supernal light
See thy majesty aright—

How could we believe that thou
To these human griefs couldst bow;
How, amidst these lower things,
Recognize the King of kings,
Washing the disciples' feet,
Sitting with the poor at meat,
Bearing daily pain and loss,
Dying on the shameful cross!

Only as thyself hath shown
What the glory of thy throne,
What in all the realms of light
Is the source of chief delight,
What in all thy life below
Made thee bear thy load of woe;
By the truth, all truth above,
We know thee God, for "God is love."

Philosophy of the Eyes.

Blue eyes are said to be the weakest.

Upturned eyes are typical of devotion.

Wide-open eyes are indicative of rashness.

Side-glancing eyes are always to be distrusted.

Brown eyes are said by oculists to be the strongest.

Small eyes are commonly supposed to indicate cunning.

The down cast eye has in all ages been typical of modesty.

The proper distance between the eyes is the width of one eye.

People of melancholic temperament rarely have clear blue eyes.

Eyes with long, sharp corners indicate great discernment and penetration.

The white of the eye showing beneath the iris is indicative of nobility of character.

Gray eyes turning green in anger or excitement are indicative of a choleric temperament.

When the upper lid covers half or more of the pupil the indication is of cool deliberation.

An eye the upper lid of which passes horizontally across the pupil indicates mental ability.

Unsteady eyes, rapidly jerking from side to side, are frequently indicative of an unsettled mind.

It is said that the prevailing colors of eyes among patients of lunatic asylums are brown and black.

Eyes of any color with weak brows and long, concave lashes, are indicative of a weak constitution.

Eyes that are wide apart are said by physiognomists to indicate great intelligence and a tenacious memory.

Eyes of which the whole of the iris is visible belong to erratic persons, often with a tendency toward insanity.

Wide open, staring eyes in weak countenances indicate jealousy, bigotry, intolerance and pertinacity without firmness.

Eyes placed close together in the head are said to indicate pettiness of disposition, jealousy and a turn for fault-finding.

When the under arch of the upper eyelid is a perfect semicircle it is indicative of goodness, but also of timidity, sometimes approaching cowardice.

All men of genius are said to have eyes clear, slow-moving and bright. This is the eye which indicates mental ability of some kind, it does not matter what.

Blue eyes are generally considered effeminate, but this is a mistake, for blue eyes are found only among Caucasian nations, and the white races rule the world.—Pearson's Weekly.

Sunday Morning Scenes.

"Let's play mamma and papa on Sunday morning," said a seven-year-old girl to her five-year-old brother during the progress of a backyard romp the other afternoon.

"All right," replied the boy, and he hopped into the house, got hold of an old colored supplement of a "yellow" newspaper, and sat down with it in a rustic chair, with a pencil in one corner of his mouth in imitation of a cigar.

"Edward," said the little girl, walking up to him, "are we going to church this morning?"

"Huh?" said Edward, without raising his eyes from the paper, and munching on his pencil-cigar.

"Are we going to church or not this morning?" repeated the little girl.

"What's that—er—whad'ju say? Oh, church. Dunno. Looks like rain, doesn't it?" said the boy, who had studied his dad.

"Well, some," said the little girl; "but we ought to go, really, we ought. It's a sin and a shame the way we neglect our church duties. But it does look a teeny bit like rain."

"Um," said the boy, and then there was a moment of silence.

"Well, are we going or not?" inquired the little girl, then.

"By jing, I'd like to have a chance to read my paper in peace," said the boy, in the funniest imaginable assumption of his father's manner when nervous. "Can't you go yourself, my dear, and take the kids? I don't feel well, anyhow, this morning. I'll go with you next Sunday."

"If you don't go with me, Edward, I shall not go at all," said the little girl, decisively, and then their mother appeared on the scene, and they pretended to be playing just ordinary "housekeeping."—Washington Post.

The Rubber Tree.

When you put on a pair of overshoes or look at a rubber tire, do you ever think of the rubber tree which gives its sap for these useful articles?

In Mexico the rubber tree once grew wild—great forests of rubber trees. About a hundred years ago, it is said, the Spanish government sent a man to Mexico to study its vegetable productions, and he discovered how valuable is the juice, sap or milk of the rubber tree, whichever you wish to call it. The natives soon learned its value, and they soon used the trees up, as we have our forests, and did not think of the time when there would be no wild trees to furnish the rubber sap.

Recently some men have bought land and planted rubber trees. These trees are self-propagating; that is, they sow their own seed.

In the cultivated forsts of rubber trees the trees are planted to grow in regular order, and the young shoots are cut down or transplanted. The method of gathering the sap is not unlike our method of gathering maple sap, and before the rubber sap is ready for market it must be boiled as our sap is, to get rid of the water, and pressed into cakes. Then the cakes are packed in bags and shipped to manufacture the many things into which rubber enters.

The milk or sap of the rubber tree is white. Perhaps if you have a rubber plant at home you may have discovered this when a leaf has been broken.—The Outlook.

Zigzagging.

The old farmer unconsciously taught a great truth when he explained that his dog, who had just returned with the carriage from a little drive and seemed thoroughly exhausted as he lay down on the grass panting for breath: "'Taint the road that tires him," said the farmer, "but the zigzagging. The team has only gone about ten miles, but he's run more than fifty. There wasn't a gate open on the way but he had to go in and examine the whole premises. There wasn't a cat appeared but he had to chase it. There wasn't a dog barked but he just wore himself out barking back again and showing fight, so that while we were keeping on the road he was running over the whole country. No," he concluded, "'taint the straight traveling, but the zigzagging that tires him." How true the old farmer's words are about many of our spiritual walks. The real task and trials of life are not too hard to bear, but the roundabouts that we make for ourselves, the cares we imagine, the needless waste of life and energy in things we have no need to say or do, this is where the wear and the worry comes. Most of us are like the old lady who said she had had many trials in life, especially those that never came. Beloved, God is able to keep you from stumbling, to lead you in a straight path and to save you from "zigzagging."—Missionary Alliance.

With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

The Red Box Clew—I.

They called the town Creeksville, because a creek ran through it, dividing it into almost equal parts; but why they called the creek Blue Fork is more than I can tell. To be sure, it was a fork of the Platt River, but it was no more blue than the trees growing along its banks. Two streets ran down to the edge, disappeared, and then turned up on the other side; and the broken parts were bound together by bridges. There was the Covered Bridge, that looked quite dark and romantic inside, with bits of hay scattered over the floor, and it was through this that cattle were driven. And then there was another bridge, that didn't have any particular name, but was just called "the bridge," as if it were the only one in the country. It was wide, with railings on each side, where heavy red beams rose in the shape of capital Vs that had been turned upside down. Below town was a high trestle-work where the trains wound around the bend, but it was not built for people to walk on; and people who didn't know any better, and not many in Creekville knew better, called this the "trusselbridge." The creek was deeper and wider here, and it was fun to climb down the trestelwork (supposing you to be a boy) and perch on broad, dusty beams and drop a line into the water with the kind of worm on the hook that is the same as fried chicken to a fish. On the south side of Blue Fork were most of the business houses as well as the station house, better known as the "deepo," while on the north side stood the principal residences. This gave them the advantage of facing south and Blue Fork at the same time, and if you will notice the houses of those who say it is no advantage to face the south, you will usually find that their houses have been turned another way. But all must agree that it is pleasant to face a broad stream, especially in bright weather, when the sun makes red lights along the surface, as if it were signaling to the world to stop and look at beauty; or in cloudy weather, when the stream grows dark and mysterious, as if it were a mile deep, with a secret to every foot of depth; or at night, when the moon throws the picture of itself on the water, and the waves quiver with little specks of silver that are stars up in heaven.

In the largest residence on the north side lived the Clarmonts. It was a brick-house with a wide porch running around three of the sides—anything sticking to the outside of a house was called a "porch" in Creekville—and there was a large front yard, always kept level and correct by a lawnmower, so that each blade of grass looked like all the rest. Behind the house was a pasture with a grove in one end, where a pretty brook stopped to play under a footbridge before it hurried on to Blue Fork. And there were walnut trees and hickory trees and giant oaks, and a summerhouse on the bank of the brook, where the footbridge stood. You may well suppose that the Clarmonts were rich people, to own this pasture of twenty acres in the very midst of the town; but it would be a mistake to imagine that the great house, the rolling meadowland, or even the brook made them happier than those who did not possess such luxuries. The front yard was on Broadway, and on either side stood mansions almost as imposing as that of the Clarmonts; but of course there were no residences near them in the rear; since their pasture took up so much room, others were crowded far away. This gave them the advantage of quiet privacy and social advantages, all at the same time.

One evening in August, just as the sun was making preparations to go to rest, and had already pulled his red curtains about him, the family sat on the broad front porch, discussing a family trouble. "If I could only hear of the right kind of girl," said Mrs. Clarmont, "I would send for her at once. You are always hearing of poor people who want work. But it's not work they want, it's rest. And it is impossible to get what you want in the way of help."

Clara Clarmont, a young lady with a pretty but discontented face, sighed assent. "If we could only buy our help," she said, "just as we go to a lace counter and pick out what suits us, then pay for it!"

"One thing is certain," said her brother, who was much younger, "Vega needs somebody for a companion, and one will have to be got, somehow. School will begin next month, and Clara expects to graduate, so both of us will be gone all day. And besides, even with us here, we can't give all our time to Vega. And I don't believe anything could satisfy the poor child, if Clara and I went down on our knees to her."

"Poor Vega!" sighed Mrs. Clarmont, as she drew to her side a girl of perhaps ten years, and kissed her with a tenderness the lady only manifested toward her youngest child. Vega submitted patiently, then resumed her seat and stared disconsolately at the distant stream.

"If we knew of a girl about her own age, only older," Clara began.

"That would be a marvel!" cried the brother, laughing teasingly. Clara frowned impatiently. It was very easy for her to frown. "I say, mother, we must find such a one. I suppose she'll want to make herself an equal of us—that's what hurts me—but really, Vega is so very troublesome." Clara broke off complainingly and smoothed her hair.

"You know your father has advertised again and again," said Mrs. Clarmont. "Clara, sit up straight, do! And Ronald, how you are lounging! Mercy! where is your other leg? There, do put it where it be can seen. I know Vega is troublesome. Poor child, she is always moping."

And Vega did not hear a word they were saying about her; for Vega, just a year ago, had lost her hearing; and the doctors said it could never be restored.

"As far as that is concerned," remarked Ronald, "you might almost say the same of Clara. She is never happy unless she's in a crowd of people. I wish folks would save a little of their laughter and a few of their smiles for home!"

"I would look nice, wouldn't I!" cried Clara, "sitting here grinning at you and mother. Why, of course I'm dull by myself, and there's nothing that bores me so much as to look happy when I am bored. But, thank fortune! there's a ball to-night. I know I should die if something didn't happen once in a while. And just as soon as I graduate, remember, we go to the city for good. Only what we will do with Vega, I don't know! But I suppose she can look out the window and see things."

She had scarcely finished speaking when Mr. Clarmont entered the front gate. He was a cold, reserved man, who did not get much enjoyment out of life. Usually on returning from town he went straight to his library and shut himself up from the annoyance of having his family about. But now he paused before the marble steps. Clara started with surprise.

"I do believe pa is going to sit down on the front steps!" she exclaimed. "And here I was thinking nothing ever happened!" But her father, after giving her one patient look, as if she were a troublesome animal that must be given its own way, addressed his wife without acting upon his daughter's suggestion.

"Mrs. Clarmont, I forgot to tell you that I had made arrangements for Vega's companion. The girl will be here before long; she comes on the passenger, and I ordered the hack to bring her around."

"I think, Mr. Clarmont," said his wife icily, "you might have informed me sooner."

"I forgot all about it, hadn't thought of her since I engaged her, till this afternoon."

"And pray," Mr. Clarmont, who is she? if we may be permitted to share your affairs."

Mr. Clarmont began to ascend the steps. "I don't know who she is," he answered, wearily. "A preacher recommended her to me; said she was moral and that sort of thing; Brother Wilton was the man who told me about her. I told him to have her brought on; he was going up there—"

"Up where?" Mrs. Clarmont interrupted sharply.

"Oh, I don't remember the town. And if you don't like her, give her a week's wages and send her back. Brother Wilton said that would be all right."

"You and Brother Wilton!" said the lady, scornfully. "You might have consulted your wife and children, I think. Nobody knows where this creature comes from, or what she is. Nobody but Brother Wilton. Brother Wilton, indeed! But I suppose she will have to sleep here one night, at least. Ronald, go tell Whatsername to fix up that attic room for this very unwelcome and very unexpected—"

"Oh, Clara, you go and tell Whatsername!" said Ronald lazily.

"I shan't," said Clara positively. "Oh, there comes the hack, now. And—yes, there is a girl in it; I do know, pa, you do the strangest things." But as the hack stopped at the gate, Mr. Clarmont vanished in his library.

THE REVENGE OF THE PROUD.*

At first sight the Book of Esther seems to have but little place in a collection of books dealing with religious matters and purporting to be the world's supreme religious literature. The book seems to have a purely secular character and tone, and to express only to a most limited degree any sentiments which may be called ethical or spiritual. Indeed, it is often objected to the book that it voices sentiments of anger and vindictiveness, which are quite inconsistent with the general tone of the the Holy Scriptures and for this reason has been considered by many unfitted for recognition by the church. Luther, whose frankness in stating his opinions concerning the books of the Scripture is well known, remarked: "I have so little favor for the Book of Esther that I wish it did not exist. It is too Judaizing and contains many heathenish improprieties." Similar has been the feeling of many others as they compared the general tone and character of this book with many others in the canon. And yet that it has a legitimate place in the Bible and that it throws light upon an otherwise obscure period of the history of the Jewish people, perhaps few question. The books of the Scripture must be judged by their purpose, and not always by the standards of the New Testament. We cannot impose upon a book written amid the comparative darkness of the post-exilic time, when Judaism was gathering strength for its later manifestation of narrowness and exclusiveness, the requirements of compliance with the broad Christian spirit manifested by our Savior and the apostles. It may be as much the function of a book of Scripture to point out the limitations of the popular views of God at a particular period as to reveal his true character; and certainly any writings which help us to better understand the character of the people through whom the divine Spirit was slowly manifesting himself and from whom there was to issue on the side of the flesh the Master himself is worth careful study.

The Book of Esther deals with the reign of Xerxes I. (B. C. 485-464), who is here called Ahasuerus. This king is the one connected in history with the memorable invasion of Europe and the battle of Thermopylæ and Salamis. It is not easy to confirm all the statements of the book; but these questions are perhaps of minor consideration, and in the present state of knowledge concerning that period practically impossible of settlement. Meantime, however, the book has a distinct value, as has been indicated, and was intensely popular with the patriotic and liberty-loving Jews of the later period. For this reason it was always read at the returning celebration of the feast of Purim, whose origin it set forth, and had a place in the affections of the Jewish people second perhaps to few books of the Old Testament.

The book opens with a great feast made by the king to his lords, at the conclusion of which he demanded that Vashti, the Queen, should appear before the revelers to exhibit her beauty. This she was prevented from doing by all the proprieties of the court and by her own sense of modesty, and thus for her vindication of womanly modesty she was banished from the court and degraded from her position by the drunken king and his counselors. Her vacant place must be filled and in consequence that process of selection was put into operation which resulted in the elevation of the Jewish maiden, Esther. Mordecai, her uncle, had reared her and took the initiative in securing her elevation to the throne, which resulted from her surpassing beauty as contrasted with all the maidens who appeared before the king. But the villain of the story soon appeared in the person of the king's favorite and prime minister, Haman, whose descent from the ancient Amalekite king, Agag, seems to be indicated in the text. Mordecai, on the other hand, was of the descendants of Kish, a Benjamite—perhaps that Kish, the father of Saul, who was the antagonist of the old Agag, the Amalekite. Thus the two men are set in contrast to each other as their ancestors had been in centuries gone by. Haman, like all favorites of weak and headstrong kings, was elevated with such rapidity that his splendor dazzled all; and all the people, including the nobles, did him reverence as he passed by, and he was in all respects next in authority to the king himself. Mordecai was the sole exception to this rule of reverence. For some reason, which is not explained, he refused to bow his head at the passing of the favorite. Why he should have thus refused the customary courtesy of the court it is perhaps difficult to understand, unless it were simply his Jewish pride or the memory of the ancestral grudge between the two races. Haman's attention was soon called to Mordecai's unbending discourtesy, and finding the revenge of destroying one man too insignificant to satisfy his injured feelings, he planned the destruction of the whole Jewish people. This was a project difficult of execution to all but the royal favorite, who possessed boundless power, for the Jews were a peaceable and quiet people, living on excellent terms with their Persian neighbors. Haman, however, sought like all superstitious princes to find a lucky day for this enterprise of slaughter and so his magicians cast lots for each day of the calendar for months to come to discern how soon it would be possible to carry the project into effect. They decided, however, that no favorable day would offer itself for at least eleven months, and thus the danger to the Jewish people was postponed almost a year.

When Haman had settled this part of his plot he went to the king to secure his approval, and by base falsifications concerning the Jewish people he secured the king's consent to his design. It is an interesting thing to see how an unprincipled man could thus compass the ruin of a peaceable and innocent population and how little interest the king appeared to take in the whole transaction, listening with complacence while his minister told his story and then giving him his royal ring of authority to seal the deadly decree, even refusing good-naturedly to take the immense sum which Haman offered to pay for the privilege of carrying out his revenge. The people and the silver were both given to the minister and thus the plot was complete and Haman only awaited the coming of the favorable day for its consummation.

In this lesson is set forth the sudden rise of an unprincipled man to heights of almost incredible power, owing to the universal character of the Persian Empire and to the ascendancy of the man over the mind of the king. It is at first difficult to explain the conduct of Mordecai unless one supposes he discerned the inherent baseness of Haman's character and would not consent to bow before a man whom he despised. If Mordecai's refusal to accord Haman the customary courtesies of the court proceeded purely from his own pride or any remembrance of the family grudge, we can hardly commend his conduct; but if he perceived in Haman qualities which escaped the attention of others and which made it impossible for him as a true man to do reverence to the favorite, we must admire the sterling integrity of one who would run all risks and incur all dangers rather than compromise his sense of honor to comply with the custom of the hour. Once more: Haman's revenge was of that universal and bloody character with which small and cruel minds have ever sought to satisfy themselves. It was not enough to take the life of the one offender. Everything which he possessed and all with which he was identified must be swept away. Haman's character is also interesting from the touchiness with which he viewed the one defection from the almost universal reverence which was paid him. He had lands, possessions, a great house, many children, and everything that could delight the soul, but he lacked just one obeisance to make him happy, and this was the thorn that rankled in his flesh until it festered and ruined his happiness. It is always a small nature that is troubled by slights or discourtesies. It is, after all, because we think too much of ourselves that we are injured when others seem to slight us. The person who is so self-centered that he watches with attention the treatment accorded him by others and is offended by any evidence of disrespect is the one who usually finds these evidences where they are not intended, and happiness is constantly endangered by such a disposition. The secret of happiness is unselfishness, and it is always the secret of power.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 8.

WORK WHERE CHRIST TELLS YOU TO.

(John 21:1-6.)

It seemed perfectly useless to those disciples to fish over that same ground where they had already failed so long and taken nothing. How preposterous it seemed to them that they should make another vain attempt! This utter hopelessness is seen in the character of their reply: "Nevertheless, at thy word we will let down the nets." How often, O, how often we fish over the same old ground and fail to take anything! How often we have tried to induce such and such a one to come to Christ, or to lead a better Christian life! If only Jesus were near to beg us to let down the nets! But do we absolutely need a vision of him to tell us to try once more? There is always something worthy of the taking in every man's life, if we let out into the deep far enough.

Again, how easy it is for us, after trying time and again, to bring something worth while out of our own poor, fruitless souls, to give up and say, "I never can bring anything good out of my poor, little, empty sea of a soul. I'll stop trying. I've failed all the night. It is all still dark. There's nothing good in me. I give it up." Listen and see if the word of the Master doesn't come: "Let out into the deep; try once more." O, Master, give us faith to try, poor and weak, and falling all the time! Make us strong. If we go on, only with little faith, merely because of Jesus' word, we shall take nets full. We shall find more good in ourselves than we had believed possible.

Sometimes we feel that there is little use to work where we are working. We'd like to go somewhere where the fruits are greater. We'd like to be in that field yonder, or in that fishing ground four miles away. Our sphere here is restricted. We'd like to build on no other man's foundation. What a world of laziness and loss of opportunity has hung itself on that manly but often misapplied word of Paul's! If I can't have a new fishing ground, I'll not fish at all! If I can't build from the ground up, I'll not lay brick! These are foundation builders who, like Paul, would be blameworthy to try to put up walls on other foundations. They are stonemasons, great, strong men, who work with heavy materials. Most of us are only bricklayers. Yet God's work couldn't be done without us. Let us work where he says. After all, it doesn't much matter what one's trade is, but what one's character is. The essential thing is, be a man, be a woman, and no difference what materials one works with or what waters one fishes in.

One last thought. Jesus sent them to work in the deep waters. There is such a thing as fishing too much in the shallows. Some of us seek to influence others by appealing to their shallower instead of their deeper natures. Some of us, in seeking to bring good out of our own natures, do not let out into the deeps. A dug well has not such clear, pure water as a driven well, where the iron has been sent deep into the breast of Mother Earth. Sometimes God sends the iron into our own souls to teach us that the deep places of our natures must be sounded. Let us not live simply in the shallows, but let out into the deeps, and we shal take, as Jesus promises, nets full.

ONE QUARTER FORMER PRICE

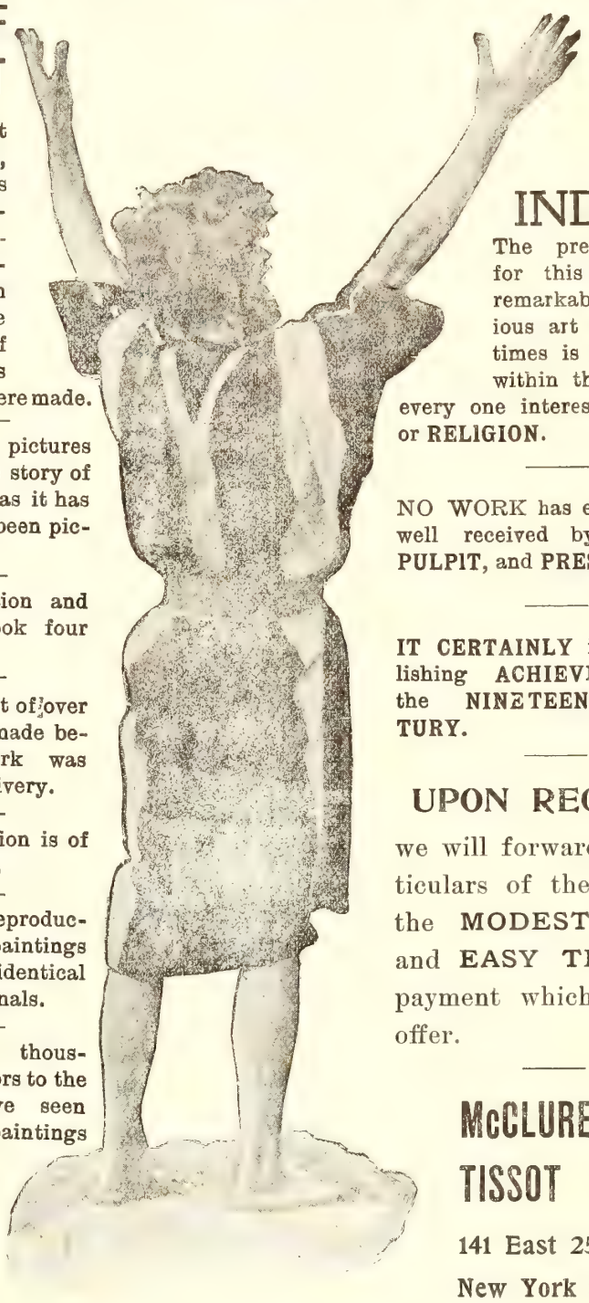
WE HAVE HAD PREPARED AN EXCEEDINGLY LARGE EDITION, AND BY SO DOING HAVE SAVED MANY DOLLARS ON THE COST OF EACH COPY OF THE NEW EDITION OF

Tissot's Life of Christ

ITEMS OF INTEREST

M. Tissot spent10 years, much of this time in Palestine, painting the originals from which the hundreds of illustrations in his work were made.

These 500 pictures tell the entire story of Christ's Life as it has never before been pictured.



The preparation and publishing took four years.

An investment of over $400,000 was made before the work was ready for delivery.

Each illustration is of distiuct value.

The many reproductions of the paintings in color are identical with the originals.

Hundreds of thousands of visitors to the galleries have seen these great paintings not only in this country, but in England and France as well.

INDEED

The present figure for this the most remarkable Religious art work of all times is NOW easily within the reach of every one interested in ART or RELIGION.

NO WORK has ever been so well received by PEOPLE, PULPIT, and PRESS.

IT CERTAINLY is the publishing ACHIEVEMENT of the NINETEENTH CENTURY.

UPON REQUEST

we will forward full particulars of the WORK, the MODEST PRICE, and EASY TERMS of payment which we now offer.

"I Was Sick and Ye Visited Me."

George M. Kemp, for many years an able and worthy preacher of the simple gospel and whose home for some years has been at Mansfield, O., is now seriously sick at 5445 Shields Ave., Chicago. He has been confined to his room since May 1st. His affliction is kidney trouble and dropsy. He is hopeful of recovery, yet rests securely on the promises of the Master. He desires to be remembered by the brethren in their petitions to the Father of mercies, that he may be granted yet further days of service. He is not in temporal want. I write this notice as a word due to a faithful minister of Christ. Fraternally,

J. E. Hawes.

Ada, Ohio, Sept. 18, 1899.

Donations for Bro. Baghdasarian.

If others desire to contribute to this fund or the purpose of enabling Bro. B. to return to this country or to go to some place where he can earn his support, we shall be glad to report same and forward the total amount to him. The attention of the brethren in Iowa is especially called to this matter.

Literature.

PATRIOTIC STUDIES, by Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Ph.D. (Abridged Edition of Social Progress.) 12 mo., 64 pp. Illustrated. 4c., postpaid. The Reform Bureau, 210 Delaware Avenue, N. E., Washington, D. C.

The value of this little book should not be measured by its size, still less by its cost. This well-bound and well-printed book, on good paper, with a dozen illustrations, mostly half-tone portraits of reform leaders, is an effort to present the facts and arguments in favor of a dozen leading reforms at the smallest possible cost in money and time. Its motto is: "One thing a month to study, one thing a month to do." The monthly topics are: "Education," "Municipalism," "Immigration," "Sabbath," "Labor and Capital," "Marriage and Divorce," "National Reforms," "Amusements, with Special Reference to Purity," "Gambling," "Prevention and Punishment of Crime," "Liquor Problem," "True Christianity." Many clubs and societies are using these topics month by month.

WHAT A YOUNG HUSBAND OUGHT TO KNOW. By Sylvanus Stall, D. D. Vir Publishing Co., Hale Building, Philadelphia., Pa. Price, $1, net.

In these pages the author lifts the sacred relations of married life out of the impure and vile thinking which has degraded manhood, debased and debauched womanhood and robbed marriage and home of the blessing and happiness which God intended. It treats of matters of vital importance, is free from technical terms, is scientifically accurate, delicate and refined—a pure, clean and ennobling book. These pages are crowded with that information which saves from the sad consequences of blind blundering, and imparts that information which enables its possessor to escape the ills which ambush in mystery and ignorance. It ought to be read by every person of mature years, wether married or unmarried, both men and women. This book and its predecessors are worthy of the united endorsement accorded them by religious, secular, educational and medical periodicals in this country and in Europe, and deserve the hearty commendation which they have received from eminent men and women everywhere.

MAGAZINES

In the Century for October announcement will be made of the names of the three winners of the prizes offered for the best poem, essay and story submitted in competition by American college graduates of 1898. Last year all the prizes were won by alumnæ of Eastern women's colleges; this year's winners are Westerners, and only one of them is a woman.

The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science for September contains notable articles by Dr. Frederic C. Howe on "Taxation of Quasi-Public Corporations in the State of Ohio and the Franchise Tax," Mr. Chas. A. Conant on "Securities as a Means of Payment," and Dr. J. F. Crowell on "Economic Aspects of British Agriculture." The high standard of this journal is well maintained in its news departments, relating to recent appointments, new books, municipal and sociological affairs. Philadelphia, $1.00.

Theodore Roosevelt is to write a series of papers for Scribner's magazine on Cromwell.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT? For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

ANDERSON.

A. B. Anderson departed this life Aug. 30, 1899, aged 77 years, five months and 21 day. In the death of Bro. Anderson the church at Tekoa, Wash., has lost one of its most faithful members. He was married to Adaline Dickens in the year, 1842. To them were born 13 children, four of whom preceded him to the better land. As a husband, father, citizen, soldier and Christian he was candid, thoughtful and unwavering in his convictions of right. He was a grand old man in Israel. Our brother leaves an aged heart broken wife, nine children and a large number of relatives and friends to mourn his departure. May God's grace be sufficient for them Funeral secvices were conducted by the writer at Tekoa, Wash.

GEO. F. STIVERS.

BROWNING.

Miss Susie M. Browning was born Oct. 8, 1860; died Aug. 10, 1899; age 38 years, 10 months and two days. She was the oldest child of Robert (deceased) and Elizabeth J. Browning. Spent the days of her life in the old home, near Avalon. In the bloom of womanhood, 1881, she gave herself to Christ, being a devoted Disciple to the hour of her death, giving time, labor and means to the advancement of the cause. She was a quiet, modest Christian woman and an exemplification of all that was pure and lovely, an affectionate daughter, loving sister, a friend to the poor, an honor to Christ. Her devot d heart p ompted constant giving and living for the Son of God and the good of others. In the school and church, in the community, in all our missions, in the Orphan's Home, Miss Susie will be missed; but none will feel the loss like her dear old mother, whose heart is under the heaviest cloud of life. When near the door her favorite Scripture was Rom. 12:1-21 and Ephesians 4:1-32, while her heart was thinking of others, and she willed help to our state work, the Orphan's Home, foreign work, the School of Evangelists and an orphan's home in Iowa. N. J. Nicholson delivered the funeral discourse at Arkadelphia, to a large audience; his text: "Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas; this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds, which she did," to which all the neighbors of Susie Browning could fully testify. It was the mission of her life, at the close of which kind friends with gentle touch prepared for the final sleep, the widowed and bereft mother, the saddened brothers and sisters mourning as those having hope of meeting her again at God's right hand. "Let me die the death of the righteous; let my last end be like his."

H F. DAVIS.

BROWNING.

Miss Susie M. Browning was born Oct. 8, 1860; died August 10, 1899. The subject of this sketch was the oldest of a family of children of Robert (deceased) and Eliza J. Browning, whose home is two miles south of Avalon, Mo., where her entire life was spent. She united with the Christian Church August, 1881, in which she lived a faithful member to the end of life. She was a liberal donor to every good work, following the example of the Master in a life of sacrifice. No sickness was too dangerous for her presence and care. The beginning of her death resulted from her waiting on the sick. She was the financial counselor of her father and mother from her early womanhood. The church, the community, the missionary and benevolent societies, her friends and relatives all feel the loss of an important factor in their success and happiness, but none so much as the bereaved mother, who had so long and lovingly depended on her for counsel and company. Should financial reverses come, she cheered with the hope of a better day. Was the mind beclouded and despondent, her presence was sunshine. Few such lives have been left to humanity. The funeral services were conducted at Arkadelphia Church, Friday, August 12, at 3 P. M., by the writer. The attendance at the home and funeral speaks louder than words of the respect of the community for the Browning family. Her remains are laid away in the Arkadelphia cemetery, not to be forgotten, but to be held in sacred memory till the judgment. Sister Sue believed that worldly goods are a sacred trust from God, and should be used for the good of humanity. She was true to her relatives and friends, but the chief thought of her life was the church. Her brothers and sisters are in good financial circumstances, and she leaves her will as follows: To her mother her interest in the home place, 400 acres; $20 to each of her nieces and nephews, to buy them a library; $20 to each of her sisters-in-law; $50 to each of her brothers and sisters; $50 to Christian Orphans' Home, Council Bluffs, Iowa; the remainder to be equally divided between the Orphans' Home of the Christian Church in St. Louis, Mo.; the Foreign Christian Missionary Society of the Christian Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, A. McLean, corresponding secretary; the School of the Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., A. S. Johnson, president, and the Bible school work of the Christian Church of Missouri, H. F. Davis, corresponding secretary. Near to $175 will be left to each.

N. J. NICHOLSON.

COLES.

Frederick Albert Coles was born near Albion Ill., Jan. 26, 1875; died Sept 15, 1899, aged 24 years, seven months and 19 days. About the age of 14 years he became a Christian. In the autumn of 1897 he had hemorrhage of the lungs and sought improvement of health in Colorado, but not finding it after nine months, he returned to Albion and spent the last months of his life on earth with the loved ones in the home. The funeral services were held in the Christian Church on Sunday and the remains were interred in Gtaceland Cemetery.

JAY C. HALL.

FOSTER.

Edmund C. Foster departed this life Sept. 7, at his farm home near Viola, Idaho, and was interred in the Moscow cemetery. Bro Foster was born in Clark county, Ky., in 1821, and died in the triumps of the faith, having been a sincere and devoted follower of Christ over fifty years. "He is not dead, but sleepeth." After a time he will hear the voice of Jesus and come forth unto the resurrection of life.

ERNEST THORNQUEST.

HALEY.

Mrs. Cassie Haley was born Aug. 4, 1821; died Sept. 5, 1899. For many years she was a faithful member of the Antioch Christian Church in Randolph County, Mo. For seven or eight years she has been almost entirely blind. But now she can see. She told her friends she was ready and willing to die; that death had no sting for her. She leaves two sons and two daughters to mourn her loss One son has gone on before. Her husband passed to the spirit-land many years ago.

HART.

E. J. Hart died at New Philadelphia, O., Aug. 31, 1899, aged 58 yerrs He was born in Ohio, was baptized at 15 years of age, and served his country as a soldier during the rebellion. He was married to Sarah A. Rosenberger, Sept. 13, 1868. That he might be better able to preach the gospel he entered Eureka College, Illinois, where he graduated in 1872. During his ministry of 30 years he baptized 1,500 persons. He was of spotless character, an able and faithful minister. Four years ago he was stricken with paralysis and, although he walked with greatest difficulty, yet he never gave up trying to preach. The church at New Philadelphia was his last pastorate, and with those brethren he spent his last earthly Lord's day. His son Claud, a noble and promising youth, died a year ago, and from this shock Bro. Hart never recovered. Everest Hart, pastor at Grayville, Ill., is the only surviving son. The widow and six children have his righteous life to comfort them.

J. WILLIAM GORRELL.

New Philadelphia, O.

SMITH.

Ellis Smith died May 7, 1899, near Montrose, Mo., age 78 years. He was not a Christian, but was strictly honest in all his dealings with all mankind. He leaves an aged wife and eight children to mourn their loss. He had been a member of the Masonic fraternity for 40 years. Funeral services by the writer.

OUR READING COURSES.

What They Are and How They Work.

By J. Z. Tyler, General Manager.

The primary purpose of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses is the instruction and indoctrination of the young people in the C. E. Societies among the Disciples of Christ. But experience has shown that the purpose and plan are admirably adapted to other classes. Many auxiliary societies of the C. W. B. M., for instance, have found these courses exactly suited to their needs and have increased the interest in their meetings by their general use. Groups of persons not connected with any society have come together for the sole purpose of mutual help in taking these readings, and many individuals, old as well as young, have found both pleasure and profit in pursuing these courses privately.

Our three lines of study are: The Bible, the Disciples, and Missions. There is a handbook for each year on the subject, covering a period of three years. The handbooks designed for first-year readers are: A Guide to Bible Study, by J. W. McGarvey; Concerning the Disciples, by B. B. Tyler; and a Handbook of Missions, by a A. McLean. For second-year readers the handbooks are: Life and Teachings of Jesus, by H. L. Willett, Sketches of our Pioneers, by F. D. Power; and Missionary Fields and Forces of the Disciples, by W. J. Lhamon. For third-year readers: Prophets of Israel, by H. L. Willett; Bible Doctrine for Young Disciples, by F. D. Power, and Heroes of Modern Missions, by W. J. Lhamon.

Each of the three courses has a director who gives special attention to that particular line of study. H. L. Willet is director of Bible Study; F. D. Power, of the Disciples; and W. J. Lhamon, of Missions. These directors supply, week by week, three series of articles to such of our church papers as will publish them. These articles have added much to the interest and profit of the courses. They have furnished additional information on topics presented in the handbooks and have treated of kindred subjects.

In addition to these hand-books and the articles which appear in our church papers, there is a sixteen-page quarterly, the Bethany C. E. Bulletin, published in the interest of these Reading Courses. This contains full direction sheets, questions for the quarterly examination, besides many practical hints and valuable helps. It is almost indispensable. The subscription price is, single copy, 25c.; five copies, $1.00; ten copies, $1.50; fifteen copies, $2.00. All subscribers to the Bulletin, are enrolled at headquarters as members of the Bethany C. E. Reading Circle and are entitled to all membership privileges.

While there is a certain plan running through the three years, persons are at liberty to begin with either year. For some persons it may seem best to begin with either the second or third year. Some may prefer to take the three handbooks belonging to a single subject, such as Missions, and master them before taking up another course, and thus complete the three courses. Others may prefer to take up one book at a time, and so complete the book of a single year. It matters little to us what method is pursued; our only desire is to assist persons in gaining a more accurate knowledge of the subjects treated. Due credit will be given for all work done, as indicated by the examination papers sent in.

If you wish to form a Reading Circle in your church, we offer the following suggestions: (1) It would be well to have the matter announced and briefly explained in the C. E. Society, the C. W. B. M. auxiliary, the Sunday-school and from the pulpit. This article contains all necessary information. Let the person making the announcement master this information. (2) Then call together a few of the most enterprising members of the church—including some of the older ones—and confer as to the best way to interest others. (3) Appoint an active committee to make a canvass, at once, to secure the names of all who wish to take these readings, whether they can join the Reading Circle or not. Quite a number may be found who wish to do the reading, but cannot attend the circle; enroll all. (4) Then call a meeting of all for a general preliminary conference; make a special list of those who can attend the meetings of the circle with reasonable regularity. Arrange to supply the members and note who will take the readings privately with the Bulletin and the handbooks.

Each local circle should have its leader. The duty of this leader is to foster an interest in the Reading Courses and to conduct the meetings for recitation and review. Some circles have three leaders, one for each course, and some distribute this leadership by selecting the leader of Bible study from the Sunday-school, the leader for study of Disciples from the C. E. Society and the leader of Mission study, from the C. W. B. M. auxiliary. Use your best judgment as to details. Meetings should be held at stated times for recitation and review. Study should be carried on in private. In addition to the regular meetings, a special public meeting should be held at least once a quarter, with an address by the pastor, or other person, on some subject in the current courses.

When we consider the benefits of these courses and the material supplied, the expense is merely nominal. It is not a money-making scheme. The handbooks are 35 cents a single copy or any three for one dollar. Arrangements have been made to have the books published hereafter by the Fleming H. Revell Company, the largest institution of its kind in America. The books issued by them will be on better paper, in better shape, and with better binding. These improvements add somewhat to the expense of their manufacture and to the cost of sending them through the mail. But our readers, I am sure, will gladly pay a few cents more when they see the vast improvement made in our Revell edition. We have on hand a limited supply, for the first and second year, of the old edition and we will furnish these until the stock is exhausted at the rate of 25 cents a single copy, or any three copies for 75 cents. In making orders, however, it will be well to send the price of the Revell edition, even if you wish the old style. If we can supply you with the old style, we will send them, returning the difference; otherwise, the Revell edition will be sent. All orders should be accompanied with cash and should be sent to J. Z Tyler, 798 Republic St., Cleveland, Ohio.

Hackleman-Conner Wedding.

On September 12th a surprise was in store for all who attended the Conner family reunion in Irvington. The surprise was the marriage of Prof. W. E. M. Hackleman and Miss Pearl Conner. It is a happy occasion when two true hearts are united. The writer has had the companionship of the bridegroom for ten years. He has always found him to be an honest Christian gentleman, a trusted friend. He is president of the Hackleman Music Company, secretary of the state missionary society, the author of five song books, one of the most successful singing evangelists and by far the most popular convention conductor in the brotherhood. He has directed the music at two National Endeavor Conventions and at several of our national conventions. He has had a wide experience throughout the land as a singer and business man. From his numerous acquaintances he selects for his life companion Pearl Conner, whom he has known ever since she was a little girl. He could not have made a wiser choice.

The bride is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Conner. She is associate editor of the Boys' Friend and secretary of the Boys' Friend Publishing Company. She has made a host of friends in normal schools, colleges and in her work among the Disciples all over Indiana. She is a beautiful young lady, cultured, refined and lovable. All who know her love her. They are now at home in their beautiful residence, 5522 East Washington St., Indianapolis. May the lilies of love cheer them and the mercies of our Father in heaven go with them. J. V. Coombs.

"Helpful Words."

After evangelizing 15 years without 10 days' rest at one time, I am taking a rest by doing pastoral work. I have taken the pastorate of the church in Kirksville, Mo., for an indefinite time. Expect to go into the field again after a few months' rest. The church here has over 500 members. Eight of our best preachers belong to this church. The most of them are here attending the schools of Osteopathy. Brothers U. M. Browder, A. P. Terrell, J. M. Smith, Elliott and Clark are among the number. These brethren have not abandoned the ministry, but hope to do more good by being able to cure the body in connection with preaching.

I have been here four weeks. There have been 24 additions. Our audiences are large. Last Sunday evening after we had crowded the house with nearly seven hundred people, about two hundred were turned away. We are very much in need of a larger house. Hope to enlarge soon.

Bro. Ely, who had been the pastor here five years, left the church in peace, and out of debt, and prosperous in every way. He still makes his home in this town.

Instead of drawing off a part of the church after him, he leaves them all with me. His best friends are my best friends. He speaks kindly of me to all the people, which is a great help to me. Never criticises what I am trying to do. I never knew before the great worth of a helpful word.

Brethren, I fear there is too much of a faulting spirit among us. Let us, both preacher and layman, try to speak helpful words

CHRISTIAN - EVANGELIST

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT?

For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

CURRENT EVENTS.

An event of an international character, to begin this week on this side of the Atlantic, is the yacht race between the Columbia and the Shamrock. For forty-eight years the token of superiority in yacht construction for speed, "The American Cup," has been held on this side of the Atlantic against repeated attempts to carry it across the water. The race this week for a similar purpose on the part of Sir Thomas Lipton, if possible, is therefore attracting wide attention in the two hemispheres. The yachts designed for this race have been built with skill at great cost, and embody many new features which are supposed to greatly accelerate their speed. These yachts will run their first race on Tuesday of this week, over a course of thirty miles, starting from Sandy Hook lightship, to winward or leeward, according to the direction of the breeze. The second race will be a triangular one, ten miles to leg, and is to be sailed on Thursday of this week. The contest will thus alternate in the matter of courses every other day until one of the yachts has won three races. The challenging party is the Royal Ulster Yacht Club and the defending party the New York Yacht Club. But the owners of the racing yachts are Sir Thomas Lipton and J. Pierpont Morgan. The Shamrock, built and owned by Sir Thomas Lipton, was designed by Wm. Fife, Jr., and the Columbia, built and owned by Mr. Morgan, was designed by the same genius that designed the Vigilant and the Defender, Captain N. G. Herreshoff. Neither time nor money have been spared in building either of these yachts, and as both have developed great speed on trial races or spins, great interest attaches to the race, and up to date no friction has occurred, and it is expected that the friendliest of feelings will prevail throughout, whatever the result. This race has been a prominent magazine and newspaper theme for months, and in these all the knowable particulars to date about the yachts, their designers and owners have been written, and when the race is run, if no accidents prevent, there will in all probability be some deposits on the scientific side of the question.

The mining interests of Africa, especially the wonderful gold and diamond mines which have attracted so much attention, are the subject of a chapter in the monograph just prepared by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, on commercial Africa in 1899. Much of the recently rapid development of Africa, especially in the southern part where the greatest rapidity of development has occurred, is due to the discovery and development of extremely valuable mineral deposits. The most valuable of these are gold and diamonds, though incidentally it may be mentioned that the iron, coal and other mineral deposits of South and Southeast Africa give promise of great value when wealth-seeking man has time to turn his attention from the gold mines to those which promise less rapid, but perhaps equally certain profits. That the gold and diamond mines of South Africa have been and still are wonderfully profitable, however, is beyond question. The Kimberly diamond mines, which are located in British territory just outside the boundaries of the Orange Free State and about 600 miles from Cape Town, now supply 98 per cent. of the diamonds of commerce, although their existence was unknown prior to 1867, and the mines have thus been in operation but about thirty years. It is estimated that $350,000,000 worth of rough diamonds, worth double that sum after cutting, have been produced from the Kimberly mines since their opening in 1868-'9. The gold production in the "Rand" since 1884 has been over $300,000,000, and careful surveys of the field by the use of drills and other processes of experts show beyond question that the "in sight" probably amounts to $3,500,000,000, while the large number of mines which have been located in adjacent territory, particularly in parts of Rhodesia, give promise of additional supplies, so that it seems probable that South Africa will for many years continue to be, as it now is, the largest gold producing section of the world. Recent discoveries lead to the belief that these wonderfully rich mines are the long lost "gold of Ophir," from which Solomon obtained his supplies.

The event of the past week was the remarkable welcome extended to Admiral Dewey by the city of New York, and indeed by the whole country. The Admiral arrived two days ahead of the time for which he was scheduled, but the program for his reception was carried out as it had been previously arranged, on the 29th and 30th inst. The daily press has furnished the details of this reception much more elaborately than our space would permit. There was a magnificent naval demonstration on Friday, in which the Olympia, the Admiral's flagship, led, followed by the North Atlantic Squadron, with Rear-Admiral Sampson in command, during which the hero of Manila received a continuous ovation from shouting millions of his countrymen. The land parade on the following day was no less an imposing pageant. In all these official ceremonies, in which he received high eulogies from the Mayor of New York City and others, the Admiral has borne himself with great modesty, expressing his surprise that anything he had done should call forth such a demonstration from his countrymen. The Admiral has received visiting delegations from several cities inviting him to be their guest at his earliest convenience. It is probable that after his visit to Washington, and to Vermont, where he will rest for a season, he will make a tour in the West, visiting many of the principal cities. No national hero, perhaps, has ever been the object of more universal praise and admiration than Admiral Dewey, whom the entire country, if not the whole world, unites in honoring as the greatest living naval commander.

In various reported interviews with Admiral Dewey he has expressed himself quite freely in reference to the situation in the Philippines, and yet with that official reserve becoming one in his station. According to these reported interviews the Admiral believes the Filipinos are more capable of self-government than the people of Cuba. This is not saying, however, that they are prepared at once to assume this responsibility. He is sanguine about the early termination of the insurrection in the islands, and evidently has a kindly feeling towards the misguided insurgents. He regards Aguinaldo as a tool of shrewder men rather than the actual leader of the insurrection. It is clear from what he says that he thinks Gen. Otis has undertaken more work and responsibility than he has been able to wisely manage. The criticism, if it can be called such, is made in the most courteous terms, as of a man overloaded. It is not improbable that a fuller statement of the Admiral's views on this subject to the President may result in a division of labor and of responsibility in the Philippines, insuring greater energy and efficiency, both in the military operations, and in civil administration.

Before this appears in print it is not improbable that the hostile forces confronting each other in South Africa will be engaged in actual war. Events have been hastening to a crisis very rapidly during the past few days, and the state of public feeling is such on both sides that it is not likely that peaceable methods will prevail. Already President Kruger of the Transvaal is massing his forces near the border of Natal, while Great Britain, equally alert, is hastening troops to the front. It is greatly to be regretted that amicable measures of settlement have not prevailed. On the one hand, there are no doubt wrongs that ought to be righted on the part of the Transvaal Republic toward the foreign-born population whose wealth and enterprise have contributed so largely to the prosperity of the republic. On the other hand the Boers are not without grounds of suspicion that their independence is menaced by the demands of the British Government. There comes a hint from London that may help to solve the problem as to why peace methods have been ineffectual. It is said that the British authorities have discovered the existence of a conspiracy for the formation of a Dutch Republic to be known as the Unit ed States of South Africa, and that it is this fact that has made it seem necessary for the British Government to enforce harder conditions than would otherwise be necessary. As in the case of our own recent war with Spain, results are likely to flow out of this conflict with ihe Boers not now foreseen. One of these is not unlikely to be the formation of a republic in South Africa. It is predicted in Germany that Great Britain will probably suffer some defeats in the beginning of the war, but one can hardly doubt what will be the ultimate issue of such a conflict. Great Britain will not surrender her prestige in South Africa without a prolonged struggle.

The forces under command of Gen. MacArthur in the Philippines made an advance last week on the town of Porac, which was captured after half an hour's fighting, with small loss on either side. This is not understood to be a general advance of the army, as the rainy season fs not yet over, but was a strategic move to prepare the way for a later advance. Aguinaldo has sent envoys to Gen. Otis, requesting the privilege of sending a governmental commission to treat for peace. Gen. Otis promptly declined to take any action that would recognize the so-called Filipino Government. He expressed his willingness, however, to receive representatives of Aguinaldo as general commanding the insurgents. This is the third attempt of Aguinaldo to shift the difficulties of the situation from war to diplomacy in order to secure the recognition of his government. The envoys were to have further interviews with Gen. Otis before returning.

BY THE SAME RULE.

We are often reminding Roman Catholics of the truth that their religion must stand or fall by its fruits. We have been saying to them of late, "There is Spain, there is Cuba and there are the Philippine Islands, which have been under your control, religiously, for centuries. See what manner of civilization you have brought forth. Note what type of morality prevails. You are condemned by the Master's test, 'By their fruits ye shall know them.'"

This is all well and good, so far as it goes. Roman Catholics can not evade the force of this law, because it is a divine law that runs through the whole universe of God. But neither can Protestants evade it. If Roman Catholics are prevented by their own moral delinquencies from pointing to the defects in our Protestant civilization in this country and in other Anglo-Saxon nations, we can well imagine that the world, not embraced in either Protestantism or Catholicism, will apply the same test impartially to both types of religion. Moreover, it is a test that Protestants should continually apply to themselves. If we hold Roman Catholics responsible for the religious condition of those countries where their religion predominates, why should not Protestants be held responsible for the religious condition of the people of this and other Protestant lands? Whether or not we hold ourselves amenable to this rule, God Himself will judge us by it.

How does it happen that here in our own country, dedicated to civil and religious liberty, and consecrated by the prayers of those who laid the foundations of our institutions, there exist such monstrous evils as the liquor traffic, widespread political corruption, a light regard for the marriage relation, the prevalence of lynch law' industrial oppression and the growth of monopolies? Do not these great evils discredit our Protestant Christianity? Every one admits, of course, that the religion of Christ is hostile to all of these things. Why have they not, then, been prevented? The only answer Protestantism can make is to hide its face in its hands in shame and confess: "We have been weakened by our divisions and denominational strifes, and we have grieved away the Spirit of God and have lost the power which comes from unity of action and consecration of all to the leadership of Jesus Christ."

But let us come still closer home. What do we who call ourselves Disciples of Christ do more than others? We may judge ourselves by standards of our own, such as soundness in doctrine and correctness of orthodoxy, but the Master will judge us, yea, and the world judges us, by the divine test: "By their fruits ye shall know them." If we are right in our contention that human creeds hamper the mind in its freedom of action, and cramp the religious life of a people, while the liberty of Christ disenthralls the soul and gives it liberty of growth and sets it on a career of intellectual and spiritual progress, surely we ought to present to the world, after more than fourscore years of our existence as a religious movement, a higher type of religious manhood and womanhood than that which prevails in the rest of Christendom. The superiority of our plea ought to manifest itself by this time in high-class religious journalism, in well-endowed schools and universities consecrated to Christian culture, in strong and effective missionary organizations for the world's evangelization, in widespread benefactions and philanthropies and in hearty co-operation with all moral and social reforms that look toward the world's betterment.

What do we more than others? Have we more liberty than they who acknowledge allegiance to human creeds? Perhaps so. But this liberty is often menaced and jeopardized by the partisan spirit. Freed from the necessity of defending bygone theologies, and with only Christ to urge upon men, do we succeed better than others in winning and turning men from darkness to light? We think so, where the same effort is put forth. But how lacking we are, after all, in evangelistic zeal and enterprise! Has the glorious vision of a united church so filled our brotherhood with the spirit of unity and fraternity that our local congregations are freed from dissensions and strifes, and all our ministers, teachers and editors regard and treat each other as brethren in a common cause? Surely, example is far more potent than mere theory in advancing the cause of the unification of Christendom. Has our championship of Jesus Christ as our sole Leader so filled us with His spirit of sacrifice that we are more liberal than others in using our means for the advancement of the kingdom of God? Let our colleges, our missionary treasuries, our orphans' homes, and our care for aged and indigent ministers and other benevolences furnish the answer.

It is not so much as to what progress we have made in excelling others in these particulars, for it may be allowed that we are yet in the making, and there must be time for development, but are our ideals higher than others? Do all of us really understand that our only sufficient vindication in the eyes of God and in the eyes of the world is that we shall bring forth better fruit and more of it than has hitherto been produced? Are we looking so much to the character of the men and the women who are molded by our teaching and influence as to the correctness of our theories and the soundness of our teaching? Let us understand, once for all, that unless the superiority of our position so manifests itself in the lives and characters of our membership, in the religious activity of our churches, in our contribution to the religious thought of our times, it will be in vain that we plead the correctness of our teaching and the value of our religious plea. The doctrine and the plea that do not issue in nobler lives, in higher types of character, in a purer civilization, will not stand the test either of God or man.

THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.

A world-famous agnostic sometime ago said:

"MAKE THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT YOUR RELIGION AND THERE I AM WITH YOU."

This remark brings up two questions: What does the Sermon on the Mount contain? What are its teachings?

The existence of God is assumed. God is. The preacher did not attempt to prove the existence of Deity. As to the existence of God, there is not the shadow of a shade of uncertainty in this peerless discourse. "Make the Sermon on the Mount your religion and there I am with you," says the agnostic. He must, then, believe in the existence of God.

The preacher also taught that God rewards men. The things that are done in secret he rewards openly. The God of the Sermon on the Mount knows the secret things of men. The prayer offered in the closet he hears.

Much is made of the providence of God in this sermon. "Be not anxious for your life," said the preacher. God will care for you. Trust him. He cares for the flowers and the birds. Doubt not. He will see to it that in some way his children are clothed and fed. This is the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount. Does the agnostic subscribe to it? If he believes in the doctrine of this discourse he must believe in divine providence.

But raiment, and shelter, and food, and drink are promised conditionally. "Seek ye first his kingdom and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you," says this sermon.

The preacher said that God is "Our Father." The Fatherhood of God is a prominent thought in this discourse. It contains "the model prayer." When we pray to God we are taught to say: "Our Father." Many times God is called "Father." "Thy Father which seeth in secret shall recompense thee." "Thy Father which in secret." "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of." "Your Heavenly Father feedeth." "Your Heavenly Father knoweth." These quotations are sufficient. The idea of the Fatherhood of God is prominent.

The God of the Sermon on the Mount is a prayer-hearing God. Men are taught to pray to him. He is to be asked for daily food, for the forgiveness of sins, for protection in time of temptation and for the triumph of righteousness. He is more ready to bestow good things on his children in response to their requests than we are to give good things to our children. He is our loving Father.

The preacher taught in his discourse that men owe primary and supreme allegiance to God. He said, "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." Does the agnostic subscribe to this?

This sermon requires men to be pure in thought, in heart, in conduct. At this point its teaching is almost severe in its requirements. It is radical in its doctrine.

The Pharisees were formalists. They paid tithes of garden herbs, punctiliously, while they omitted the weightier matters of the law, such as judgment, mercy and faith. The outside of the cups and plates were scrupulously clean, but within they were foul. The scribes and Pharisees were likened to whited sepulchres—beautiful on the outside, but within "full of dead men's bones and all uncleanness." Such were the Pharisees and scribes. The preacher said in the sermon under consideration: "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom." In other words, in order to be well-pleasing to God your righteousness must be within as well as without. Not those who say Lord, Lord—formalist, mere professors—but such as do the will of God, are citizens of the kingdom of heaven.

Lustful thoughts are condemned. Anger exposes one to peril. Reconciliation, where there is alienation, must precede acceptable worship. "Be reconciled to thy brother," said the preacher. Enemies must be loved and persectors must be prayed for. The man who is angry with his brother without cause is as if he were guilty of murder. The heart as well as the conduct must be right before him who sees in secret. "Blessed are the pure in heart." Harsh judgment is condemned. The fountain must be purified. The stream will in this way be made clean.

Is not this teaching almost severe in its requirements? Is the agnostic prepared to subscribe to it? "Make the Sermon on the Mount your religion and there I am with you." Is this true?

The rule by which men are to regulate their intercourse with each other is this: "All things ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them." Put yourself in his place. How would you be treated if you were in the place of the other man?

Bad men are in peril. The man who speaks contemptuously of his brother man is in danger of the council. The man who calls his brother a "fool" is in danger of "the hell of fire." The man who is in debt to his fellow may be "cast into prison." He may be left in prison until the last farthing has been paid. Not all men will be saved. To evil-doers it will be said: "Depart from me ye that work iniquity." Bad men are in peril. Their destiny is not the same as is the destiny of the good. The preacher entreated his hearers, saying: "Enter ye in by the narrow gate: for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many be they that enter in thereby. For narrow is the gate and straitened the way that leadeth unto life and few be they that find it."

If we subscribe to the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount we must treat the Old Testament with profound respect. The preacher declared in this discourse that "till heaven and earth pass away, one jot or one title shall in nowise pass from the law till all things be accomplished." He also said, speaking of the commandments contained in the law of Moses, that "whosoever shall break one of these least commandments and shall teach men so, shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven," and that "whosoever shall do and teach them shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven."

Is the agnostic prepared to accept what the preacher said concering himself?

He claimed to possess supreme authority. The historian tells us that at the conclusion of the discourse "the mulitudes were astonished at his teaching: for he taught them as one having authority." Again and again he uses the words: "But I say unto you." He is the person who will say: "Depart from me." He said that those who heard his words and did them were wise; those who heard and did not were foolish. The author of the Sermon on the Mount claimed to possess supreme authority. Is the agnostic willing to order his life in harmony with this claim?

"MAKE THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT YOUR RELIGION AND THERE I AM WITH YOU."

"FREQUENCY OF THE LORD'S SUPPER."

This is the title of a most vitalizing little book just issued from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, from the pen of our afflicted but consecrated brother, N. J. Aylsworth, A. M., of Auburn, N. Y. The title of the work does not adequately indicate the character of its contents. The sub-title, as given in the title page, gives a better idea of the scope of the work. It is the "Frequency of the Lord's Supper Considered with Reference to its Nature and Uses, or a Study of the Law of Repetition in its Relation to Public Worship." There is nothing like it known to us in print. It fills a unique and important place in the literature on the Lord's Supper.

In our effort to restore the primitive worship of the church we have given the Lord's Supper a prominent place, and all our churches so situated as to be able to meet weekly, observe the breaking of bread as a part of their regular Lord's day worship. This very fact requires that we should take special pains that the nature and uses of the ordinance be thoroughly understood by our membership, and that the reasons for its weekly observance should be clearly fixed in all our minds. Our literature on the subject has been scant, considering the importance that we have attached to this institution.

It was a conviction of this kind that led the editor of this paper to prepare his little volume on "Half Hour Studies at the Cross," a devotional work, designed to better equip ministers and elders in officiating at the Lord's table. This little volume before us, however, fills a different place. It deals in a philosophic way with the spiritual and psychological reasons that underlie the frequent observance of the Lord's Supper. This leads the author to deal with the law of repetition in its relation to the entire scope of public worship, and the treatment is of a most edifying character. The author's treatment of the whole subject of worship is most illuminating and helpful. His style is perspicuity itself. While the thought is of a profound nature often, it is conveyed in a way that the average reader will find no difficulty whatever in following it. The following quotation will give an idea of the author's style:

"The wide paryalysis of worship has its far-reaching causes. All worship is conditioned by meditation. It is the thoughts of the divine character and of his dealings with us that inspire the emotions which constitute worship. These reflections constitute the fuel by which the heart takes fire. But the conditions of modern life are unfavorable to meditation. The railroad, the printing-press and the telegraph have brought the whole world into a single neighborhood, whose gossip is perpetually served by the masters of sensation. A siagle metropolitan daily is equivalent to a fair-sized book; and the issues of the press darken the very skies for number. Its thoughts are everywhere; they immerse us like a sea. Like the frogs of Egypt, they infest all privacies.

"Then, modern inventions have greatly multiplied the means of enjoyment, and we have a thousand new solicitations to pleasure. Business competition is sharp and effort is strenuous. We are living at high pressure, and life is over-full. There is no silence in the roar of the world's great life. The thunder of the street reverberates in our closet. We are hunted in our privacy by an ever-present worldliness. Before this deluge of modern life the family altar has already gone down, and is well-nigh a thing of the past; and what of the closet? There no doubt remains a desire to worship, but the condition of the worship has been largely swept away. There is no time for meditation. There is no vacant hour for thought. The fires of incense are dying on our altars. Worship has been dried up at its fountain. The blight of a great spiritual paralysis threatens us. What shall we do? Shall we banish from our regular service the one act of meditation that stands as a breakwater against this devastating flood? The family altar has gone already from many homes; shall the last act of meditative worship be dropped out of our regular public service? If the Lord's Supper is barren, it means paralysis, not that the Supper itself is useless. Woe to that Christian to whom an hour of silence before God is empty! Never was this great Christian memorial so much needed in the habitual service as in this time of peril, which is sapping the very foundations of Christian worship."

Whoever reads this little work thoughtfully, and according to the rule which the author lays down for profitable reading, will henceforth have a higher appreciation of the divine wisdom embodied in the Lord's Supper, and a higher conception of its spiritual uses, and, perhaps, a clearer idea as to the nature of worship in general. It is an invaluable handbook on the subject, and should be in the hands, not only of every preacher and officer among us, but it should have a wide reading among the membership in our churches. We know of nothing that would be better calculated to secure a larger and more regular attendance among Christians at the Lord's day service, and nothing that is likely to be so helpful in making that service of a spiritual and edifying character. Happily, the inexpensiveness of the book makes it possible to give it a wide circulation among our membership. The reading of this little volume will whet the reader's appetite for the larger work by the same author on "The Spiritual Aspects of Baptism," which is yet in MS., but which the author hopes to have published soon.

HEROES OF FAITH.

(Heb. 11:4-10; 32-40.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Oct. 11th.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Faith is the power that links the human soul with the unseen world and its realities, and imparts to it the divine energy by which it is capable of achieving what would otherwise be impossible.

England has her Westminster Abbey and Germany her Walhalla, where the heroes of these respective nations find sepulture, and where their names are recorded and their fame perpetuated for future ages. This 11th chapter of Hebrews is the Westminster Abbey or Walhalla of the Bible, where are recorded the names and deeds of some of the world's greatest moral heroes.

The one characteristic of the men and women whose names are here mentioned, dffering widely as they do in character and culture, in their surroundings and in the kind of service rendered, is that they were actuated by the principle of faith in what they did, and achieved their greatness through the power of the unseen. Such men were Abel, who offered an acceptable sacrifice to God by faith; Enoch, who by faith walked with God and was translated that he should not see death; Noah, who through faith prepared an ark to the saving of his house; Abraham, who when he was called obeyed to go out unto a place which he was to receive for an inheritance, and who went out not knowing whither he went. All these names have come down to us in this register of heroes because they had the power of realizing the unseen, and of acting under the power of its sublime realities.

It was this quality that distinguished them from the common herd about them. They had an ear to hear God's voice, and they had the spiritual vision to perceive God in the movements among men, and they had the moral heroism to do what they believed God required at their hands regardless of what sacrifices it involved. It is this that makes heroes in the highest sense. These men did not have the light of God that we enjoy to-day. Theirs was only the starlit age of the world. The sun had not yet risen above the world's horizon, but they were loyal to such light as they had. It is this that pleases God. They saw the better and brighter day coming in the distant future, but they did not live to realize it. It is characteristic of faith to foresee and foretell the time when truth and righteousness shall triumph on the earth. Faith always puts the future over against the present and discounts the sufferings and sacrifices of the present in view of the future.

Note the achievements accredited to faith in the closing part of this chapter. Nothing less than the power of God, entering into human life through the channel of faith, could achieve such marvelous results. Look at what men endured for righteousness' sake and for truth's sake. They had trials of mockings and scourgings, of bonds and imprisonment; they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, they were tempted, they were slain with the sword, they went about in sheepskins, in goatskins; they were destitute, afflicted, evilly treated, wandering in deserts and mountains and caves and the holes of the earth; and yet the world was not worthy of them. By faith they saw what the world about them did not see. They endured "as seeing Him who is invisible." They lived under "the power of the world to come." Like the Master, after them, they were "despised and rejected of men," but their names are recorded here as the heroes of God, and their examples are an inspiration to all high achievement and worthy endeavor.

Let it be well noted that the men and women whose names the divine Spirit thought it well to record, and who have done most in ages past to lift the world up to a higher life, have been men and women of faith, of moral vision. Not the men who doubt, but the men who believe in God and are linked with Him in His eternal purposes, have wrought successfully for the elevation of mankind.

PRAYER.

O Thou invisible but all-powerful God, who hast revealed Thyself in Jesus Christ our Savior, we thank Thee that though we cannot behold Thee with the outward eye, yet by faith we can see Thee and trust Thee and order our lives in harmony with Thy gracious will. We rejoice in the power of faith, by which the invisible world becomes real to us, and by which we may be moved by everlasting realities. We are grateful for the heroes of faith in the ages past, into the inheritance of whose labors we have come. May we who live in this day prove to be not unworthy spiritual descendants of these mighty men of the past. We believe; increase our faith, O Lord, so that we may triumph over all temptation and tribulation here, in Thy strength, and reign with Thee forever. For Thy name's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

This issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will find the Missouri Christian Missionary Convention assembled in the capital of the state to deliberate concerning the interests of the cause which it represents. Missouri is indeed an imperial state. The Disciples of Christ hold an imperial position in the state. They are probably the strongest religious body within the borders of the great commonwealth. This fact carries with it great responsibilities. We should be leaders in all movements looking to the moral and religious welfare of the state and of its rapidly increasing population. Missouri's capital sits upon a proud eminence and commands a magnificent view of the Missouri River, whose turbid tide washes the very base of the hill on which it sits. It is fitting that the capital of Missiouri should bear the name of the honored statesman by whose diplomacy the magnificent territory known as the Louisiana Purchase was added to our national domain. It is fitting, too, that the leading religious body of the state numerically, perhaps, should meet in convention at the political and governmental center of the state to plan for its religious welfare. At the state's capital we ought to be able to take a comprehensive view of the needs of the entire state and plan largely and wisely.

The most optimistic and sanguine among us can hardly feel that things in Missouri are what they ought to be. If we are not mistaken, there is a widespread conviction that we are not making progress as rapidly along all the lines of our work as we ought, if, indeed, we are making any progress whatever in certain directions. As we write in advance of the report of the State Board of Missions, we cannot say definitely what growth there has been in this work during the past year, but we feel justified in saying in advance that the churches, very many of them at least, have fallen short of their obligations in responding to the needs of this great field. It must be confessed that we have many derelict preaches and churches. How else can we account for so many noncontributing churches in the state? It is equally apparent that we can never meet the just expectations of our brethren elsewhere or of the people of this commonwealth outside our fellowship, unless our ministery and membership can be brought into closer and more earnest co-operation. Who knows how this can be done? There is no power short of omnipotence that can arouse sleeping churches and indifferent ministers to a sense of their moral obligation in the evangelization of this great state Surely, the situation is one that may well drive us to our knees to implore divine help.

Educational matters in Missouri are yet in an unsatisfactory condition. True, some of the schools in the state have opened with brighter prospects than heretofore, but as yet there has been no adequate response to the needs of these schools for increased endowment and better equipment. It is not that we do not have wealth in the state, for we have our full share of the wealth of this prosperous commonwealth. But the wealth is not turned into the right channels for promoting the interests of the kingdom of God. This means, of course, that there has been a grave fault in our teaching concerning the right use of wealth and the nature of Christian stewardship. It may mean, too, that there is lack of appreciation, among the brotherhoood of the state, of the urgent needs of our educational institutions. Whatever the cause may be, it behooves us to find out and apply the remedy. But alas, how many there be, like Gallio, who "care for none of these things!" How few are bearing on their minds and hearts the burden of the welfare of our colleges and the work of Christian education!

Missouri has been blessed in the past with a number of men in her ministry of superior ability and character. They have been men of "light and leading." They have been large enough to carry the welfare of the whole state in their hearts. Their faces were always seen in our state conventions, and their voices heard in behalf of every forward movement. Around them have rallied the younger and less prominent ministers of the state and the whole brotherhood. But this "Old Guard" is growing less in number every year.

Many of them have already joined the General Assembly that meets in the upper sanctuary, while others yet linger, and are walking amid the deepening shadows of the eveningtime. Who are to take the places of these men who have gone and are going so rapidly? Have we taken sufficient thought and care for an educated and trained ministry, who are to take up and carry forward the work laid down by these eminent servants of God? We fear not. It is high time this matter were receiving our most earnest and prayerful attention.

If we mistake not, there is a feeling that there is not the same unity existing in the ranks of the Missouri brotherhood that once existed. It is hardly to be expected, perhaps, that so large a body as we have now come to be in the state can maintain the same oneness of purpose and fraternity of feeling that characterized us when we were a small company, unified by opposition from without as well as by brotherly love within. But we are, nevertheless, by the very nature of our plea, bound to maintain that unity among ourselves for which we plead among others. If there be any influences at work causing alienations, sowing seeds of discord or of distrust, and preventing that cordial co-operation so essential to success, surely every good man and woman among us should lend his influence to remove these causes. Why not, at this annual convention, held in the capital of the state, pledge anew our allegiance to Christ as our Leader, and our brotherly love and confidence to each other, and go forward, with new zeal and enthusiasm, to achieve the magnificent triumph which is easily within our reach in our beloved Missouri?

Questions and Answers.

1. In John's testimony, 16:13, Jesus says, "When the Spirit of truth is come he will guide you into all truth." Do Christians now have a right to claim this same guidance of the Spirit herein promised to the apostles?

2. Does the Holy Spirit now show Christians "things to come" by revealing these things to them as it did to the apostles?

3. Does the Holy Spirit receive the things of Christ and show them to us as it did to the apostles? (v. 14.)

These three questions can each be answered by yes or no. I do not ask for the reasons for the answers you may give, but for a clear, direct answer to each question.

E. J. Lampton.

There is no one we would like more to accommodate than our personal friend, Bro. Lampton. But really we cannot answer his questions by a simple "yes or no." Rather we would have to answer them yes and no. There is a qualifying phrase attached to each question which makes an affirmative answer impossible, namely, "the same guidance" as to the apostles, the same revealing power as to the apostles, etc. We think the apostles hold a unique place in the church, and have no successors. As personal witnesses of Christ, as personally chosen by Him for a special work, they received a special measure and manifestation of the Holy Spirit not promised to others, and through the Spirit performed a work in reporting Christ and conveying a picture of Him to the world, and a knowledge of His will, which cannot be duplicated. Therefore, Christians now do not receive the Holy Spirit as a guide to truth and a revealer of the things of Christ in the same way that the apostles did.

But we do believe that the Holy Spirit is a permanent gift to the church, and that Christians now may claim the gift of the Holy Spirit, and that He dwells in them, leading them into a richer and fuller life, into larger and clearer views of truth, and revealing through this enlarging life and vision "the things of Christ," and even "things to come," as they are not known to those who possess not the Spirit. Our querist, himself, has been led by the Spirit to a fuller and truer conception of the doctrine of Christ and of the Christian life than he once possessed. What he has learned does not nullify nor contradict the inspired message on the written page, but it puts a larger content into it than he once perceived, and gives it a new and deeper significance.

This answer is longer than was requested, but we hope it is plain, nevertheless.

SAVING MEN FROM OUR PRESENT HELLS.*

For centuries past, the church has been telling men that they must believe certain theological propositions or be damned, but now the tables are turning and men are beginning to tell the church that unless she does certain essential works she will be damned. So long as the church could make salvation depend upon the belief of theological dogmas and enforce their acceptance by the threats of eternal punishment in some future fiery furnace, it made headway in the world. But now, that men have ceased to become alarmed at its pictures of torment in the world to come she is becoming painfully conscious of a loss of power and a consequent inability to make headway in the world on its old lines.

It is rightfully claimed that the church must have an issue, and that sound doctrine is its backbone, but many of its old issues are dead and all the sledge-hammer preaching of the giants of sectarianism cannot revive them. Questions to-day about the trinity, original sin, election, reprobation, apostolic succession and a host of other kindred things no longer command the respect of men outside of theological schools. They are dead issues. Men in all civilized lands generally believe in God, in Christ, and in righteousness, and this is enough theology for a practical working basis; for present uses. The issues of the church to-day are with present evils. Not that men shall be damned in the next world if they don't believe, but that they will be damned in this world if they don't act, whether in or out of the church.

There is no dearth of issues. All about us are to be seen the ante-chambers of hells as lurid with the flames of iniquity as any furnace of fire and brimstone ever conceived of in the world to come by the most "orthodox" sectarian preacher, and into these ante-chambers unbroken columns of our sons and daughters, of men and women, are marching day and night with a steadfastness worthy of a better object. Some of the ante-chambers of these hells are the saloon, the wineroom, the card table, the race track, the pool-room, the boodle office and the house of shame. Some of the hells into which these ante-chambers open and are unceasingly dumping their deluded crowds are loathsome diseases, a tormenting conscience, domestic trouble, poverty, public disgrace, imprisonment and the agonies of a burning evil passion.

If the church of to-day is concerned about the future of men, as she claims to be and ought to be, let her awake to the emergency of saving the people, old and young, from the hells of this world. Sin leads to hell, and to save men from their sins is to save them from the hells of this life as well as that of the next. The church has been working on the theory that to save men from the hells of the next world was her all-sufficient work; but it has been demonstrated that civilization will not go forward on this line. Let her save men from the hells of this life and they will more probably escape those of the next. That she has saved some thus is true, but she has not yet touched the masses with this salvation.

If the church to-day is dying for an issue, let her champion the cause of temperance and fight the liquor traffic as vehemently as she has fought opposing religions in the past, and she will not lack for an audience, neither for enthusiastic followers. Or let her champion the cause of righteousness in the business world; or let her rise up in her might and declare against political corruption and political boodle in the affairs of city and state; or let her insist upon the use of the Golden Rule in the social and business realms of life; or let her declare for one standard of moral purity in the social domain. There is no lack for living, burning issues; issues upon which depend, not only the perpetuity of our nation, but all that is dear to us in this life; issues that are languishing for support; issues over which thousands and tens of thousands are daily stumbling to their everlasting ruin.

It is a mistake to suppose that the church is about out of a job. She is only at the threshold of her work. Not only are the dark continents of Asia and Africa to be Christianized, but also the civilizations of Europe and of North and South America. We have hardly seen the alphabet of a real Christian nation yet on this earth. We have hardly applied even the first principles of science to municipal, state or national governments as yet, to say nothing of the first principles of Christianity. The majority of the human race live, move and have their being in the hells of heathenism, of corrupt governments, of industrial slavery, and of social impurity, and it is from these hells that men are crying for deliverance; it is from these hells that God sent his Son to deliver men, and it is from these hells the church must go about her rescue work. No other power will rescue them, and the day is not distant when the world will see the church grappling with these greater issues.

Lodges and all charitable organizations are not robbing the church of her work, as some suppose. Her's is a higher calling, and it is well that she be not encumbered with these important, yet minor, consequential cares. It is the mission of the church to prevent helplessness, suffering, poverty, and distress in so far as these things can be prevented by the suppression of sin and unrighteousness in society, in commerce, in politics and in governments. It is her mission to establish the kingdom of God in the hearts of men, in the marts of trade, in the halls of Congress, in the assemblies of state, in the courts of justice, in the laws of the land—everywhere. It is her mission to dethrone oppression, purge out the leaven of unrighteousness and to insist on a pure life and the authority of the Golden Rule in all affairs. May God hasten the day when Zion shall arise in her strength, put on the garments of beauty and rule the world in righteousness.

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

THE EXPANSION OF OUR MISSIONARY WORK.

BENJAMIN L. SMITH.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The next great forward movement among our people will be the proper endowment of some of our educational institutions. The weakest point in our whole line to-day is that presented by our colleges. This subject is pressing upon our people for consideration. The Board of Education is the co-operation of leading colleges among us for the advocacy of the cause of education and for the aid of our colleges. At present the board consists of the following

MEMBERS OF BOARD OF EDUCATION.

J. H. Hardin, president, Eureka College; Hiram VanKirk, secretary, Divinity House, Chicago University; Mrs. A. A. Forrest, Butler College; E. V. Zollars, Hiram College; B. C. Deweese, Kentucky University; O. T. Morgan, University of Chicago; J. B. Sweeney, Add-Ran University.

Its work is to create interest in the work of education, to aid our colleges in securing endowment. It hopes for a general secretary to push forward these interests before the brotherhood.

Our educational board would claim that the relation of our people to the cause of education is logically one of hearty support. Our religious position commits us in the strongest possible way to the cause of education.

To go "back to Christ" means to magnify the importance of education. Salvation begins in instruction. The Disciples have opposed the doctrine of conversion by abstract operation of the Spirit. Men must hear, understand, believe and obey. All this involves education. We hold that Christian faith is personal, both in object and subject. It is progressive and should be constantly enlarging. Our view makes the continuous development of faith dependent upon education.

The church is a school for the development of character; thus the church is an educational institution.

Our view of the Bible compells us to champion the cause of education. The Bible is not a fetish, not an object of idolatrous worship, not a mystery to be cherished with superstition. It is the revelation of God to man, a revelation addressed to man's understanding, to be read and understood like any other book addressed to the understanding. It has its divisions, and is related to the languages, customs and history of the times in which it appeared. A knowledge of all these things becomes immensely important. This means education.

The Disciples of Christ have been from the beginning of their religious movement, both theoretically and practically, an educational people. The first clear lines of the movement were formed around that splendid institution—Bethany College. The first in the world to make the Bible the basis of its educational scheme, this college is now being unconsciously followed in this feature by many who have never heard even the name of the historic temple on the banks of the Buffalo. It is safe to say that without Bethany College and the other institutions which soon grew up in different parts of the country, after her image and likeness, the restoration movement of the nineteenth century would have been a failure.

BOARD OF MINISTERIAL RELIEF.

The Board of Ministerial Relief was organized at the National Convention at Dallas, Texas, in 1895.

J. H. Hardin presented the following to the General Board:

WHEREAS, There is a necessity for some more adequate provision for our own disabled preachers, and the relief of the destitute widows and children of deceased preachers; and,

WHEREAS, The Lord has put it into the heart of Bro. A. M. Atkison to take steps to greatly enlarge our Ministerial Relief Fund; therefore, be it—

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to submit an amendment to our constitution as the basis for such curatorship, or board of control, as may be deemed necessary to the effectiveness of this important feature of our work.

The committee appointed by the General Board presented the following report to the convention:

1. That we recommend the organization of the Ministerial Relief Fund of the Christian Church as one of the departments of work of the General Christian Missionary Convention.

2. That we recommend the following change in the constitution of the convention:

"Article IX. The convention shall elect annually nine brethren to serve as a Board of Ministerial Relief of the Christian Church, five of whom shall reside in or near Indianapolis, Indiana.

"This board shall have authority to raise and collect funds for the relief of destitute ministers and the dependent families of deceased ministers. They shall appoint their own meetings, make rules for their own government, elect their own officers, including a treasurer, who shall give bond and report annually to the auditor and treasurer of this convention.

"The Board of Ministerial Relief shall make a full report at each annual meeting of this convention."

3. The number of the remaining articles of the constitution shall be changed to provide room for this Article IX.

4. The committee on nominations is hereby instructed to present to this convention the names of nine brethren to serve as a Board of Ministerial Relief.

Respectfully submitted.

BENJ. L. SMITH, G. L. BROKAW,
A. P. COBB, F. D. POWER,
A. J. BUSH, Committee.

The Board of Ministerial Relief has been incorporated under the laws of Indiana and has its headquarters at Indianapolis. A. M. Atkinson writes:

ITS OBJECT.—The object of the board is to help make suitable provision for the better care of our old and disabled preachers and those dependent upon them; the widows and orphans of deceased ministers, our missionaries in this and foreign lands, who through misfortune may need a helping hand.

ITS SPIRIT.—It asks that it be not considered a charity. It is not a question of grace, but of debt—a debt on account of the tenderest, holiest service possible among men. Those whose care is sought are not beggars; they are the King's messengers, who have brought us the glad tidings of great joy.

THE PLAN OF RELIEF.—To secure a fuller understanding of that item in the financial statement which refers to loans, attention is called to the plan of relief adopted by the board of trustees. After careful consideration of the plans suggested, including state and national ministerial homes, the trustees decided that it was best for all parties interested to extend aid to all persons in their own homes, where they could have the care and companionship of relatives and friends.

The trustees also decided to build up a permanent endowment fund. This plan has long been in force in other churches, and has in all cases given satisfaction.

THE OFFERING.—The third Lord's day in December has been named as a day for offerings to Ministerial Relief. If that day is not suitable the ministers and churches are urged to select a day that will be acceptable—the board covets the gifts that love inspires.

A. M. Atkinson gave himself to the work of Ministerial Relief without any charges from its inception until his health failed. The work and worry was too much for him, and he has been compelled to let it pass to the care of others. Howard C. Cale, of Indianapolis, Ind., is the present executive officer.

HOME MISSIONS IN FOUR WORDS.

The plea for Home Missions can be made in four words:

1. For the sake of souls. Nowhere can we win souls with so little effort and so little cost. The harvest is ripe, the laborers are few. Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into the harvest.

2. For the sake of our plea for Christian union. Nowhere can our plea receive so respectful a hearing as in America. This is the seat of the disease of denominationalism; here is where we are to carry the cure; our distinctive plea is essecially adapted to American Christianity. God in his providence sent it to America by our fathers and every motive that sent our fathers with this great plea impels us today to send it all over the goodly land.

3. For the sake of our country. America needs the gospel of our Lord. Jesue Christ is the only statesman who can properly solve the problems that are before our people to-day. Every high motive of patriotism appeals to us to make this land Immanuel's land.

4. For the sake of our Lord Jesus Christ. Jesus needs America just as much as America needs Jesus. God has ordained that nations should be his witnesses as much as individuals. It is ordained that America shall stand before the nations and bear witness. God wants that testimony to be for righteousness and for the gospel of the Son of God.

The Anglo-Saxon blood is the conquering blood; God wants that blood to be pure and healthful.

By these four words Home Missions lays claim to our love, our help and our prayers.

God has honored this society and brotherhood, whose servant it is, in using it for the advancement of his kingdom, and in the effort to make this goodly land more and more Immanuel's land.

Many newly organized churches need to be encouraged and supported; many ripe fields need to be harvested; we should have a thousand missionaries under direction of our board.

In every mark of divine approval, in the fact that our plea never received so responsive a hearing as now, in the rapid growth God has given us as a people, our God is saying to us: "Behold this goodly land; it is yours, and you are able to possess it for the religion of Jesus Christ." We should keep step with the march of God's providence and get out with him beyond the camp of indifference for the possession of America for Christ. "Home Missions to the front" should be the cry of every minister, every elder and member of the body of Christ, and it should never cease until we have won the victory.

EVOLUTION OF THE DIVINE CHARACTER IN MAN.

(Luke 10:25-37.)

PROF. FRANCIS E. NIPHER.

A well-known evangelist is reported to have said: "I love flowers and religion; I hate botany and theology."

This statement is one of many similar indications of a change that has been slowly taking place among all Christian churches during our generation. The idea seems to be that we are becoming more interested in knowing what we should do, than in knowing the theories which have been entertained by others who have preceded us concerning what we should think. We are becoming more interested in knowing the full meaning of the sublime truths which the great Teacher taught, and less interested in the contending speculations of men who have sought to fathom all of the mysteries of the divine kingdom.

What are our duties, the doing of which will bring divine approval? Is there no way of learning what we should do? We are taught that we must each give an account of our stewardship in this world. There is to be a final examination. Can we learn what subjects will be covered in that examination? If a college student could learn at the beginning of his study of a subject precisely what the examination would be, he would feel somewhat more confident than he usually does.

Now it so happened that the great Teacher gave his disciples an account of the last day, when to those on the right hand it will be said, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." And he then goes on to state the issues on which men shall be judged and their lives approved or condemned. And these grounds for approval and condemnation are certainly worthy of our most profound attention. They should certainly give us a very definite idea of the nature of the grounds on which the judgment will be made up. When we come to examine them we find them equally significant in view of what they contain and what they do not contain. In the entire category of items on which the lives of the righteous are approved, there is not one shadow of reference to the doctrines and beliefs about which theologians have been disputing for centuries, and which still divide the followers of Christ. In reciting the grounds for the condemnation of the wicked there is not one which in the most remote way pertains to the disbelief of this or that dogma. What is the character of this judgment? To the righteous it is said:

"I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat;
I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink;
I was a stranger, and ye took me in;
Naked, and ye clothed me;
I was sick, and ye visited me;
I was in prison, and ye came unto me."

And the wicked are condemned because they have not done these things.

Now there is certainly no reason why men should not continue to study botany and theology if it pleases, amuses or instructs them to do so; but it is very clear that proficiency in these branches of science will not of itself constitute an adequate preparation for the final examination. Let us hope that the botanists and theologians will all be found on the right hand, but it is clear that they will not be there in a professional capacity.

The context shows that the virtue of the righteous does not consist in the rendering of these specific services to the Judge himself. The construction is avowedly very liberal. Evidently such acts of kindness and mercy to even the least of his brethren is what is covered in the judgment. The Golden Rule covers it all. We are not asked to think accurately and reach correct conclusions in botany and theology. The approval is to be given to a certain kind of character, which is defined as having done something; and it appears to be assumed that all else is as it should be.

How does it happen that we have wandered so far from such standards of righteousness? Why is it that the standard for examination in this world is often so different in character from what is indicated in the final examination? The fact seems to be that instead of wandering from the teaching of the great Teacher, we are continually getting nearer to it. The Christian world has never stood closer to the Master than it does to-day. There never has been a time when any considerable portion of the business world believed that business could be carried on with success and financial profit by following the Golden Rule. It is probably true that many men who serve as managers in our shops and factories would be unable to succeed by such a policy. Many of them could not succeed with any policy. It is certainly true that many of our labor troubles might be averted if superintendents understood human nature better. It is perhaps too much to expect that they shall all be philosophers.

And it should be said also that the Golden Rule will work best in business when it works both ways. Still, I know of managers working hundreds of men, whose men never strike. They have told me the secret of it—that without making any formal announcement of such policy they run their shops on the Golden Rule. One of them gave me an illustration of how he prevented strikes. He had just spent perhaps $100 of the company's money in paying the wages and surgical attendance of a poor boy—the only support of a widowed mother—while he recovered from an injury. There was no obligation to do this; the injury was received in rough play during the noon hour. But he had found the boy making an heroic effort to work when he should have been in a surgeon's hands. He pleaded to be allowed to work, because of the necessities of his mother. But my friend sent him home, engaged a surgeon to care for him, told him his wages would continue, and the company paid the bills.

He said in explanation that he personally preferred to treat his men in this way because it gave him pleasure to do so, and he had convinced his board that he could make it pay. He made each man feel that he was a friend, and they gave him hearty and enthusiastic service. He said to me during a general strike in which his men did not join, "I don't want any soldiers; my men will defend our works. I would arm them if necessary."

To be capable of such things requires qualities that all men do not possess. I do not think this man was following this policy because he thought it his duty to do so, nor do I think he was seeking profits in this world or rewards in the future world. He was doing it in response to his own personal instincts. It was a kind of action which was characteristic of him as a man. He was no more entitled to credit for it than he deserved credit for having a white skin.

In estimating the value of such men to society it must be admitted that one who does right from instinct is capable of much greater things than one who is continually tempted to do wrong, and who succeeds in resisting the temptation.

A musician who for the first time plays a grand harmony must give continual attention to each succession of simultaneously sounded notes. But he very soon plays it without conscious effort, and then he begins to feel and can give musical expression to the tumults of passion, the bursts of divine exaltation, which swept the soul of the composer, and which his music can awaken in those who hear.

A person having no hands may learn to paint pictures by holding the brush between his toes. He may succeed in doing work which will excite the greatest interest, not because of any artistic value it has, but because it is wonderfully well done for one who is under such immense disadvantage. We should feel that one who had with patience succeeded in learning to do good work under such circumstances was deserving of great credit. We should feel that he deserved every recognition and reward which could be given to a worthy man. His life and example might be a rebuke to the indolent, and an inspiration to all. But we should never dream of comparing his work with that of a great artistic genius, who had been favored with every advantage, and who deserved little or no credit for the great things he had done.

What should we think of the moral value of a man who is continually tempted to murder every person whose back might be turned towards him? If he resists the temptation he may, perhaps, deserve great credit for keeping his moral machinery from going to pieces, but what is the value of such a life? To outward appearances his life may be blameless, but he is constantly exerting himself to avoid playing a discordant note.

What should we think of the industrial value of a steam engine which required all the energy of the steam to be expended upon itself in overcoming the friction of its own parts?

Certainly, the average man now never thinks of killing people. He would consider it a disgrace to be suspected of feeling any temptation to steal his neighbor's horses, or to steal store goods from the counter. We each have our individual tendencies to wrong-doing. Those things which tempt one do not tempt another. Here and there we find those who are tempted to indolence. Others who are energetic are untruthful, but they will not steal. As the outlying remnants of stratified rock, capping the hills here and there, tell us of former ages when such rock covered the earth as with a garment, so do these local centers of wickedness, survivals of a past age, carry us back to those times when violence and wrong are said to have been practically universal.

Those primeval times, when savage individual desires were limited only by ability or inability to satisfy them, gave way to an age when organized society gradually formulated a code of laws for laying hold of those who became public enemies. At first these laws largely aimed to rid society of offenders by terminating their lives. Gradually the laws became more reformatory in their character. The plan became then to create artificial incentives to correct living, in the form of various minor punishments inflicted upon offenders. Thou shalt not do thus, and so, and whosoever doeth it shall be in danger of the judgment.

But the Son of Man came and taught us that he who refrains from wrong-doing merely from fear of punishment is morally a wrong-doer. He is a standing threat against society. He is continually planning to do the wrong and elude the watchfulness of the police.

In the meantime, the good leaven had been working in society. Men began to do right in order to attain various promised rewards. And we hear of great tribulations that came upon them. Some of them struggled against external foes, and all of them struggled against internal foes—the evil imaginings of their own hearts. The man whose action is determined by the promise of a reward may sometimes be tempted to exchange, or perhaps to mortgage a greater pleasure or reward, to come to him only in the far distant future, for a lesser, perhaps for a trivial pleasure, which he can secure at once. It is a kind of discounting of his future hopes and possibilities, suggesting the transactions at a bank or pawnshop. At the same time he is hoping that by some plan, which he more or less definitely outlines to himself, he may again secure, unimpaired his mortgaged future. Such a plane of ethics is somewhat higher than that occupied by those who merely refrain from wrong-doing to avoid punishment, nevertheless it is not a high plane of ethics.

Certainly,good people do not now refrain from murder because murder is unlawful. They do not murder and they do not steal, because they are not murderers or thieves.

But all good people have reached a much more lofty plane of righteousness than this. They engage in good works; they lend the helping hand; they share the sorrows of the unfortunate and stricken ones of earth; they comfort and encourage the broken-hearted, not because they consider it a duty to do these things; not because they are bargaining under the divine law for heavenly favors. The idea of securing the favor of heaven by barter or as a sort of bounty money on the delivery of good deeds done here is repulsive to us all. That kind of inducement to righteousness may be suited to a certain grade of moral development. It may still appeal, in these days, to many who must be reached, who must raise themselves to this level, before they can reach a higher level.

But we are not under the law, but under grace. The great mass of good people in our day are doing these deeds of love and mercy by instinct. It has become a part of their natures. They do right because they are right-doing people. They are not tempted by those things which tempt depraved wretches. They cannot be. They have become like their divine Master. They have begun to develop the character to which he urged his disciples to aspire when he said to them: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

Men who are under the law, who must be repressed and controlled by mandatory influence from without, can not understand this injunction. Former ages have ignored it, because they did not understand it. But what a world of meaning it has in these days, when men have learned to be a law unto themselves! We may not be perfect in all things, but we may be perfect in those things covered in the final examination, and the man who shares the sorrows of the poor, who lightens the burdens of the weary and the heavy-laden, and who does such deeds because it is his nature to do them, that man has reached the divinest heights of glory.

And how do the frivolities of fashionable society, with its endless round of anxieties about nothing; how do the ambitions and the successes of the Mammon worshiper; how do the struggles for the supremacy of this church or that church, or this dogma or that dogma, shrivel into nothingness as we contemplate such a career—the career of him who goes about doing good!

The evolution of such a character among the busy masses of men, each struggling with the problems of his own life, each of necessity a minute part in a civilization constantly changing in character, and increasing in complexity, has been by slow degrees. If you pour dilute sulphuric acid upon zinc, the chemical action which follows requires time for its completion. Each particle of acid cannot at one time come into contact with some particle of zinc. So it is with the good leaven in society. These grand precepts of the greatest of teachers have been working in men's minds and hearts for near two thousand years; and still there is work for them to do. And men have learned that the blind following of his personal example is not in accord with his teaching. We do not wear his garb. We do not follow literally his instructions to his followers. Our whole civilization is so different from the civilization of that day and place. To take an extreme case, it might still perhaps still be an act of humility, but it certainly would not be welcomed as an act of hospitality, to wash the feet of a guest. We find, however, that the spirit which determined his action is still with us. We also give our personal attention to the comfort of our friends, and we also admire and appreciate humility of character. But we do decline to be again enslaved by the letter of the of the law, and are seeking so conform to the spirit of his teaching, because it commends itself to us. We find it to be in all things elevating and ennobling to human character.

DEGREES OF INSPIRATION.

JAMES H. BROOKS.

(a) No doubt there are portions of the Scriptures which contain more inspiration than others, because more was needed to produce them, but the Scriptures themselves will attend to this discrimination if we will simply allow them to have their normal effect on our minds and hearts.—Christian-Evangelist.

Another says: "It is usually divided into three kinds — revelation, suggestion and superintendency." If it be "a process, and not merely a fact; a mode of operation, and not a result simply," one can readily see the open door—"degrees in inspiration." If there be "portions of the Scriptures which contain more inspiration than others," there must needs be room for a theory or theories of inspiration. Here we note only three of several.

(1) All in the Bible that is of the character of revelation is inspired. This theory includes only that which could be known by direct revelation. (See "Revelation," treated further on.) It would exclude all that belongs to the realm of science and history.

(2) A second theory attributes the inspiration of Scripture only to its spirit, ideas, thoughts or doctrine, exempting the form or letter of Scripture.

Man is a sentient being. There is a spirit within him, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding (Job 32:8).

(3) Others go still further and comprise in the fallible form the mode of argument and expository details (Chandler's Essay, in loco).

(b) There are three degrees of inspiration. It is commonplace in religious science to speak of the inspiration of superintendence, as in Acts or Chronicles; the inspiration of revelation, as in the Psalms, and the inspiration of suggestion, as in the prophecies. The historical books of the Scriptures have been so superintended that they have been winnowed completely of error in moral inculcation. But the inspiration of superintendence is the lowest degree of inspiration.....The Psalms, we say, are examples of the inspiration of elevation. They have no equals in literature, and are palpably rained out of a higher sky than unassisted human genius. But we have a yet higher range of the action of inspiration in passages like the distinct predictions that the Jews should be scattered among all nations, and nevertheless be preserved as a separate people, as they have been; or that Jerusalem should be destroyed, as it was; or that there should come a supreme Teacher of the race, as he has come. We find in the biblical record unmistakably prophetic passages, and these are seals of the inspiration of suggestion, for they could have been written only by suggestion.....What God does he means to do. He has done this for the Bible; he has kept it free from moral and religious error in its inculcations. He has done that for no other book, and what he has done he intended from the first to do. Therefore, the very fact of the winnowedness of the Bible is proof of a divine superintendence over it.

Superintendence, elevation, suggestion, are different degrees of inspiration, which is of one kind. But inspiration and illumination, according to established definitions, differ in kind and not merely in degree; for inspiration, as a term in religious science—I am not talking of popular literature—always carries with it the idea of winnowedness as to moral and religious truth. There is nothing in the intuitive range of truth that comes into collusion with biblical inculcation.....Theodore Parker was not careful enough to distinguish between inspiration and revelation. By revelation I mean all self-manifestation of God, in his words and his works both. Inspiration is his self-manifestation in the Scriptures alone. Allow me to assert..... that Christianity would stand on the basis of revelation.....even if the doctrine of inspiration were all thrown to the winds. .....The nature and the degree of inspiration are questions between Chistians themselves.....Religion based on axiomatic moral truth would stand as revelation thus defined, even if inspiration were given up as a dream. Christianity as a redemptive system might stand on the great facts of the New Testament, if they were known as historic only and the New Testament literature were not inspired at all.—Transcendentalism, by Joseph Cook, pp. 93-99.

Mr. Campbell says: "There are a thousand historic facts narrated in the Bible which it would be absurd to regard as immediate and direct revelation from the Almighty.....Revelation, from the import of the term, must be supernatural. But the historic parts of both Testaments present a great variety of topographical and historic facts and incidents; colloquies between friends and enemies, of apostles, prophets and patriarchs, and of distinguished persons, good and evil; warsr intrigues, amours and crimes of every dye, Now it would be neither philosophical nor rational to dignify and designate these colloquies, narratives.....etc., by the term revelation. The term revelation in its strict acceptation amongst intelligent Christians, means nothing more nor less than a divine communication concerning spiritual and eternal things, a knowledge of which man could never have attained by the exercise of his reason upon material and sensible objects (cf. 1 Cor. 2:9, 10).—Campbell and Owen's Debate, page 141. (I refer the "more uneducated" to "The Christian System," chapter 2, by Mr. Campbell. Here is helpful reading on this topic.)

(c) Though one finds he cannot give a strict definition of inspiration, and still finds it easier, in his experience, "to tell what it does than what it is;" though no definition or theory of inspiration as yet given may be found entirely satisfactory, let us remember "the nature and the degree of inspiration are questions between Christians themselves;" and though good and wise critics will continue to advance different and may be conflicting theories thereof, shall we not be brethren and keep ourselves from heresy?

The sainted Errett says: "All who trust n the Son of God and obey him are our brethren, however wrong they may be about anything else.....In judgments merely inferential we reach conclusions as nearly unanimous as we can; and where we fail, exercise forbearance in the confidence that God will lead us into final agreement.....In matters of opinion, that is, matters touching which the Bible is either silent or so obscure in its revelation [the English reader will find in the A. V. the word inspiration one time—Job 32:8—and the word inspired once—2 Tim. 3:16!] as not to admit of definite conclusions, we allow the largest liberty, so long as none judge his brother, or insists on forcing his own opinion on others, or on making them an occasion of strife" ("Our Position," page 7).

(d) How we tell, or the reason we have for the belief, that the Bible is inspired of God:

(1) It must be conceded that not only the reality, but the measure and manner of the inspiration of the Scriptures must be learned from their own testimony. What do they teach on the subject?—J. B. Jeter.

(2) The fact of the winnowedness of the Bible is proof of the divine superintendence over it.—Joseph Cook. He italisizes their statement: "The astounding fact is that the Bible is the only book in the world that will bear full and permanent translation into life."

(3) After all, as has been often said, the best proof to us of the inspiration of the Bible is that it inspires us; it comes into our lives and inserts its authority over us as we read. If it fails in this, whatever theory of inspiration we may hold, it is not inspired for us. We demonstrate the power of the Bible by showing that its truths have produced in us a life devoted to God and right.—Prof. O. T. Morgan, quoted in the Christian Standard, June 15, 1899.

(4) The divine inspiration of the Holy Scriptures is, indeed, fully proved by the divine wisdom and knowledge contained in the record itself. The author is known in his works. God's book is full of divinity. It reveals what human wisdom cannot fathom, but what human wisdom must believe and approve.....God has stamped upon the treasures of wisdom and knowledge which it contains and incorporated with all its gracious and sublime developments its holy doctrine, its heavenly spirit and its divine precepts the indubitable indications of its superhuman supernatural and divine origin.—Campbell on Baptism, p. 31.

(5) The Scriptures of the Old and New Testament have been accepted by the consensus of Christian judgment through centuries of investigation, trial and criticism as inspired by the Holy Spirit. There is no need, therefore, for the common reader to seek to discriminate between what is inspired and what is not inspired.—J. H. Garrison.

(6) One who investigates the Scriptures may fully assure himself of Paul's statement. Every Scripture inspired of God is profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work.—2 Tim. 3:16, 17.

My own belief is that they are inspired. That belief receives fresh confirmation from examination of those books [the Gospels].—Charles F. Deems, in his Light of the Nations, p. 11. In this connection I would commend to the young reader the first sermon in the "Gospel Preacher."

In this splendid article among other things is shown that what Jesus "indorsed is of divine authority." He indorsed the Law, the Prophets and the Psalms. He indorsed the writings of the Old Testament 'by quoting them as divine authority." The student is referred to the New Testament Scriptures themselves, that is, the Gospels, to see how Christ indorsed all the apostles said and did as of divine authority.

"Standing between the Old and the New Testaments, extending one hand back over Moses and the prophets, fully indorsing the Old Testament as of divine authority, and then turning to the apostles and extending the other hand over them, and by indorsing them and accompanying them with the most grand and stupendous displays of supernatural power indorsing the New Testament given by them as of divine authority," how grand the spectacle! As for me this "settles the question of the divine authority of the Bible. It is all endorsed by him who is the Alpha and the Omega."

I may write an article on "Strange things about Inspiration."

Ft. Wayne Items.

After nearly six years of continuous service, with only brief interims each summer, the writer was granted by the West Jefferson Street Church a two months' leave of absence, beginning July 1st. The time was spent mostly in the stimulating atmosphere of the University of Chicago, and we gladly recommend the place as one of physical and spiritual as well as intellectual opportunities and uplift. One may not agree with all that he hears—he is not asked to do so—but he will find the teaching to be suggestive, and will be enabled to pursue lines of reading and individual study with much greater satisfaction and pleasure after having come in contact with leading biblical scholars and teachers, as he does at such centers of learning. We count the time very profitably spent and feel much more rested and refreshed than if we had lounged in idleness or engaged in unsystematic reading. We hope to repeat the experiment, and commend it to persons in like circumstances as worthy a trial.

The work in Ft. Wayne has many signs of promise, and the workers are greatly encouraged. The brethren are taking vigorous hold of the financial problem, which is not easy of solution under local conditions, but the church is united and determined, and we hope before the year closes to report decided gains.

C. C. Smith spent Lord's day, Sept. 18th, with us, speaking at the Jefferson Street Church in the morning and at the Creighton Avenue Church in the evening. He received worthy offerings at both places and left a fine impression. He has a way of doing the latter, as the churches all know who have been honored with his presence.

Arrangements have been made with the management of the G. R. & I. R. R. to provide special coaches for the trip to Cincinnati, Oct. 12th. The coaches will be attached to the train leaving Ft. Wayne at 12:35 P. M., and will arrive in Cincinnati in ample time for the reception on Thursday evening. The fare will be the rate established by the Central Passenger Association, and it is hoped that all delegates in Northeastern Indiana and Southern Michigan will join with us for the sake of the fellowship. We would be glad to answer any inquiries which may be made concerning the trip by this route.

The convention of the fifth district of the I. C. M. S will be held at the West Jefferson Street Church, Oct. 2, 3 and 4. We make this announcement because the plan of the convention has recently been changed from Decatur. We will gladly entertain all the delegates who may be permitted to attend.

Our Budget.

—"The melancholy days"—have not yet arrived.

—These are glorious autumnal days, which make one feel that life is worth living.

—The "melancholy days" will come just after the Jubilee Convention to those who have made no jubilee offering.

—Admiral Dewey is the hero of the hour, and the nation is laying its tribute of gratitude at his feet. It is pleasing to note how modestly he bears it all.

—But in time Admiral Dewey will be eclipsed by a later hero, even as Grant and Farragut are, for a time, eclipsed by him. So it has been, is now and ever will be, with human fame.

—There is only one Name that grows more resplendent with the passing centuries, and whose fame is destined to increase while sun and moon endure—the name of Jesus of Nazareth.

—And yet he was reared in poverty, was "despised and rejected of men," was condemned to crucifixion, died on the cross and was buried in a borrowed sepulcher! The explanation is, "He was bruised for our iniquities and the chastisement of our peace was laid upon him." There was in him a divinity which overcame death, and which has made his life the ideal for the race, and his teaching the standard of ethics for the world's highest civilization.

—Good news continues to come from the missionary societies. The foreign society was the first to reach and pass its goal, but the American Christian Missionary Society is a close second, with only $5,000 short of its jubilee goal, and a few back counties to hear from. Perhaps before we go to press we shall hear a shout across the wires from the home secretaries saying, "Victory! victory!" It's thrillingly interesting—next to Dewey's parade.

—And now comes the closing up of the books, the completion of the reports and the putting on of the finishing touches on the speeches. There yet remains a whole week in which to cut out superfluous phrases and rhetorical flourishes, and boil down the speech so that it will fit into its place with a margin for swelling—in harmony with the suggestion of President Richardson.

—The missionary year which closed on last Saturday in some respects at least is the best in the history of our work as a religious body. The offerings have been larger than ever before and the additions to the church during the year have been many. It is to be hoped that good progress has also been made along the spiritual lines of the church during the year. We can summarize additions and dollars, but not the influence of prayers, sermons, songs and good literature. These can only be seen in the future life of the church. But there is every reason to believe that new impulses have been imparted and that a life richer in conversions, in missionary offerings and in the fruits of the Spirit will result from the labors and sacrifices of the year just closed. And now that we see that we are capable of greater things for the Master the past year should but be the door of entrance into a wider field of usefulness and the foretaste of richer fruits for the coming year.

—The first religious body to dedicate a house of worship in Skagway, Alaska, is the Baptist Church. Through the help of the American Baptist Home Mission Society the Baptist Church in Skagway has been enabled to build a comfortable house, 30 x 52 feet, costing $3,000. The pastor of this church is the Rev. J. C. Jordan. When will it be said that the Christian Church, by the aid of the American Christian Missionary Society, has dedicated a house of worship in Alaska?

—Beware of friction in high places.

—Beware of men who have no use for the Golden Rule.

—Abhor the doctrine of the supremacy of money over the man.

—Not until Christianity is preferred before patriotism can the doctrine of the brotherhood of man hope to succeed.

—Not until a man's religious convictions take precedence over his political affiliations can the reform movements of the day hope to succeed.

—Business requirements and business acquirements as seen in the business world do not always coincide. Of the two systems the latter seems to be the more popular.

—Not until the righteousness of the professed Christian shall exceed the righteousness of the ordinary business man can this world be taken for Christ.

—The more of the Spirit of the Master a man has in his heart the better use will he make of money, power, possessions, souls, or anything else entrusted to his keeping or disposing.

—It is said that the Scotch Presbyterian Churches contribute $1,325,000 a year to the cause of missions.

—The picture on our first page this week is a familiar one to the Disciples of Christ in Indiana and adjoining states. Bro. N. A. Walker now resides in Ft. Wayne, Indiana, and still does good work as a general evangelist, preaching, counseling and distributing good literature, especially the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, wherever he goes. The letter from his pen in our edition of last week gives the reader an outline of his life.

—On the 7th day of the present month the admirers of Edgar Allen Poe will place a bust of this poet in the University of Virginia, of which he was a student, as a fitting tribute to his genius. But the bust, though made of bronze or of the best of marble, will hardly outlast his colloquy with the raven. As long as a spectre shall trouble the human heart will this poem endure. The 7th day of October will be the 50th anniversary of his death.

—If things had not been as they have, things would not now be as they are in any departments of life; if otherwise, no confidence could be placed in the law of cause and effect.

—If real progress is to be attained in any sphere of life, causes and not conditions must receive primary attention. Simply fighting conditions promises nothing for the future. The physician who simply doctors the symptoms can never cure the disease.

—So long as selfishness is dominant in the individual, the corporation or the nation, so long will assumed and delegated power be used for personal aggrandizement. If a religious body cannot be entrusted with national authority, how much less a corporation or company of mercenary men or capitalists.

—The Foreign Society has now passed the $150,000 mark in its receipts for Foreign Missions. On the 28th the Society received a check from Bro. Lathrop Cooley, of Clevland, Ohio, for $5,000, which sent the offerings up to $151,600. This makes $10,000 for Bro. Cooley this year to the cause of missions, he having recently given $5,000 to Home Missions as a memorial fund. This is setting a good example for those who are richly blessed with earthly possessions. All the friends of missions will rejoice in this gift and in the total gifts for all missions this year.

—Principal Fairbairn, in his wonderful sermon before the great International Congregational Council, recently held in Boston, uttered a great truth when he said that the church will not have the power to do its work until she is made freer from the bondage of men and brought more fully under the authority of Christ.

—Hon. Wm. Garrison, Pond Creek, Oklahoma, writes us that he had driven forty miles through the territory to secure a tent and an evangelist to hold a meeting in his town. Bro. Rehorn was expected to do the preaching. Oklahoma is a great field for evangelistic work.

—From recent statistics of the Congregational Churches in Connecticut, 325 in all, with a total membership of 63,268, it appears that there have been but 1,567 additions by confession to that body in that state for an entire year. In one-third of the churches there was not an addition during the year, and a total gain to all of the churches in the state, over losses, of only 11 members. There is food for reflection in these figures.

—We learn that a monument is to be erected on the campus of the Missouri State University at Columbia in honor of Eugene Field, the children's poet, who drank at the fountains of knowledge and inspiration in this institution. This will be a fitting tribute to a man who by poetical genius has not only endeared himself to children for generations to come, but who has also established for himself a monument more enduring than stone.

—Street fairs have become quite popular throughout the country this year, but if the unsavory morals reported as attending some of them are not eliminated, their popularity will be of short duration. In some instances the authorities have been called out to suppress some of the shows attending them. There is a suspicious relation between the carnal mind and the carnival season.

—Do not fail to read Mark Twain on Christian Science in the Cosmopolitan for October. The scientific nonentity called Christian Science is a peculiarly fitting theme for Mark's phenomenal mentality, and he has treated the subject in one of his happiest humorous and satirical veins.

—The total expenses of each person attending the Jubilee Convention, including entertainment and transportation, will doubtless be no small amount, and yet it will in all probability not equal by one-half that of an average Passover feast of the Jews under the law; and yet it is not recorded that complaint was ever made against the Passover assembly on that account. The public sentiment generated by such an assembly in the interest of their religion, their patriotism and their morals more than compensated them for the cost. But for great assemblies political parties to-day would be shorn of much of their power. They are run largely by the energy imparted to them by great political assemblies. Why not, then, utilize this great power in the furtherance of the greatest of all causes, religion, and the best of all pleas, the Christianity of Christ, for the world.

—In a sermon delivered by Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage in the Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church on last Sunday night Dowie, the founder of the so-called Catholic Christian Church, was denounced in the severest language that the speaker could command. In the sermon, as reported in the Chicago Record, Oct. 2, he said: "I brand John Alexander Dowie as a perjurer, a hypocrite and a user of dishonest methods." In the same discourse he criticised Rev. R. A. Torrey, the superintendent of the Moody Bible Institute, for his publicly expressed faith in Dowie and his methods. He does not attack the character of Rev. Torrey, but thinks it his duty to resign his place at the head of the Moody Bible Institute and take his place with Dowie in the Dowie Tabernacle. When Rev. Talmage said that Mayor Harrison ought to send a detachment of police and close the doors of Zion Tabernacle, he was enthusiastically cheered by an audience of two thousand people. Rev. Talmage is not alone in his public condemnation of Dowieism. Leading newspapers of Chicago, as well as leading pulpits, are denouncing him as a fraud and an impostor.

—The new Christian church building in Benton, City, Mo., will be dedicated next Sunday, October 8, and S. D. Dutcher, pastor of the church in Mexico, Mo., has been secured to preach the dedicatory sermon and otherwise assist the pastor, J. W. Coggins, in the services. The assistant editor of this paper will preach for the church in Mexico on Sunday morning, in the absence of the pastor, S. D. Dutcher.

—All delegates going to the Jubilee Convention by way of St. Louis and from St. Louis, will have the opportunity of special through cars over the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and of a special through train over the Big Four Railroad, as they may elect, and the indications now are that nobody will be lonesome on either route. Another advantage of these special trains will be the opportunity of companies that are acquainted, and that desire to travel together, of having their company together in a special car or train. It is expected that the delegates by either route will have a joyous, happy trip and enter the Jubilee City and convention full of enthusiasm and of the Holy Spirit.

—The Christian Woman's Board of Missions have passed the $90,000 mark. A recent gift of $5,000 from Mr. and Mrs. Lathrop Cooley, of Medina, Ohio, put them beyond the mark. This is glorious news and will cause rejoicing throughout the land. Great honor is due to Bro. Cooley for great liberality toward missions. And it is noteworthy that he makes no distinction between the various societies in his gifts. He treats them as all of the Lord, equal in importance, and one in work; as one society.

—An exchange speaks of a certain congregation with 540 communicants, whose annual expenses are $11,500 and whose contribution for the cause of Foreign Missions is only $400 per year. The pulpit of such a church is in poor shape to give advice to rich men on the proper use of money; or even on economy in business; or even on the beauty of sacrifice. Is it any wonder that churches are losing their influence over men of the world?

—Under the pretense of preserving and protecting sacred relics, for which purpose a monastery has recently been dedicated in Washington, D. C., by the Franciscan order, an effort is to be made to popularize religious pilgrimages which have proven so profitable to the coffers of the ecclesiastics of the Old World in the United States. In this monastery the stable at Bethlehem, the Savior's cradle and tomb and "other sacred relics" have been faithfully reproduced and pilgrimages to the Savior's cradle and tomb in Washington, D. C., United States, will soon be inaugurated. Where is our boasted enlightenment as a nation when such a source of revenue can be established in our capital for the exclusive benefit of a religious order? A few generations hence and our children will not know whether Christ was born in Judea or the United States, if this enterprise succeeds as its founders have hoped.

—The discourse by Professor Nipher on the "Evolution of the Divine Character in Man," beginning with this issue, was given at Iowa City, Ia., at a union service of all Protestant churches, at the request of Bro. T. J. Dow, whose place he filled. As a thoughtful discourse, by a thoughtful man, on a vastly important topic, we bespeak for it a careful reading. Whether you agree with all its conclusions or not, you can hardly fail to be benefited by its thoughtful perusal.

—In the funeral discourse of A. McLean on the death of W. K. Pendleton, printed in the Christian Standard of the 23rd ult.—a beautiful and worthy tribute to a great man—he gives the following sketch of his closing hours:

The last week of his life he was thinking much about the Scriptures and the attacks of the destructive critics. He asked Philip to read the last paragraph of the Epistle to the Romans. He explained that in this Epistle the apostle was contrasting the law and the gospel. The law was transitory, it was ephemeral. The gospel is as old as the love of God. He asked his son to note that what had been kept in silence through times eternal is now manifested, and by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the eternal God, is made known unto all nations unto obedience of faith. Paul found the gospel in the prophecies. He also asked him to read the account of the walk to Emmaus. He emphasized the sentence, "And beginning from Moses and from all the prophets, he interpreted to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." The dying man wanted his son to remember that whoever broke down the faith of the people in the Old Testament did so much to destroy their faith in the New. As he neared the bound of life where the splendors of eternity fell thick and fast upon him, he wanted his children to remember that the Old Testament is not a body of cunningly devised fables; its authors spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit.

—The following comment on the use of criticism, by the Sunday-school Times, Sept. 23rd, is worthy of careful consideration:

Power to perceive a defect is one of the lower measures of criticism. Power to perceive the truest merits is a higher measure of criticism. Both have their advantages, and it is well that both exist. But a man who can only point out defects, without the ability to show the remedy, is of little practical value in the world, although, indeed, others may be prompted to find a remedy where he merely sees a lack or a flaw. The truest mission of a helpful critic is, not only to see what should be done, but to be able to show it to others, and to arouse and lead them to its doing. Our duty in this world is to see what needs doing, and to lead others to its doing, realizing that it is our lack and our blame if we fail to so adapt ourselves to others that we shall remain near enough to them to be their present helper while also being their inspirer and their guide.

"One Year's Seeding, Nine Years' Weeding."

Neglected impurities in your blood will sow seeds of disease of which you may never get rid. If your blood is even the least bit impure, do not delay, but take Hood's Sarsaparilla at once. In this course there is safety; in delay there is danger.

—I desire to heartily endorse what you have said through the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on the unification of our missionary work. We have come to the time when we should make less noise, but get more money. I often hear amongst the members of our congregation no little complaint at the frequency of the whoop-'em-up editions of our religious papers. It is absolutely impossible for a pastor to make all the calls now asked for and not irritate the churches, because each call, if it succeeds, must be made a personal matter. I mean by this a personal canvass. I trust the coming convention will deem this matter of sufficient importance to appoint the committee you suggest. W. W. BURKS.

Our Work in England.

I hope all who are interested in our work in England will make it a point to meet our two representatives at the Jubilee Convention, W. Durban, pastor of Hornsey Tabernacle, London, and E. H. Spring, pastor at Gloucester. Two of our strongest and most devoted workers will be present. E. M. TODD, Cor. Sec. English Committee.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Frank Stinson has been retained at Bethany, Mo., another year by the church there.

M. Ingels has resigned at Coffeyville, Kan., to take effect Nov 1st. He began a meeting at Knobnester, Mo., Oct. 3rd.

G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec. of Church Extension, preached in Central Church, this city, last Sunday.

M. L. Anthony, of Elkhart, Ill., and J. T. Dillard, of Fredrickstown, Mo., called at this office on Monday last.

C. L. Pickett, of Woodbine, Ia., has removed to Omaha, Neb., that he may attend medical college again.

F. O. Fannon is at his post in this city again and strengthened by the presence of an assistant pastor in the person of G. L. Cook.

Coombs and Hunsaker are spending a few days on Lake Maxinkuckee, and while there they are assisting J. E. Davis in a meeting.

J. V. Coombs will assist E. W. Thornton, of the South Prospect Church, of Kansas City, Mo., in a meeting beginning Nov. 1st.

The many friends of the beloved Bre. Procter, of Independence, Mo., will be rejoiced to know of his recovery after a serious illness.

C. M. McCurdy will supply the pulpit of the church in Eden Valley, Minn., for a season. He was formerly located in St. Paul.

J. W. Lowber is delivering his fifth course of lectures in the interest of the students of the University of Texas.

Clark Bateman, of Storm Lake, Ia., would be glad to respond to any call for protracted meetings or for regular church work.

H. R. Walling writes that the church at Arrowrock, Mo., has been reorganized and put in good working order. He is now at Sheldon, Mo.

T. P. Haley and wife have returned to their home in Kansas City, Mo., from Excelsior, Minn., where they have been spending the summer.

George H. Combs, of Kansas City, Mo., is delivering, this week, a course of lectures on literary subjects before the Wesleyan University of Delevan, O.

Bruce Brown, pastor of the West Side Christian Church, Chicago, announces the themes of his Sunday discourses for several weeks in advance at a time on a large colored card.

J. V. Coombs will dedicate the new church building in Battle Ground, Ind., October 8th. All brethren within reach are invited. A good program of services prepared.

Walter S. Goode, of the University of Chicago, was ordained to the ministry of the gospel September 17th, by his father, G. M. Goode, and E. B. Barnes, pastor of the church at Normal, Ill.

W. H. Sheffer, formerly of Union City, Tenn., has accepted a call to the Woodland St. Christian Church in Nashville, and is now in the latter named field.

A. J. Frank has resigned the pastorate at Lebanon, Ind., and goes to the Tabernacle Church at Columbus, Ind. Arrangements have been made to fill the pulpit at Lebanon November 1st.

Alexander Procter, of Independence, Mo., we learn, has been very low, but at last account was improving slowly. Let us pray that his health be restored and that he may have the privilege of sharing in our Jubilee Convention.

J. E. Lynn, pastor of the church in Springfield, Ill., reports success in the effort of the church there to raise $800 for missions this year. The final round up was completed on last Sunday.

E. M. Smith has been called to succeed Bro. Denton in the church in Centralia, Mo. Bro. Denton has gone to Warrensburg, Mo. Bro. Smith was the pastor of the Beulah Church of this city.

Fred F. Grim will close his work in the West next Lord's day and will start the following day for the "Jubilee." He will preach the following Sunday at his former pastorate, Glenwood, Ia. He is now at Hamilton, Mont.

Homer T. Wilson is announced to lecture at the Second Christian Church in this city on Wednesday evening, Oct. 11th, on the subject, "America's Uncrowned Queen." We are sure thet Bro. Wilson will have a hearty welcome at this his first lecture in St. Louis.

R. E. L. Purnty, pastor of the church in Unionville, Mo., is editing a daily paper in the interest of the protracted meeting now in progress there by Morgan Morgans and daughter. The paper not only advertises the meeting, but itself preaches to the people.

J. L. Parsons has a suggestive and helpful article on "Prayer meetings" in the Preacher's Helper for August. The distinction between a helpful, live, enthusiastic prayermee ing and a dead one is tersely told, and therein the causes, pro and con., clearly revealed. It is a good article.

Morgan Morgans and daughter, now in a meeting in Unionville, Mo., write that they will move to Texas soon. Churches in Texas that desire their services in evangelistic work are requested to address them at Marionville, Mo , up to November 1st, and thereafter at Brownwood, Texas.

W. Durban, our English correspondent, has arrived in New York, and is stopping for the present at Brooklyn with his married daughter. His many readers in this country will be glad to greet him at the Jubilee Convention. Many churches, we hope, will arrange to secure a few lectures from him while he is in this country. See his letter elsewhere.

Through S. W. Crutcher, of Pine Bluff, Ark., we are informed of the death of J. C. Bunger, of that place. Bro. Bunger died in his 68th year, was the oldest male member of that congregation, having been a Disciple of Christ for more than fifty years. The funeral services were the first held in the new house of worship of the Pine Bluff church.

Baxter Waters, the supply pastor of the Central Christian Church, this city, since the departure of F. G. Tyrrell for Chicago, has been made the permanent pastor of that church. Bro. Waters is a native Missourian, a graduate of Christian University and also of a divinity course in Yale College. He has grown in favor with the church from the first and will begin his regular work without the embarrassments of a stranger or new man.

The Pacific Commercial Advertiser, published in Honolulu, H. I., contains the report of a vigorous address delivered at a union temperance meeting in Honolulu, September the 10th, by Wm. Gardner, pastor of the Christian Church, on the need of temperance agitation in that city. It is said that "from 1870 to 1895, $19,000 000 was expended in Honolulu for liquor, enough to buy a lot and build a comfortable house for every native man, woman and child in all the islands."

Bro. Jas. O. Carson, of this city, has just returned from a fishing tour on the Nipigon River, Ontario, Canada. He was as far north as Lake Nipigon, seventy miles north of Lake Superior. The scenery about Lake Nipigon he thinks equal to that of the famous lakes of Europe. They, with their camping outfit, were carried up the Nipigon River in birchbark canoes, rowed by Indians, the only inhabitants of that country. The fishing was excellent and of gamest and finest quality. Bro. Carson is one of the few men yet living who has personal knowledge of the Reformation almost from the first of the movement. He has not only seen and heard the fathers of the movement, but has in his keeping personal letters from Alexander Campbell, Walter Scott and others, which may one day become interesting if not valuable documents for the public.

IOWA PERSONALS.

Lawrence Wright is now in a tabernacle meeting at Greenfield.

E. A. Majors has accepted a call from the church in Laurens.

C. F. Sanderson is the pastor-elect at Chariton.

Gilbert J. Ellis, of Montezuma, has accepted a call from the church at Adel.

J. M. Hoffmann, of Boone, is one week out in a meeting at Jefferson.

A. C. Smither, of California, spent Sunday, Sept. 24th, in Des Moines. He and his good wife are enroute for the national convention.

J. W. Paine passed through the city of Des Moines this week on his way to the Kansas state convention in Topeka.

Evangelist Boyle is in a meeting at Melbourne, assisting Pastor Handsaker. The meeting began one week ago.

E A. Hastings, of Brandon, has been elected district evangelist by the southeast district of Iowa.

William Garrett, of Kansas City, a former Iowa boy, now a prosperous business man in our sister state, is spending a few days with his father in De Soto.

The Iowa state Endeavor convention is in session this week in Creston. Several of our workers are there. Among the number are Pastor H. O. Breeden, Pastor McCash and Miss Jessie Williams.

Evangelist Rowlison, of the central district, reports that the Panora church has voted to donate their old house of worship to Guthrie Center. A meeting begins at once and the house will be moved soon.

F. A. Parrish, of Montana, entered Drake University this week. He and Bro. Henry Ford are ready to supply churches in need of preaching. Both are highly recommended, as are also others in the Bible department.

C. D. Meigs, the famous Indiana Sunday-school worker, was in Des Moines Sept. 24th. The schools of the city all rallied. Mr Meigs visited most if not all of them. The University Church had present 958. Mr. Meigs declared that it was the finest showing he ever saw.
